BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN

Vol XIV. No 1.
No. 313 BUSH STREET.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, JANUARY 5, 1889.

SUBSCRIPTION
FIVE DOLLARS A YEAR.

Grim's Gossip.

D. McCarty has received from the Valensin stock farm two valuable brood mares.

The Dwyer Bros have secured from R. Tucker second call on the services of that fine, light weight jockey Shelby Barnes.

C. D. Ely has changed the name of his Electioneer colt from C. D. E. to Sunolo. This is an honor to the horse's sister, Sunol.

Captain Sam Brown of Pittsburg has as is well-known, a good many first class two-year-olds, the pick of the lot being a colt by Lisbon-Bonnie Meade.

The Willows Journal says that if B. C. Holly desires to make a race with his mule colt that Colusa County can accommodate him.

All the recognized horse sharps were taken in and done for last Friday night. The sure thing did not come off, and consequently the boys are "cussing" McAuliff.

A valuable mare, belonging to Martin Nevin of Livermore last week ran a nail into her hoof, from which death resulted.

Mr. C. V. Tupper was kicked in the face by a Broncho, at the track on Wednesday afternoon. The injury is not supposed to be serious.

Billy Appleby was resplendent on New Year's day at the track, sporting a glossy silk hat of the latest style. Boots, Stover and Haslitt will follow suit next race day.

I am under many obligations to Mr. Chas. T. Boots for time and trouble taken in procuring me information this week relative to Eastern meetings.

Mr. C. V. Tupper has adopted royal purple as his colors and only needs the gold stripes to have the silk sported by the Prince of Wales stable.

I wish that readers of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN would take note that everything of interest respecting horse matters is sent to this office as soon as possible after its occurrence. Items are always serviceable and appreciated.

W. H. Wilson, of Cynthiana, Ky., sends word that he has matched his yearling colt Ottoman by Sultan, against San Jose by Grand Sentinel. San Jose is the property of A. S. Browne of Kalamazoo, Mich. The match is for $250 a side, and will be trotted in 1889.

Dan McCarty will take three car-loads of trotting horses East some time this month. They will be disposed of at auction. He will return as soon as possible to prepare his stable of thoroughbreds for the 1889 campaign.

Joe Courtney, late of Theodore Winter's stable, has been engaged by Mr. Newton to train the Australian colts, which have been at the Bay District track for some time. The horses have been taken to Sacramento, where Joe will prepare them for work on the track. Look out for them at the Blood Horse Meeting.

Noah Armstrong, Esq., of Memphis, Tenn., has been in town this week. Californian horsemen have not forgotten how the representatives of the Memphis Jockey Club always treat the Pacific Coast delegation, consequently he has been entertained right royally. Mr. Armstrong, in addition to owning a stable of runners, also owns a large breeding farm in Montana.

Recently a four-year old Brigadier colt, valued at $300, was found dead on Mayor Slattery's ranch, east of Marysville. There was nothing but a bullet wound to tell the tale but the shooting is supposed to have been accidental. Mr. Slattery is very naturally indignant. There is a limit to even his good nature, and he has prohibited shooting on his ranch for the future.

There is a rumor current that J. B. Haggin Esq. has made an exceeding good offer to Billy Lakeland for the well-known horse Exile. Even if the story be true, the Rancho del Paso will not see him before the fall as Mr. Lakeland has him entered in many of the Eastern stakes for 1889. Exile would make a good addition to the thoroughbred stallions already in California. It was this horse which caused Mr. Haggin to make a rule that his jockeys could ride no outside horses when one of his own was in a race. He came as near beating Firenzi at Monmouth as could be, Hamilton being loaned to Mr. Lakeland for the occasion.

Johnny Goldsmith is elated over the speed shown by Orphan Wilkes, a two-year-old, dam Flora Langford, who went a mile one day last week in 2:30, and this with only three weeks handling.

If Ossory should be entered in the Suburban by Mr. Milton Young, and True Briton by Senator Hearst, we shall have a contest of speed between the horses of England, Australia, ann the United States.

I wonder if our readers have ever thought of the salary to be paid the jockey Hamilton by Senator Hearst. The colored lad will receive for the season's work almost doublewhat his employer receives as United States Senator.

P. J. Donahoe Esq. formerly a prominent member of the Blood Horse Association, is now on his way to the Pacific Coast. For the past fourteen months Mr. Donahoe has been in Europe.

Anteeo, 2:16¼, and which, by the by, all the Eastern papers in speaking of this noted Electioneer stallion, make 2:16½, is going out of the State for the season of 1889. He will start for Kentucky shortly in charge of J. W. Knox, and will stand in all probability at or near Lexington.

Mr. W. T. Withers of Fairlawn stock farm, Lexington Ky., is at present in Florida, the severe winters making it necessary that he should pass the colder months in a less severe climate. Mr. Withers should pay California a visit, and thenceforward he would winter here.

Mr. David Winders of Stockton has purchased from Smith and Howard the well-known racing mare Lida Ferguson the price paid being $2,000. Mr. Winders came down from San Joaquin and saw the mare run on Tuesday last at the Bay District. He was so pleased with her looks that before many hours he had a bill of sale for her in his pocket. Mr. Winders will have a stable of horses ready for the Spring meetings, he having already bought several and proposes to purchase others.

A correspondent of the Spirit of the Times writing from San Diego says, I cannot conceive of a more perfect place for the development of all the powers of a horse than the warm valleys of this region. All the year round they run, supplied by the best of feed and water, and every muscle fills and rounds and makes a perfect horse. That is why California yearlings, and two-year-olds, and three-year-olds, and four-year-olds are record breakers.

W. M. Murray will train the Western division of the Hearst stable this year, and will take all his own string in conjunction with the Hearst lot. M. F. Tarpey has also added the mare Notidle to the joint stable, and she will go East with the balance. Louisville will be the first place where the green and yellow colors will be seen.

Can any reader of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN inform us anything about the breeding of a thoroughbred stallion named Oliver Cromwell, and if he has a record? The horse died at the farm of L. M. L. Landrum, Peach Tree, Monterey County, this State, in 1886.

There is at present in this city a horse of the Clydesdale breed, named The Equine Jumbo. In size he is a perfect wonder, being 20½ hands in height, and weighs, so it is said, 2,760 pounds. He measures around the arm 32½ inches, stifle 44½ the length of the face is 36⅛ inches. The horse is owned by W. T. Lundy, was foaled at Brampton, Canada, five years ago, and is a gelding.

Mr. Chas. Kerr, of Bakersfield, after carefully inspecting all the desirable thoroughbred stallions for sale throughout the State, has at last selected the four-year-old Apache, by Mortimer, dam The Banshee. As far as blood goes Mr. Kerr could hardly have made a better choice for his stud, and with his very excellent brood mares should show fine stock as the result of the judicious selections.

Judge C. N. Post of Sacramento has selected, in his own mind, the best two-year-old at the Sacramento track. It is a King Ban filly owned by the Hon. L. U. Shippee of Stockton. I have heard from others that this daughter of King Ban is a very promising youngster, and shall not be surprised if she turnes out first rate.

Funny remarks can be heard at a race meeting by anyone who listens attentively. I overheard two men talking about trotting horses at the Bay District a few days ago, and one said to the other, "Wonder why Mr. Ayres named his horse Balkan." "Oh," said the other, "he called him after a range of mountains in Spain!"

The horse Al Farrow passed into the charge of Davis and Hazlitt, who will train him in future for Mr. Tupper, one day last week. In the same stable there are also Laura Gardner, Black Pilot, Jack Brady, and a three-year-old filly by Longfield, dam by Bazar, second dam Avail. Al Farrow and Laura Gardner will both be taken East next spring. The mare will be entered in several of the long distance races, as her owners consider her able to cope with any of the cracks.

Some time ago J. Linscott challenged the Gonzales Bros. to trot their horse Junio against Jim L. on the Salinas track for the gate receipts. To this challenge thay replied with one to trot for $2,500 a side, on a fair day, as soon as possible, on the Bay District Track, San Francisco, the race to be mile heats, best three in five, National trotting rules to govern. Mr. Linscott has replied accepting this challenge, conditioned upon the race being upon the Salinas track. It is to be hoped that the race will take place. It would prove an exciting contest between two fast and almost equally matched horses. Watsonville horsemen will be there in force if the race takes place.

Beside bringing to California the handsome stallion Monday, Mr. Sam Gamble also brought Ida Wood (Simmons 2:28—Ida W. by Mambrino Patchen), Cynthiana (Lord Russell—dam by Dictator), Julia Clay (by Harry Clay 2:29), Roman Princess (by Ethan Wilkes—dam by Ky. Prince), Alma (by Almont—dam by Snowstorm), Tone (by Ferguson—Neroli by Volunteer) a mare by Dillard Dudley and another by Idol Wilkes. The mares were in foal to Noonday, Wilton, Roderick and Bourbon Russell. The colt Prince Red, by Red Wilkes, dam Molly Stout by Mambrino Time completes a list that is only another proof of Mr. Gamble's good judgement as to what blood is of itself especially good, and is needed on this coast.

A novel match was recently witnessed on the stage of the Adelphi Theatre Buffalo, N. Y. A. J. Berry had bet Hall Stoddard $250 that he would clip his bay horse Edward J quicker than Stoddard would his roan mare May S. Both horses were got upon the stage after a great deal of trouble. A rotary clipper was used, and Stoddard clipped his mare in twenty-six minutes. Edwin J was unused to the footlights and balked, so that his clipping occupied several minutes more. No official time was taken. During the match both horses pranced about the stage in a lively fashion, and one young man's foot was injured by being stepped upon. Edwin F. Roche afterward challenged anybody in New York State to a similar match for the same amount.

The Oakland Track.

A look at the Oakland track is not very inviting unless you send word to the different owners before hand that you desire to inspect their stock. Not having taken this necessary precaution, the information obtained there on Monday last was not as full as it will be on the next visit. Thanks to the kind offices of Sam Gamble, a reporter of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN was enabled to have a look at a few of the horses now there; the first seen being the splendid trotter Balkan, 2.29¾, by Mambrino Wilkes, dam Fannie Fern. This splendid member of the Wilkes family would undoubtedly have a much better record than he now has, but owing to sickness he was not seen at his best on the circuit. From present appearances, the end of '89 will see Balkan with a much lower record than he has at present. In addition to Balkan, Mr. Irvin Ayer has some seven or eight other colts and fillies, all of whom look very well. Mr. C. O. Thornquest showed a full brother to Adonis, who has been named Cupid. He is a two-year-old, bay in color, and gives promise of being fully as fleet of foot as his celebrated brother. A bay colt, St. Nicholas, four years old, by Sidney, was much admired, as he has the appearance of being a first-class horse. St. Nicholas is the sire of many sons and daughters, one of the latter showing such fine form that she will be taken back East for the Combination Sale, which will take place in the spring. Another Sidney colt, Memo, was paraded for the reporter's benefit, and he has no hesitation in saying that there is no horse of his age on the track that can equal the beautiful black. He has already shown a private trial of 2:20½, which is no limit to his speed, and we promise that, bar accident, he will make a name for himself this season that will add another leaf to the laurel wreath which now adorns California in the eyes of all horsemen. A very beautiful son of Dexter Prince was next seen. He is three years old, a magnificent bay, has very fine action and seems perfect in every particular. He is owned by Mr. J. A. Dustin, which is a guarantee that unless he was better than the average trotter that gentleman would not have him in his string.

Trotters in Other Lands.

Much has been said and printed of late of the decadence of the trotting interest in America, and all sorts of unfavorable comparisons have been drawn between the manner in which it is regarded in its natural home and in England, France, Germany, Italy and Australia. Of course it is one of the great business interests of this continent, so great that in the amount of capital invested there is nothing outside of the railroads and the insurance companies that surpass it. But it has generally been spoken of as something peculiarly American. England, the continent of Europe, and, in fact, all Europe except Russia, have been accepted as purely and entirely devoted to the runner or the jumper, and the trotter has been altogether held as an animal despised.

Yet, while the sports of the trotting turf have been thus regulated to the background, except on this continent, the rest of the world has been looking for a new amusement, and seems to have found it in the contests of the trotters. Just at the time when the people of America seemed to weary of purely trotting races on the old three heats in five plan, and to have been looking for new phases of sport, there has occurred a renaissance of the trotting interest everywhere but in the United States. The effect of this has been felt in the tracks is Germany, especially where, at an extraordinary race in the suburbs of Berlin, from 12,000 to 15,000 people were present. To get into the betting ring $2.50 has been required, yet the applicants for tickets have transcended all calculations in number. The prices for privileges have been very high, and on the pools, 8 per cent. have been paid by the operators to the club. Of course, this has raised prices in every way, yet the German Trotting Clubs are in a condition of over prosperity. The betting is described as enormous, often amounting to $10,000 on a single heat. Purses, too, are of a character so liberal as to make our American horsemen, whose eyes have been fixed on Pumpkin Fair Purses, mourn ignorance of the German language.

France and England also afford grand fields for the owners of trotters equal to long distances, but outclassed for the mile heat, or the three in five affairs. The European woods are full of horses that can show great bursts of trotting speed, but very few American trotters that are good for two miles have crossed the Atlantic. Probably the best of these are Amber by Clear Grit, and the famous mare Misty Morning. This last has been a disappointment, by the way. She had great speed before she left this country, and was expected to beat all European records for a mile. She reached Europe in fine shape, and she trotted every race resolutely and well, but she could not go fast and could only win at long distances. She will undoubtedly, after acclimation, regain her old time speed, but it is dollars to cents that she misses the guiding hand of Jimmy Goldsmith. Mollie Wilkes is credited with the best European record, a mile in 2:20½, but it is said that the track was short. She had a great deal of speed before she was exported, and on a good American track ought to have beaten 2:20, but when the European records of other good ones are considered, 2:29½ is a very great performance. Phyllis, who was good for 2:15 on this side of the Atlantic, never approached that time in Europe.

Colonel Wood is now in Germany, and owned by James McFee. He was bought last season by Prince Smith, a well known German horse fancier, and the knowledge of his purchase caused a general sensation in horse circles on the continent, for he was considered the superior to anything in the European trotting stables. Berlin, Frankfort and Vienna were all in a flutter over his arrival, but at the last moment came the news of his death on shipboard. It was credited generally abroad though American horsemen, who had heard many similar and baseless rumors about other trotters, accepted the statement with a large grain of salt. Still, there was enough probability to it to occasion some uneasiness among those that had horses liable to meet the redoubtable Colonel. But Colonel Wood did not appear in Germany for a long while, and after a time the trotting men of Berlin accepted his death as a fact. It appears that a big bay gelding known as Big Soap, and probably the well known campaigner, by Honesty, dam by Uncas, record 2:23, had been entered in an important stake race in England, and had actually died. Big Soap was like Colonel Wood in color and size, and had, like him, a doubtful gait behind, that was a cross between a trot and a run. There was enough resemblance between him and Colonel Wood to make a substitution possible, and the relations between Germany and England being somewhat strained, it seemed the proper thing to substitute the live horse for the dead one. Colonel Wood landed quietly on British soil. He was kept under cover, but had quiet work enough to get him into condition. Due arrangements were made with the driver of Big Soap, and when the day of the race arrived everything seemed all right.

Mr. ——'s Big Soap appeared on the track, but at the last moment the driver refused to get up behind him. Prince Smith rushed to the recalcitrant drixer at once to know what was the matter. "Matter," said he, "I wouldn't drive that man's horse for a thousand pounds." "That's all right," replied Mr. Smith, "Mr.——don't own a hair in him, he is my horse, and I want you to drive for me. I have bought his entry." Reassured, the driver got up behind Colonel Wood and drove him to win. At the start the big scion of the champions was not mentioned in the betting and very long odds were obtained against him. He won the race, however, in straight heats, and his backers took away, it is said, $100,000. A prompt removal to the continent was necessary, of course, for English penal laws reach such cases, but the winnings remains with the winners.

Experienced American horsemen that have tested them say that the Russian trotters, taken on their own track or at Berlin or Vienna, cannot at all brush with the American horses, but they credit the Orloffs with wonderful endurance and say they are always dangerous in any race over two miles.

The European tracks are described as very unequal in quality. That at Berlin is called the best. It is very smooth and of excellent quality, but too narrow for a good trotting field. It is in shape quite like the Island Park track at Albany—an extremely flattened elipse. The buildings, stands and stable are very elegant, and the accommodations, in general, are thoroughly up to the best in America.

In France every convenience and comfort is afforded to the visitor to the track, but the tracks themselves are wretched. There has been no attempt to give them the proper shape or surface, and they are no better than sections of a rough, up and down hill road, with grand stands adjacent. Really fast time is impossible, and no driver of any experience would venture over them at high speed.

The Vienna track is smooth, level and well shaped, and would be thoroughly first class, except for its extreme hardness, which makes it very severe on the horses. Properly covered with loam, watered and rolled, very fast time could be made over it.

In Australia, the two great racing points are Sidney and Melbourne. The tracks are admirable and the interest in all branches of turf sport is such as to bring out large crowds, and induce the liveliest betting on every trotting race. It is doubtful if there is any place on the globe where an American horseman, with a few good trotters, can find a better field for money making than Australia. But he must take thoroughly good animals, and must understand that American records are considered there, and that classes are arranged as they would be at home. Scant mercy is shown to "ringers," and he who wishes to win in Australia should be sure that he that he will meet shrewd and well posted horsemen and good horses. If he has proper tools he can win to his heart's desire, for the sportsmen of the antipodes will back their horses to the bitter end, and a fast American trotter can generally win, in his class, in Australia.

Another point to which trotting men may wisely turn their eyes is the South American Continent. The trotter is the favorite there by all odds. He will be bought more promptly and at higher prices there than in any other quarter of the globe, and when he goes into a race he will be backed with a fervor unknown elsewhere, and that would make a North American pool-seller wild with joy.

In the past century the Russian trotters have developed no speed of the highest, though they have produced form, style, beauty and staying quality, with good speed for long distances. Aside from the Orloffs the Americans are the only trotters of merit in the world, and to them all the great records belong. It is natural for the American farmer to breed a trotter or two, and the overplus of such stock must supply the great and growing demand for the countries that do not produce, Australia will undoubtedly in time become a great nursery for this class of animals. South America appreciates them and will buy them, but will hardly breed them successfully, owing to the characteristics of the people. England, like Australia, will breed its own trotters if the market becomes a good one. Germany, France and Italy are the fields for American enterprise in this direction, for in those countries the issue as to relative merit with other producing countries, can be fairly made and fairly tried.—Sporting World.

Don't.

The following first-class advice is taken from Dunton's Spirit, and should be read by every person interested in horses:

Don't commence your breeding upon the theory that you know all about it. If you do you will end by believing that you could not have known anything, or you would not have commenced.

Don t imagine that you are going to revolutionize the world. After you have ended you will show the effect of revolutionizing more than the world.

Don't think that you cannot learn from the mistakes of others. The horse has been bred for thousands of years. Many mistakes have been made in that time. It will cost you time and money to learn them all by experience.

Don't imagine that you will show the world how to reap figs from thistles, or racers from dunghill blood. You will take out just what you put in. The poorer you put in the poorer you will take out.

Don't forget that the universe moves according to laws. If you don't know something of these laws as applied to breeding, don't commence to breed.

Don't imagine that every horse that has a good pedigree is a good horse to use. Insist on having a good individual first and a good pedigree afterward.

Don't start out on the theory of getting trotters and deriving your profits from them. There are many failures to one trotter, and the failures more than counterbalance the profit on the trotters. So try to breed good horses of fine action, shape, size and pedigree, and if they prove to be trotters so much the better.

Don't imagine that you have the only trotting stock in the world. If a man offers you a good living profit, be prepared to sell. Don't marry yourself to any animal or number of them. It is better to sell and regret than to keep and regret. Maud S. was sold for less than $300, and her sale undoubtedly was the means of enhancing the value of her brothers and sisters.

Don't imagine that all men are rogues and you alone are honest. If this is your idea, it is more than probable that you are the rogue, and that you are measuring other people by your own measure.

Don't try to get a reputation for sharpness. Few men are able to distinguish between sharpness and roguery. The sharp horseman is generally the one without money and reputation. Don't fear that you will have too much competition in honesty, whilst you may make up your mind that smarter men than you have failed to live by their wits.

Don't wait until you are hard up for money before you sell your stock. Set a limit to your operations, and remorselessly cut the number down to that limit every year. Every hour that you keep an animal beyond the time that he can be sold for a good profit, is an hour of loss, not only in the expense of keep, but in the absence of money and the peril of loss or damage.

Don't sell your stock without having them in good condition, unless you have a certain customer. Many a poor animal has sold well on account of his condition, and many a noble animal has been given away for lack of the same.

Don't tnink there is any money in keeping your brood mares in poor condition. A brood mare needs far more vitality than a mare in training, and she will not breed after foaling if her vitality is not being kept up until she has had time to recuperate.

Don't forget that every year that your mare fails to breed, the cost of the next must be doubled. Keep up the strength, not necessarily to fatness, but by plenty of strengthening food.

Don't expect that buyers will know by inspiration that you have stock for sale. Advertising is the first condition of selling; the second is that you have the goods worth the money.

Don't put all your eggs in one basket. Don't tie your enterprise to one strain of trotters or thoroughbreds. The fashion in horses is constantly changing. To-day it is the Wilkes strain that prevails; next year it may be the Electioneer, and after that some other. Better, like a country storekeeper, try to have something to suit every reasonable demand.

Don't be a "stud hoss" man, and say that your animals are the only good ones, and everyone else's are bad. Such a course marks yours a "plug" and not a thoroughbred, and injures you more than the other fellow.

Don't cease to study your business. Take such papers as are not mere advertising sheets, but discuss the science of breeding. Don't be afraid to contribute your share. Almost everyone has something to contribute to the sum total of human knowledge. In the science of breeding it may be an obscure pedigree, an owner, or some other desired information.

The Westchester Course.

The new Westchester racecourse of the New York Jockey Club is well described in the Spirit of this week. The track is located on the line of the New Rochelle Branch of the New York and New Haven Railroad, and is situated between the Van Nest and West Chester Stations. It comprises 350 acres of land, one portion of which, formerly the Bradford Farm, comprised 102 acres, and was purchased in November, 1887; the second part, known as the Hatfield Farm, of 125 acres, and the third, a piece of property known in the neighbourhood as the "Dennerlein." The property is bounded on the north by the Pelham Avenue road, on the west by the Bear Swamp road, on the south by the railroad, and on the east by the William's Bridge road to Westchester. The course is an oval in shape of nearly a mile and a half, but all races up to a mile and a quarter and over will be run with start on the back stretch, thus making only one turn. It is 150 feet wide on the back stretch and at the finish, and 100 feet in width at the point. A straightaway "shute," or T. Y. C., runs diagonally through the track, starting away to the north near the Williams's Bridge Road, finishing in front of the stand. This shute is six furlongs in length and 100 feet in width.

In describing the new course Mr. Haswell, the eminent engineer, who has made race tracks a special study, estimates that a horse running outside of one which has the rail runs some ninety feet more than the one on the inside in a race of a mile. This is as strong an argument for straightaway tracks as to put the question beyond the domain of cavil. It means that on our circular tracks the inside horse has a great advantage. This causes an unseemly scramble to possess it, and the result is horses of great value are often cut down or shut out, pocketed, and never have a chance. Besides, there is a great deal of what is called running a horse out on the turns, carrying him wide so as to lose ground. On a straight this cannot occur. One portion of the track is as good as any other, and the race is a straight drive for home from the start. The long homestretch of nearly a half mile is a new and most important feature. In our judgment it is the most important ever introduced. Many a race is lost nowadays by horses getting "pocketed" in the turns, and upon straightening the homestretch is so short they never get a chance to make up their lost ground. Another thing, racing will be more true —the best horse will win. The fact is, the longer the stretches the more hard racing there will be. Horses run faster aronnd courses than on those where the stretches are long, simply begin they do not begin racing so soon. With our short stretches it is difficult for a long-striding horse to have fair play.

The grand stand, a splendid structure, is on a natural elevation, a hill nearly one hundred feet above the level of the track, and from which every movement of the horses can be plainly seen, both on the oval or the straightaway. This hill was originally a superb field, 240 tons of hay having been cut from it in one season, and below the "downs" seem to stretch away for miles a vast expanse of verdant sward until it fades into the bolder scenery of the woods to the northeast, and the men at work seem like specks on the horizon to the north. To the right the huge glass casements of the Catholic Protectory blaze in morning sunlight. Westchester Village, with its old-fashioned gabled houses and dormer windows of the reign of the Georges, nestles snugly in the valley to the east and St. Peter's, which boasts the possession of a communion service the gift of Queen Anne, raises her glittering spire. The article mentioned describes the grand stand as one of the finest in the world. It is a single tier, with a great pitch, and is 650 feet in length and 100 feet deep, capable of seating 12,000 people. The betting ring is underneath the center of the stand, and is 300 by 150 feet. On either side are the dining rooms, cafes, ladies' cloak rooms, retiring rooms, etc., the center stair leading to the stands being 40 feet in width, and there are eight other entrances. In the rear of the stand will be the railway station, from which there is an incline approach to the stand 150 feet in width.

The club house of the new jockey club will be an imposing affair. It will be located south of the grand stand. The saddling paddock will not have any equal. To the left of the grand stand there is a delightful stretch of woods which will afford a pleasant promenade to the gentlemen and ladies who seek an outing and the pleasure of a day of racing. The new track will be ready for racing in the autumn of next year.

Effect of Soil on Horses' Feet.

A correspondent of the Farming World, writing from the Hawaiian Islands, has the following to say about horses' feet, which will be read with interest:

I would like to call attention to the advantages of breeding horses on dry, rocky ground, and to the difference of such horses' feet from those raised on wet grass. How great this difference is I think few people realize, and I do not think I am going too far in saying that it is as great as that between a man who has gone barefoot all his life, and one who has been used to shoes. Watch a barefooted urchin running over newly-laid macadam, which a shod horse can only cross with pain. Here a few miles makes all the difference between a horse with feet as soft as an English one, and another with feet as hard as a goat's. Along the whole of the leeward side of Hawaii the country consists of a succession of lava beds of various ages, and the horses, mules, and donkeys bred there have wonderfully hard feet, and never require shoes, but the horses of the windward districts require shoes even on ordinary roads, and can hardly travel the Kona roads when shod.

I once left Waiohena in Kau with three horses all newly shod, rode about thirty miles into Kona, and returned on the third day; all the shoes were worn out or gone, some were worn clean through at the toe, and the two halves were still on the foot; and yet that same journey is repeatedly made by unshod horses. A friend who recently made a trip round Hawaii, told me that one of the horses in the party traveled the whole distance without shoes, some three hundred miles, and the other horses had their shoes looked to at every opportunity.

Not only is a rock horse hard in his feet, but his legs stand much longer, and he can do far more work. He is also by far more sure-footed; indeed, they never make a misstep, whereas a grass horse never seems to look where he puts his feet, and stumbles over every rock he meets.

On our ranch in Hawaii, which runs from the top of Kabala Mountain to the sea, the upper land is bush and wet, the middle open grass, and the lower rocky, till near the sea it is a rough and bare lava. A horse that is bred on the upper land is useless on the lower, and the same with cattle; when a southerly wind is blowing the wild scrub cattle come out of the bush, and if we can get between them and it, and start them down hill, as soon as they get into the rocks they are helpless, and can be lassoed without much trouble; while the

My brother, who manages the ranch, generally rides a little dun or "pukea" poney on the lower lands; I do not know how old he is, but the old men say he was the best horse on the ranch fifteen years ago, and he is about the best now.

If the first years of a colt's life are spent on the rocks, his feet will always be hard, and I do not think that a horse bred on grass would ever get hard feet, however long he was kept on rocks, though it certainly improves their feet. The difference seems to be more in the sole than in the shell, and a rock horse's feet are generally smaller, and his bone bigger.

I have a little mare, bred on a goat run in Koua, whose age I can not find out; she was old when I bought her ten years ago, but she ran in a half mile race here last year, and ran well, too, and over rough ground few horses can catch her; all her feet require is cutting down with a rasp, and her grandson is the same; he is a buggy horse in Honolulu, and the smiths say they never saw a horse's feet grow so fast.

Other things being equal, I would certainly pay fifty per cent. more for a rock horse than a grass horse, not only because they are far safer to ride, but because they can do more in a day, and last many years longer.

A letter from Lexington, Ky., to the St. Louis Republican says: The rules adopted by the Turf Congress at its meeting in Cincinnati do not give satisfaction to horsemen here. They object to the rule excluding geldings from the weight allowance and the rule as to secret bidding on winners in selling races. In the case of geldings, they say that owners have not had sufficient notice, and that the rule ought to have been framed so as to apply only to geldings after a certain date, say January 1st. If an owner gelded any of his colts after that date he would do it with knowledge of the consequence. But relying upon the allowance to geldings, a number of owners like, for instance, Mr. Green Morris, have gelded certain of their colts, and, under the new rule, they will be disappointed.

As to the rule regarding selling races, there is great dissatisfaction. It is regarded as a death-blow to that feature of racing. Mr. Hardy Durham thinks that it will result in excluding from selling races all good horses, and only those will be entered whose owners are willing to let them go for the amount of the purse. The rule reads: "In all selling races the winner shall be sold by secret sealed bids, to be deposited in a place designated by the association within 15 minutes after the close of the race. The sealed bids are only to be opened by the presiding judge, and the surplus is to be divided between the second horse and the association." Mr. Milton Young severely criticised this, declaring it was an encouragement of connivance and trickery. The idea that an owner could not know what was bid upon his horse, so that he might save his entry, if he desired, was proposterous. Several gentlemen largely interested in racing as owners or trainers were present when Mr. Durham and Mr. Young were criticising the new rules, and heartily agreed with them.

Trotters and Pacers.

For many years past the question as to whether the trotting or the pacing gait is the faster has more or less occupied the attention of horsemen whose dispositions are speculative. Now that the pacer has become so well a recognized element on the turf and that liberal purses and frequent classes are offered at the important meetings to call for his best efforts, it may be interesting to present a few comparative statistics showing his highest speed and that of the trotters under like conditions.

First we find, for one mile in harness, Johnston, pacer, 2.06¼—the best mile ever trotted or paced to rule, and against this is the mile trotted by Maud S, in harness in 2.08¾. No pacer besides Johnston, has a record better than 2.11¾, while Jay-Eye-See and St. Julien, trotters have, respectively, records of 2.10 and 2.11¼. So that taking 2.12 as the figure for extreme speed, the trotters are ahead of the pacers.

In the comparison by age the pacers have generally the best of it. I do not know of any record of a yearling pacer to compare with that of the trotting filly, Norlaine, whose mile in 2.13½ was the best by far for the age. The two-year-old performance of Sunol, 2.18, is also decidedly the best for her age and scores another point for the trotters, the best performance at that age for the pacers being 2.20½, by Ed-Rosewater.

The best trotting mile for three-year olds is 2.18, credited to Sable Wilkes, but at this age the pacers take the lead strongly, Yolo Maid 2:14, Adonis 2:14½ and Gold Leaf 2:15, place the three-year-old trotters three seconds in the rear.

As four-year-olds, the pacers Arrow 2.14, and Bessemer, 2.15, beat the fastest trotter, Manzanita, 2.16. It is to be noted also that Arrow's is the best mark for the age. Bessemer's is the best stallion record for four-year-old pacers.

Among the five-year-olds, Arrow who paced in 2:13¼, this year leads the list. He is closely followed by the pacing stallion Roy Wilkes, 2.14½, while the great young trotter, Patron, at the same age, has a record of 2.14¼.

Beyond this age it is neither interesting nor profitable to carry the comparison, for after five years the trotter or the pacer is fully matured and able to work out his own salvation without consideration of age.

Thus it appears that for yearlings there is no comparison. At two years the trotters can show 2 18 against 2.20½ by the pacers. At three years, three pacers have records from 2.14 to 2.15, while no trotter has beaten 2.18. At four years the pacers show 2.14, while the trotter can only claim 2.16, and at five years the side wheelers have a champion with a record of 2.13¼, against 2.14¼ for the trotters. Really it seems that the pacing gait is naturally the faster. Of course there are ten times as many trotters trained and driven for all there is in them than there are pacers, and from the great disproportion in number there should result more phenomenal performers and greater numbers of animals endowed with the highest speed. Therefore the top record for all ages should belong to a trotter, but the fact remains that Johnston's mile in harness, in 2.06¼, is 2½ seconds faster than the best performance of Maud S, the fleetest of all trotters.

Perhaps a recognition of these stubborn statistical facts may assist breeders in the solution of the ever present problem, "How to breed a world beater." For many years thoroughbred crosses were considered distinctly bad, but today the irresistible logic of facts has changed that notion, and there is now a strong disposition for thoroughbred crosses close up. In looking over the blood lines of the greatest performers of late, however, the pacing element crops out so strongly that it cannot judiciously be ignored, and the facts presented above certainly indicate that it is more likely to supply the highest speed than is any other source.—The Sporting World.

Eastern Entries.

Questions are frequently sent in to this office asking if that horse or this horse is entered in some particular stake in the East. For the benefit of those interested we herewith give a full list of all entries from this coast in the principal western spring events. It will be seen that there are many new candidates for racing honors, at least a half dozen of the stables being new to the Eastern tracks. Quite a number of the horses have earned brackets already, and it will be a surprise if they do not give good accounts of themselves when taken to compete against the Eastern cracks.

CORRESPONDENCE.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—In your valuable paper of the 29th inst. I see the Napa Fair Association have set their time for that coming fair for August 5th. At our last meeting we set our time for the 2nd of September, this will make a good circuit, viz.;

Napa, August 5th to 10th.
Santa Rosa, August 12th to 17th.
Petaluma, August 19th to 24th.
Oakland, August 26th to 31st.
San Jose, September 2nd to 7th.
Sacramento, September 9th to 21st.
Stockton, September 23rd to 28th.

In your last issue (Saturday, December 22nd) I see the Petaluma Association had set their time for the 26th of Aug. Now if they will drop back to the 19th, and take the same week as they had last year, I think all will be satisfied.—Yours very truly, G. H. BRAGG, Secretary, Santa Clara Valley Agricultural Society.

A. H. Conkling, Secretary, writes us that the Napa Fair will be held August 19th to 24th inclusive.

BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN—A few items from L. A. this "Happy New Year" may suit your readers. We send you the usual greetings and wish you many of them. "Track was fine—attendance good" at first regular day of our winter meeting. As the Dailies exchange with you take their report. The Southern California Racing Club (late L. A. Turf Club) has now about one hundred members, comprising the best elements of our community. They claim six days. April 8, to 13th inclusive for the fourth annual meeting. You shall have programme in a day or two, entries to close March 15th. District Ag. Assn. No. 6 claims six days. August 5, to 10th inclusive—will soon prepare programme. Budd Dobles' stable arrived last week and are at sunny quarters on our track. "Knight," "Jack," Ed. Annan, Johnston, and Father John seem to like California. "Father John" was slightly ill en route, that caused Geo. Starr to lay off at Las Vegas N. M. a few days ago. Knap McCarthy's string are equine pictures every one. Other stock doing well, not a sick one on the grounds. Yours, E. A. DECAMP.

LOS ANGELES, Cal. Jan. 1, 1889

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—Will you kindly give Abbotsford credit for the record of 2:27 of Waterford, gained at Fresno September 28, 1888. He appears in the 2:30 list for 1888, but no sire is given for him. He was raised at the Cook Ranch by the late Daniel Cook.—Respectfully.

CHRIS. W. SMITH.

Monterey, Cal., Jan. 2, 1889.

"Subscriber, Please give the pedigree of Nutwood Boy. Answer—Write to Harry Seig of San Luis Obispo."

Now as I bred Nutwood Boy and Belmont Boy (the pacer) the same year, and claimed their names through the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, and being also quite well acquainted with the principal attaches of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN office, I am surprised that you should refer any one seeking the pedigree of Nutwood Boy to Harry Seig or any one else but the undersigned.

Nutwood Boy, chestnut stallion, 15 3½ hands high, large star in forehead, both hind feet and ankles white, foaled May 3, 1879, by Nutwood.

3rd dam the Vermont Mare, brought to California in 1851 by Mr. Penniman, and sired by Greybeard, an inbred Messenger.

Kitty Parkhurst was bred by Wm. Boots, Esq., of Alviso. If any one writes for the pedigree of Belmont Boy please do not refer them to some one in Los Angeles.—Yours very truly,

Los Angeles Racing.

First race—Introduction. Handicap, seven-eighths of a mile. E. J. Baldwin's b. m. Grisette, 5, by Glenelg; Malta, 112 pounds, L. Brown first, D. Dennison's ch. m. Blue Bonnet 5, by Joe Hooker; Kate Carson, 100 pounds, (G. West) second; Joseph D. Dunn's ch. c. Four Aces, by Hockhocking, Maid of the Mist, 95 pounds; Stuart third. Time 1:33.

Pools sold: Grissette, $25; Blue Bonnet, $8; Four Aces, $7. A capital start was effected after one break away, Blue Bonnet rushing off with the lead. At the three-quarter pole Four Aces was two lengths in the rear, with Blue Bonnet and Grisette neck and neck. The rider on Grisette now made his effort, and coming away at every stride, won handily in 1:33.

Second race, one-half mile heats—E. J. Baldwin's b. m. Estrella, 6, by Rutherford, Sister Anne (G. West); Guess & Parker's br. g. Dick G., by Harwood, Time, .50¾, .54.

Pools sold—Estrella $25, Dick G. $4.

First heat—Dick G. went off at a tremendous gait, and led several lengths, entering the straight, but Estrella came up with a big rush, and won "hands down."

Third race, two and one-fourths miles, handicap—Dan Dennison's b g Dave Douglass, aged, by Leinster, Lilly Simpson, 119 pounds (D. Dennison, Jr.); first.

Telephone was rushed to the front at the fall of the flag, and set a lively pace. Consuelo and Dave Douglass raced locked around the back stretch, and Telephone soon fell back beaten. Consuelo kept up with Douglass on sufferance only, and the Sacramento horse won in a canter.

The track was a trifle heavy.

Races at Bay District.

Although New Year's day was typical of a Californian winter, yet a very small attendance was present to enjoy the four races announced on the card, counter attractions doubtless drawing many away who would have patronized the track.

The Judges selected for the day's sport were Senator George Hearst, Hon. Noah Armstrong of the Memphis Jockey Club, and George Lovegrove, Esq., of Alameda. The three gentlemen formed a combination that is rarely seen on a California race course, and early in the day stamped themselves as terrors to evil doers, and their decision in the third race was so fair that even those who lost money could not grumble. The book makers were notable by their absence, the empty boxes being finally utilized as a means of witnessing the race by those who did not care to go up into the grand stand. Mr. Hinchman says that in future he will run the track without any assistance from the pencillers, still there will be plenty of opportunity for those who desire to back their favorites, through the medium of auctions or Paris mutuels.

Talking about the matter to a well known horseman, he said to a BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN representative that the majority of the stable owners are in favor of running for smaller purses, as then the public would patronize the turf more extensively, and in the end there would be more money for all concerned. The book makers, on their part, claim that they want nothing to do with the local races, as there is more money for them in concentrating all their efforts on Eastern events, and are perfectly satisfied to let the local courses severely alone.

One very bad feature of the arrangements was the programmes, the entries being placed wrong; the colors were incorrect, and in two instances were totally different from those announced on the card. The price charged is high enough to warrant extra care being taken with them, and dissatisfaction was expressed on all sides at the blunders displayed thereon.

The first race had seven entries, but only half a dozen faced the starter, Bogus being withdrawn. Al Farrow was a strong favorite among the backers, still Gladstone had many admirers who felt confident he could win. The delay at the post was prolonged by the fractiousness of Al Farrow and Nabeau, who behaved very badly; when the word was given Minnie R was at least two lengths in front, while Minnie B was fully ten lengths behind the pack. As they passed on toward the turn Al Farrow moved up and before the field had turned into the stretch he had passed the leader and was being held well in hand. From here out he won as he pleased with plenty to spare, Minnie R. second and Gladstone third. When the riders came back to dismount Hennessey was called into the judges' stand and severely cross-questioned about his riding of Gladstone. The lad evidently failed to convince the judges of his innocence, as they ruled him off for thirty days.

SUMMARY.

Minnie R, ch m, a, 104, Scamperdown—Sallie Blair..... Cooper 2

Auction pools: Al Farrow $25, Gladstone $18, field $8. Mutuels: Al Farrow $12.80, Place $7.30, Minnie R. $13.80.

The second race was a mile and a sixteenth, and had five starters. Index was scratched and Nerva substituted by the Elmwood Stable, while Kildare was drawn and Oro started instead. In this race Jack Brady was a pronounced favorite, the balance being thought little of. A great surprise was in store however, as Welcome won by a steal, Cooper, the jockey, caught Haslitt napping when the latter had the race won. As the flag fell Oro showed in front first closely followed by Brady, Jou Jou, and Welcome bringing up the rear. In the back stretch Brady took the lead, Jou Jou pressing Oro for second place, the latter soon quitting, the heavy going not being to his fancy. In the turn Brady and Jou Jou made a determined fight, but the Monday colt was not in condition to last with the son of Wildidle. Haslitt brought Brady leisurely down the stretch after looking over his shoulder and seeing his field well strung out, but Welcome had a little in reserve and Cooper brought the brown mare with a rush, and beat out Brady by a head, although Haslitt tried hard to have his mount win.

SUMMARY.

Same day, second race one mile and one-sixteenth.

Oro, 110 (Newell), and Nerva, 110 (Hitchcock) ran unplaced.

Mutuels: Welcome $11.60, Place $8.35. Brady for place $6.50.

The third race, a mile and an eighth handicap, had five entries on the card, only four starting, Daisy D. being withdrawn. Laura Gardner was thought a sure thing for this event, but owing to a foul she lost the race. As the flag fell Coloma jumped off in the lead as usual, Rosa Lewis being a fair second, with Gardner and Nabeau well up. The relative positions were maintained to the head of the stretch, when all hands began punishing. As they rounded the mare Rosa Lewis fouled Laura Gardner, throwing the latter out of her stride, and although Haslitt did his utmost he could not catch the leaders. As the horses passed under the wire Rosa Lewis was a head to the good, Coloma second, only a head in advance of Gardner. On dismounting Haslitt made a claim of foul against the rider of Rosa Lewis. After deliberation the judges made the allowance and disqualified Rosa Lewis, giving Coloma the race and placing Gardner second, Nabeau third.

SUMMARY.

Same day, third race.—One mile and one-eighth handicap.

Mutuels paid, Coloma $16 95, place $6.95, Laura Gardner, place $5.80.

The fourth and last race of the day was a hollow victory for Naicho B. It was a five-eighths dash for two-year olds, and had only three starters. As the flag fell Naicho took a a commanding lead, Jack Pot second and Arthur H. last. From start to finish the horses kept the same position, Naicho B. winning by several lengths.

SUMMARY.

Same day, fourth race.—Five-eighths of a mile, for two-year-olds.

Jack Pot, br g, 107, Joe Hooker—Lugena..... Cooper 2

Mutuels paid, Naicho B. $9.50.

SECOND DAY.

Officers of the day: Judges, Messrs. Tarpey, Lovegrove and Waugh; timers, Dick Havey and J. Brown; starter, T. H. Griffin, clerk of the course, H. Lowden.

Not more than two hundred and fifty persons assembled at the track on Thursday afternoon, the cold, raw disagreeable weather proving too severe for many who would have liked to witness the sport. Again the bookmakers stands were vacant, the differences between them and Mr Hinchman still being unsettled. Lively betting was indulged in, the auction pools being in active demand, while those who had not an abundance of the filthy lucre placed their "merry little fives" in the mutuals. A peculiar phase in the betting was the regularity with which the favorites would change. Mr. Killip, when he sold the first choice, found the favorite to be Farrow. After selling a few pools Sleepy Dick was rushed to the front as first choice, while in a few minutes more the field was thought good enough to win by the party having the first selection.

By this time Al Farrow was third and last in the betting, a small party of Santa Rosa folks scooping all the short end tickets. Although the time advertised for the first race was set at two o'clock it was almost three before the horses faced the starter. After the usual few breakaways the flag fell to a good start, Barney G. having slightly the worst of it. Sleepy Dick was the first to show in front, closely followed by Gladstone, Al Farrow third and Barney G. bringing up the rear. These positions were kept until the turn into the homestretch, when Hazlitt on Farrow brought his mount on with a rush and collared the leader just before reaching the draw-gate. At this point Cook who was riding Sleepy Dick was noticed to pull his horse, evidently not trying to win. As they passed under the wire Farrow was first by two lengths, Sleepy Dick second, and Gladstone well up for third place. As the riders came back to dismount Mr. Tarpey announced that the judges were convinced that Sleepy Dick was not ridden to win and ordered the race to be run over selecting Hitchcock to take Cook's place on the Chestnut gelding.

After a few minutes intermission the horses again went to the post where some time was wasted by the bad antics of Farrow. When the word was given Barney G. was away behind, the others getting off well together. Sleepy Dick as before soon got the lead and retained it to the drawgate, when Farrow again made his running and beat out the gelding as before, Gladstone once more third. The owner of Sleepy Dick sent word to the stand before this heat that Hitchcock must not carry a whip as his horse would not stand whipping. The Judges ordered, however, that the rider should have one, and although it was plied liberally to Dick at the wind up, he could not win.

SUMMARY.

First race. Half-mile dash; all ages; $175 added; $10 each for all starters to second horse.

Barney G. ran unplaced.

Another pool was Sleepy Dick $7 0, field $20, Farrow $17. Still another, field $75, Sleepy Dick $20, Farrow $20.

As the result of the second race was the same as the first, a summary is not necessary. Time, 0:51½.

The second race on the card was a one mile selling race, the entries being Oro, Black Pilot, Kildare and Nerva. When the flag fell Black Pilot took the lead at once, Kildare second, Oro third. For the entire distance the same positions were maintained, Pilot winning handily.

SUMMARY.

Second race, one mile (selling race), purse $150.

L. A. Blassingames' b s Oro, 4, by Norfolk—Golden Gate, 114 ..... Cook 3

The third race was a mile and a quarter handicap, for which there were originally six entries. Naicho B. was scratched, leaving Laura Gardner, Jack Brady, Rosa Lewis, Susie S. and Nabeau to fight it out. In the pools the first and second named sold as a stable for $30 Rosa Lewis $13, Field $25. The horses started well, and passed the wire almost in a bunch, Brady having slightly the best of the running. Going round the back stretch, Gardner was away behind, but got into second place on the turn. Brady won, Gardner second, Susie S. third. Time, 2:16½.

It is not often that in a magazine devoted to topics of general Literature and History there appears an article which is desirable for the columns of a class-journal like our own. But Mr. Frederick Remington's very admirable article in the current number of the Century is of so much interest to our readers that we lay it before them. It is to be regretted that the author's lifelike illustrations cannot also be reproduced. Mr. Remington has indicated not only with a ready pen but with a graphic pencil the characteristic features of the "native" horses so familiarly known to all who have travelled much or resided long on this coast.

To men of all ages the horse of northern Africa has been the standard of worth and beauty and speed. It was bred for the purpose of war and reared under the most favorable climatic conditions, and its descendants have infused their blood into all the strains which in our day are regarded as valuable. The Moors stocked Spain with this horse, and the so-called Spanish horse is more Moorish than otherwise. It is fair to presume that the lightly armored cavaliers of the sixteenth century, or during the Spanish conquests in America, rode this animal, which had been so long domesticated in Spain, in preference to the inferior northern horses. To this day the pony of western America shows many points of the Barbary horse to the exclusion of all other breeding. His head has the same facial line; and that is a prime point in deciding ancestry in horses. Observe, for instance, the great dissimilarity in profile displayed by old plates of the Godolphin Arab an and the Darley Arabian, two famous sires, kings of their races, the one a Barb and the other an Arabian.

In contemplating the development of the horse, or rather his gradual adjustment to his environment, no period more commends itself than that of the time from the Spanish invasion of Mexico to the present day. The lapse of nearly four centuries and the great variety of dissimilar conditions have so changed the American "bronco" from his Spanish ancestor that he now enjoys a distinctive individuality. This individuality is also subdivided; and as all types come from a common ancestry, the reason for this varied development are sought with interest, though I fear not always with accuracy. Cortes left Cuba on his famous expedition with "sixteen horses," which were procured from the plantations of that island at great expense.

As a matter of course these horses did not contribute to the stocking of the conquered country, for they all laid down their lives to make another page of military history in the annals of the Barbary horse. Subsequent importations must have replenished the race. Possibly the dangers and expense attendant on importation did not bring a very high grade of horses from Spain, though I am quite sure that no sane don would have preferred a coarse-jointed great Flemish weight-carrier for use on the hot sands of Mexico, to a light and supple Barb, which would recognize in the sand and heat of his new world home an exact counterpart of his African hills. As the Spaniards worked north in their explorations, they lost horses by the adverse fortunes of war and by their straying or capture by Indians. At a very early date the wild horse was encountered on the plains of Mexico, but a long time elapsed before the horse was found in the north. La Belle found the Comanches with Spanish goods and also horses in their possession, but on his journey to Canada it was with great difficulty that he procured horses from the Indians farther north. In 1680, or contemporaneously with La Salle's experience in the south, Father Hennepin lived with the Sioux, and marched and hunted the buffalo on foot. At a much later day a traveler heard the Comanches boast that they "remembered when the Arapahoes to the north used dogs as beasts of burden." That horses were lost by the Spaniards and ran in a wild state over the high, dry plains of Mexico and Texas at an early day is certain; and as the conditions of life were favorable, they must have increased rapidly. How many years elapsed before the northern Indians procured these animals, with which they are so thoroughly identified, is not easily ascertainable. Cheyenne Indians who were well versed in that tribal legend which is rehearsed by the lodge fire in the long winter nights have told me gravely that they always have had horses. I suspect that this assertion has its foundation in the vanity of their cavalier souls, for the Cheyenne legend runs very smoothly, and has paleface corroboration back to a period when we know that they could not have had horses.

Only on the plains has the horse reached his most typical American development. The range afforded good grass and they bred indiscriminately, both in the wild state and in the hands of the Indians, who never used any discretion in the matter of coupling the best specimens, as did the Indians of the mountains, because of the constant danger of their being lost or stolen, thus making it unprofitable. Wild stallions continually herded off the droves of the Indians of the southern plains, thus thwarting any endeavor to improve the stock by breeding. It is often a question whether the "pinto" or painted pony of Texas, is the result of a pinto ancestry, or of a general coupling of horses of all colors. The latter, I think, is the case, for the Barb was a one-color horse, and the modern horse-breeder in his science finds no difficulty in producing that color which he deems the best. The Comanches, Wichitas, and Kiowas hold that stallion in high esteem which is most bedecked and flared by blotches of white hair on the normal color of his hide. The so-called Spanish horse of northern Mexico is less apt to show this tendency towards a parti-colored coat, and his size, bone, and general development stamp him as the best among his kind, all of which qualities are the result of some consideration on the part of man with a view to improve the stock. The Mexicans on their Indian-infested frontier kept their horses close herded; for they lived where they had located their ranches, desired good horses, and took pains to produce them. The sires were well selected, and the growing animals were not subjected to the fearful setbacks attendant on passing a winter on the cold plains, which is one of the reasons why all wild horses are stunted in size. Therefore we must look to the Spanish horse of northern Mexico for the nearest type to the progenitors of the American bronco. The good representatives of this division are about fourteen and a half hands in statue; of large bone, with a slight tendency to roughness; generally bay in color; flat-ribbed and of great muscular development; and, like all the rest, have the Barbary head, with the slightly oval face and fine muzzle.

Nearly identical with this beast is the mustang of the Pacific Coast—a misnomer, by the bye, which for a generation has been universally applied by fanciful people to any horse bearing a brand. This particular race of horses, reared under slightly less advantageous circumstances than the Spanish horse of old Mexico, was famous in early days; but they are now so mixed with American stock as to lose the identity which in the days of the Argonauts was their pride.

The most inexperienced horseman will not have to walk around the animal twice in order to tell a Texas pony; that is, one which is full bred, with no admixture. He has fine deer-like legs, a very long body, with a pronounced roach just forward of the coupling, and possibly a "glass eye" and a pinto hide. Any old cowboy will point him out as the only creature suitable for his purposes. Hard to break, because he has any amount of latent devil in his disposition, he does not break his legs or fall over backwards in the "pitching" process as does the "cayuse" of the north-west. I think he is small and shriveled up like a Mexican because of his dry, hot habitat, over which he has to walk many miles to get his dinner. But, in compensation, he can cover leagues of his native plains, bearing a seemingly disproportionately large man, with an ease both to himself and to his rider which is little short of miraculous. I tried on one occasion to regenerate a fine specimen of the southern plains sort, and to make a pretty little cob of the wild, scared bundle of nerves and bones which I had picked out of a herd. I roached his mane and docked his tail, and put him in a warm stall with half a foot of straw underneath. I meted out a ration of corn and hay which was enough for a twelve-hundred work-horse in the neighboring stall. I had him combed and brushed and wiped by a good-natured man, who regarded the proceeding with as much awe as did the pony. After the animal found out that the corn was meant to be eaten, he always ate it; but after many days he was led out, and, to my utter despair, he stood there the same shy, perverse brute which he always had been. His paunch was distended to frightful proportions, but his cat hams, ewe neck, and thin little shoulders were as dry and hard as ever. Mentally he never seemed to make any discrimination between his newly found masters and the big timber wolves that used to surround him and keep him standing all night in a bunch of fellows. On the whole it was laughable, for in his perversity he resisted the regenerating process much as any other wild beast might. For all that, these animals are "all sorts of a horse" in their own particular field of usefulness, though they lack the power of the Spanish horse. Once in Arizona I rode one of the latter animals, belonging to Chief Ascension Rios of the Papagoes, at a very rapid gallop for twenty-four miles, during the middle of the day, through the desert sand. The thermometer stood as high as you please in the shade, and the hot sun on the white sand made the heat something frightful; and personally I am not noted for any of the physical characteristics which distinguish a fairy. At the end of the journey I was confirmed in the suspicion that he was a most magnificent piece of horse-flesh for a ride like that, and I never expect to see another horse which can make the trip and take it so lightly to heart. He stood there like a rock, and was as good as at starting, having sweat only a normal amount. The best test of a horse is not what he can do, but how easily he can do it Some of the best specimens of the horse and rider which I ever had occasion to admire were Mexican vaqueros, and I have often thought the horses were more worthy than the men.

The golden age of the bronco was ended some twenty years ago when the great tidal wave of Saxonism reached his grassy plains. He was rounded up and brought under the yoke by the thousand, and his glories departed. Here and there a small band fled before man, but their freedom was hopeless. The act of subjugation was more implied than real, and to this day, as the cowboy goes out and drives up a herd of broncos to the corral, there is little difference between the wild horse of old and his enslaved progeny. Of course the wild stallion is always eliminated, and he alone was responsible for the awe which a wild horse inspired. As I have before remarked, the home of the Simon-pure wild horse is on the southern plains, and when he appears elsewhere he has been transported there by man and found his freedom later on. I have found food for reflection in tracing the causes of the varied development of these broncos under different conditions. A great many of the speculations in which I indulge may be faulty, as they deal with a subject not widely investigated by any more learned savants than one is apt to find about the fires of the cow camps in the far West. One must not forget, also, that the difficulty increases as years pass, because the horses are driven about from one section to another, and thus crossed with the stock of the country until in a very few years they became a homogenous tpye. The solutions to these problems must always be personal views, and in no sense final. One thing is certain: of all the monuments which the Spaniards has left to glorify his reign in America there will be none more worthy than his horse. The proposition I have heard combated, however by a person who has just been "bucked" violently from the back of a descendant of the Barbs. He insisted that the Spaniards had left little to glorify their reign in America, least of all their miserable, scrubby ponies. Nevertheless, the Spaniard's horses may be found to-day in countless thousands, from the city of the Montezumas to the regions of perpetual snow; they are grafted into our equine wealth and make an important impression on the horse of the country.

There is a horse in the Indian Territory, Arkansas and Missouri, called the Cherokee pony, which is a peculiar animal. Of low stature, he is generally pie-bald, with a great profusion of mane and tail. He is close set, with head and legs not at all of the bronco type, and I know that his derivation is from the East, though some insist on classing him with our Western ponies: but he is a handsome little beast, easily adaps himself to surroundings, and is in much favor in the Eastern markets as a saddle pony for boys and for ladies' carts.

The most favorable place to study the pony is in an Indian camp, as the Indians rarely defeat the ends of nature in the matter of natural selection; and further, the ponies are allowed to eat the very greenest grass they can find in the summer time, and to chew on a cotton-wood saw-log during the winter, with perfect indifference on the part of their owners. The pony is thus a reflex of nature, and, coupled with his surroundings, is of quite as much interest as the stretch of prairie grass, the white lodges, and the blanketed forms. The savage red man in his great contest with nature has learned, not to combat nature, but to observe her moods and to prepare a simple means of escape. He puts up no fodder for the winter, but relies on the bark of the cotton-wood. Often he is driven to dire extremity to bring his stock through the winter. I have been told that in the Canadian North-west the Blackfeet have bought grain for their ponies during a bad spell of weather, which act implies marvelous self-denial, as the cost of a bushel of oats would bring financial ruin on any of the tribe. Before the early grass starts in the spring the emanciated appearance of one of these little ponies in the far North-west will sorely try the feelings of an equine philanthropist should he look along the humpy ribs and withered quarters. But alack! when the young grass does shoot, the pony scours the trash which composes his winter diet, sheds his matted hair, and shines forth another horse. In a month "Richard's himself again," ready to fly over the grassy sward with his savage master or to drag the travaux and pack the buxom squaw. Yet do not think that at this time the Indian pony is the bounding steed of romance; do not be deluded into expecting the arched neck, the graceful lines, and the magnificent limbs of the English hunter, for, alas! they are not here. They have existed only on paper. He may be all that the wildest enthusiast may claim in point of hardihood and power, as indeed he is, but he is not beautiful. His head and neck join like the two parts of a hammer, his legs are as fine as a deer's, though not with a flat knee-cap and broad cannon-bone of the English ideal. His barrel is a veritable tun, made so by the bushels of grass which he consumes in order to satisfy nature. His quarters are apt to run suddenly back from the hips, and the rear view is decidedly mulish about the hocks. The mane and the tail are apt to be light, and I find that the currycomb of the groom has a good deal to do in deciding on which side of the horse's neck the mane shall fall; for on an Indian pony it is apt to drop on the right and the left, or stand up in the middle in perfect indecision. The Indian never devotes any stable work to his mount, although at times the pony is bedecked in savage splendor. Once I saw the equipment of a Blackfoot war pony, composed of a mask and bonnet, gorgeous with red flannel, brass headed tacks, silver plates, and feathers, which was art in its way.

As we go very far into the Canadian Northwest we find that the interminable cold of the winters has had its effect, and the pony is small and scraggy, with a disposition to run to hair that would be the envy of a goat. These little fellows seem to be sadly out of their reckoning, as the great northern wastes were surely not made for horses; however, the reverse of the proposition is true, for the horses thrive after a fashion and demonstrate the toughness of their race. Unless he be tied up to a post, no one ever knew an Indian pony to die of the cold. With his front feet he will paw away the snow to an astonishing depth in order to get at the dry herbage, and and by hook or by crook he will manage to come through the winter, despite the wildest prophecies on the part of the uninitiated that he cannot live ten days in such a storm. The pony often finds to his sorrow that he is useful for other purposes than as a beast of burden, for his wild masters of the Rocky Mountains think him excellent eating. To the Shoshones the particular use of a horse was for the steaks and stews that were in him; but the Indian of the plains had the buffalo, and could afford, except in extreme cases, to let his means of transportation live. The Apaches were never "horse Indians," and always readily abandoned their stock to follow the mountains on foot. In early times their stock-stealing raids into Mexico were simply foraging expeditions, as they ate horses, mules, cattle and sheep alike. In the grassy valleys of the northern Rocky Mountains, walled in as they are by the mountain ranges, horse-breeding was productive of good, and was followed. Thus the "cayuse" a fine strain of pony stock, took its name from a tribe, though it became disseminated over all that country. As it was nearly impossible for the Indians to steal each other's horses on every occasion, the people were encouraged to perpetuate the good qualities of their favorite mounts.

The cayuse is generally roan in color, with always a tendency this way, no matter how slight. He is strongly built, heavily muscled, and the only bronco which possesses square quarters. In height he is about fourteen hands; and while not possessed of the activity of the Texas horse, he has much more power. This native stock was a splendid foundation for the horse-breeders of Montana and the North-west to work on, and the Montana horse of commerce rates very high. This condition is not, however, all to the credit of the cayuse, but to a strain of horses early imported into Montana from the West and known as the Oregon horse, which breed had its foundation in the mustang.

In summing up for the bronco I will say that he is destined to become a distinguished element in the future horse of the continent, if for no other reason except that of his numbers. All over the West he is bred into the stock of the country, and of course always from the side of the dam. The first one or two crosses from this stock are not very encouraging, as the blood is strong, having been bred in and in for so many generations. But presently we find an animal of the average size, as fine almost as a thoroughbred, with his structural points corrected, and fit for many purposes. He has about the general balance of the French ponies of Canada or perhaps a Morgan, which for practical purposes were the best horses ever developed in America. At this stage of the development of the bronco he is no longer the little narrow-shouldered, cat-hammed brute of his native plains, but as round and square and arched as "anybody's horse," as a Texan would express it. In this shape I see him ridden in Central Park, and fail to see but that he carries himself as gallantly as though his name were in the "Stud Book." I often see a pair of these horses dragging a delivery wagon about on the pavements, and note the ease with which they travel over many miles of stone-set road in a day. I have also a particular fad which I would like to demonstrate, but will simply say that this horse is the ne plus ultra for light cavalry purposes. In the department of Arizona they have used many California horses, and while some officers claim that they are not as desirable as pure American stock, I venture to think that they would be if they were used by light cavalry and not by dragons.

In intelligence the bronco has no equal, unless it is the mule, though this comparison is inapt as that hybrid has an extra endowment of brains, as though in compensation for the beauty which he lacks. I think that the wild state may have sharpened the senses of the bronco, while in domestication he is remarkably docile. It would be quite unfair to his fellows to institute anything like a comparison without putting in evidence the peculiar method of defense to which he resorts when he struggles with man for the mastery. Every one knows that he "bucks," and familiarity with that characteristic never breeds contempt. Only those who have ridden a bronco the first time it was saddled, or have lived through a railroad accident, can form any conception of the solemnity of such experiences. Few Eastern people appreciate the sky-rocket bounds, and grunts, and stiff-legged striking, because the "bucking" process is entered into with great spirit by the pony but once, and that is when he is first under the saddle-tree. If that "scrape" is "ridden out" by his master the bronco's spirit is broken; and while he may afterwards plunge about, he has intelligence enough not to "kick against the pricks."

His greatest good quality is the ease with which he stands any amount of hard riding over the trail; and this is not because of any particular power which he has over the thoroughbred, for instance, but because of his "hard stomach." He eats no grain in the growing stages of his life, and his stomach has not been forced artificially to supply a system taxed beyond the power of the stomach to fill. The same general difference is noted between an Indian and a white man. You may gallop the pony until your thoroughbred would "heave and thump" and "go wrong" in a dozen vital places, and the bronco will cool off and come through little the worse for the experience.

Proctor Knott.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN.—Acting on your telegraphed instructions I paid a visit to Mr. Samuel Bryant to find out what truth there was in the rumor anent the selling of the wonderful gelding that we all here think so much of.

Mr. Bryant was perfectly willing to be interviewed on the subject, and informed me that most of the stories telegraphed over the country were gross exaggerations. It seems that while Matt Byrne was in this state attending the sales he paid a visit to Mr. Bryant's and took a look at the colt, probably as much out of curiosity as anything else, for at the time nothing whatever was mentioned about buying him, and the subject was not broached by either of the parties. After a pleasant sojourn Mr. Byrne left, going immediately East. Some few days afterward a dispatch was received by Bryant which read as follows: "Let me know if you will take $25,000 for Proctor Knott." An answer was sent to this telegram stating that the price for the colt would be $30,000, and not a cent less would purchase him. This is all that has passed between the parties interested, and no message was sent saying that Mr. Haggin's man would go on for the horse. Mr. Bryant is very confident about his thoroughbred and seems convinced that he owns the fastest race horse in America.

I do not think he would fancy parting with him even if the price stated was put up, but it would get him out of partnership with Mr. Scoggins. Sometime ago they divided the stable, with the exception of Proctor Knott and Come to Taw, both of which are still owned by the firm.

Mr. Bryant also informed me that some Nashville parties wanted the colt and had wired for his lowest price, but no answer had been sent as the colt would, if sold, go into a Western stable, and his own horses would then have to contend against Knott in nearly all the Western events. This would not be desirable, but if on the contrary Mr. Haggin should purchase the colt, he would in all probability be taken East for what is known as the big tracks, and then Mr. Bryant would still have Come to Taw as a champion for the West. The chances are strongly against Knott starting in the Kentucky Derby, as Bryant feels assured of being able to win the valuable stake with the other colt.

I asked him who the parties were who wanted to purchase the Futurity winner, but Mr. Bryant said he would much rather not mention their names, however I imagine that if it was not McClelland and Roche, the only other persons who might want the colt would be Ex-Mayor Nolan of Albany, N. Y., who has joined hands with Johnny Campbell, late of the Chicago stable, and together they are now building up the "Beaverwyck" which will without doubt be heard from before the next season ends. I remember Sam making a remark to me just after Knott won the Junior Champion. Said he: "I am 'dead in love' with the colt," yet, still, from the way he talks I should think he is dead in love with Come to Taw. My impression is that he thinks just as much of the latter as he does of the namesake of the erstwhile Kentucky statesman, and if the colt is not a large breadwinner in the early part of 1889 Bryant will be a sadly disappointed man. To sum up, Californians can rest assured that Proctor Knott will not sport the yellow and blue next year.

I have made some inquiries about the much lauded Galen, and hear very promising reports about the Faustus—Lady Reckless colt. He is at present in Nashville taking his winter work, and has grown fully an inch in height since his hard campaign work finished. Mr. Hankins tells me that the colt is very much like the Emperor of Norfolk in appearance, and thinks he will equal Baldwin's magnificent son of Norfolk in speed. If Mr. Hankins is correct in his suppositions Proctor Knott will not have the walk over that Mr. Bryant imagines.

Little Minch, one of the most abused horses that was campaigned last year, will again be put in training not withstanding there has been several flattering offers made for him, for stud purposes. As Mr. Hankins will have personal supervision of his stable this year, things will probably assume an aspect different from that of last year. Macbeth will stand a close watch during the coming season, he has rounded to in good shape, and will in all probability be one of the cracks of the Chicago stable.

Egmont's ailment is, I am pleased to state, only temporary, and the veterinary surgeon who has him in charge feels confident of bringing the noble horse once more to his old form.

ASTORIA.

A Race at Clifton.

Many of the local turfies seem to think that "jobs" are indigenous to the Pacific Coast, but by reading the account given below, the reader will discover that fraud, and barefaced fraud at that, is practiced in the East as well as here. Capulin, the horse alluded to, carried a lot of San Francisco money, the pool room habitues being very sweet on the big bay, and backing him freely both straight and place.

"Centaur," in the Sporting World, says: Capulin was a strong favorite, while Osceola had pretty substantial support, and Bishop was backed by his people. But long prices were always on offer about them as well as the others. When the flag fell, Bishop, Fiddlehead and Osceola started out to make the running, and they set a clipping pace. Capulin got off in the ruck. Coming by the stand Bishop led a half length, while Fiddlehead and Osceola were head and head. Next came Louise Courtier and Capulin, all going well in hand. On the turn Hyslop seemed to take particular care to lose his position, and had to pull up and go around his horses, but his mount was so good and so full of running, that the instant he got a chance to run clear, he came so fast that, to use the language of trainers, he fairly "ate up his horses." On the second turn, Hyslop acted very much as if he wanted to pull the horse out of his stride, but the animal was going so strong, that the harder the boy pulled the faster he went.

Of course Hyslop may explain his conduct by saying that the horse was rank and that he tried to steady him. But when a jockey has to sit away back in the saddle, bracing himself against his stirrup irons so that his legs stick out, and moreover has a double wrap around his wrists, then there is too much steadying to be legitimate. At all events Capulin, despite the opposition in the saddle, still outran his horses. At the three-quarter pole, where mile races are usually started, Bishop and Osceola were neck and neck, two lengths before Capulin, who had worked into third place. Entering the stretch Capulin had got to within a length of them, and the crowd, which had been watching Hyslop's performance with sully interest and amazement, now began to yell "Come on with that horse." From the infield came shouts of "Loosen your wrap you —— ——; don't dislocate his jaw." But Hyslop was game, and although the horse was nearly getting the better of him still Osceola won by a length and a half, and Bishop, thanks to Kelly's desperate, furious riding, beat Capulin, whom Hyslop still continued to hold in, a neck for the place.

In an instant the entire space in front of the grand stand and about the judges' stand was filled with a widely excited crowd shouting, "Fraud!" "Declare bets off!" "Rule him off!" etc. Hyslop looked decidedly pale when he came to the scales and when he faced the angry mob.

Immediately after the weighing had been completed a meeting of the executive committee was called. Nearly a full board was present, including the judges of the day. Starter Caldwell was invited to be present. Mr. Engeman, president of the association, was in the chiar. Hyslop was called upon to tell his story and was closely cross examined. The upshot of the meeting was that the committee ordered the superintendent of the track to refuse stable room any longer to tho owner of Capulin, and directed the secretary to decline his entries in future. Hyslop was suspended pending a further hearing, which was granted him.

An interesting statement is made by Col. Barrow, who was the chief organizer of mounted infantry in the British campaigns in the Soudan. The horses for the 19th Hussars were Arab stallions of fourteen hands, whose average age was between 8 to 9 years, bought in Syria and Lower Egypt. Out of 350 horses, during nine months in a hard campaign only 12 died from disease. This he attributes, firstly to the climate of the Soudan, being most suitable for horses, and secondly, to the Syrian horse having a wonderful constitution. The distance marched, irrespective of reconnoissances, etc., was over 1,500 miles, and the weight carried averaged 196 pounds.

The weather during the last four months was very trying, food was often limited, and during the desert march water was very scarce. When Gen. Stewart's column made his final advance, the 155 horses the 19th had with them marched to the Nile without having received a drop of water for fifty-five hours, and only one pound of grain. Some fifteen or twenty had no water for twenty hours. At the end of the campaign, and after a week's rest, the animals were handed over to the 20th Hussars at Assouan in as good order as when they left Wady-Halfa nine months previously.

A Letter From "Hark Comstock."

From the Breeder's Gazette.

In your notice of the purchase of Ansel. 2:20, by Col. H. S. Russell, you speak of his having taken his record against time. I find in neither Chester nor Wallace any record of his starting against time. In 1887 he beat the pacer Prussian Boy mile heat in 2:24¼, 2:24, and the later beat the geldings Ben Ali and Terror in straight order in 2:28, 2:20, 2:20, the latter being distanced in the second heat. Mr. Charles Marvin, who developed Ansel, pronounces him one of the most perfect tempered horses in company he ever drove—a level-headed race horse in perfection. Colonel Russell did not purchase the son of Electioneer and Thoroughbred Annette for trotting purposes, however. He will go into the stud at Home Farm, and will probably be en route from California by the time this reaches you.

Nor was he bought alone upon his breeding or his record. He has been tried in the stud at Palo Alto, and my word for it, the showing of some of his yearlings on the miniature track and in harness would make the heart of any breeder glad. Marvin pointed out to the writer a yearling by him which as early as last June he drove a quarter in forty seconds with no work but breaking, and others that later were nearly as fast. A two-year-old by him is regarded as among the most promising in the training stables. Marked characteristics of Ansel's get are their fine constitution, muscular developement and splendid legs and feet. They are of trotting conformation, yet there is a tinge of the Thoroughbred all through them. "That's bad," I hear you say, but since some quite good ones have it in these later days, I notice its opponents "sing low" against it as compared to what they used to do. There is no more popular owner in New England than Colonel Russell, and surrounding breeders will rejoice that he has placed among them a standard son of Electioneer so well attested in speed and so promising in the stud.

I also notice your comments upon the success of Alcyone in the stud. The death of the great son of George Wilkes and Alma Mater, by Mambrino Patchen, was indeed a loss. There is a great hit both in trotting and transmitting trotting power between the blood of George Wilkes and Mambrino Patchen. It is quite the greatest form in which Hambletonian blood and Mambrino Chief blood nick in coming together of a direct. The two families, after all is said and done, are not as a whole a great nick and only harmonize in streaks. Old Dolly always hit with Hambletonian sires, and I used to think Clark Chief's line showed some tendency that way; but most other success resulting in a trotter of high caste from a direct crossing of the two strains can be traced to the ameliorating influence of other blood, as American Star, Pilot, a doubling of Mambrino or an inbreeding of Hambletonian. But there can be no doubt of a great hit between George Wilkes and the daughters of Mambrino Patchen. Not only in Alcyone is it transmitted splendidly but William L. has given us Axtell, 2:23 at two years, and his brother Guy Wilkes, 2:15½, has given us Sable Wilkes, 2:18 at three years. I saw Guy Wilkes trot some of his races in California this season. He, Stamboul and Woodnut were a great trio of contestants. Guy Wilkes is a fine-tempered race horse, and though both he and Stamboul tired from want of condition in their Oakland race, yet both struggled with the finest display of courage to the termination of every heat. Alcyone, Baron Wilkes, 2:18; William L., Alcantara and Guy Wilkes were brothers in blood and all seem to be great sires. About as growthy, finely-matured, and well balanced a lot of yearling and two-year-olds as the world holds can be seen at Mr. William Corbitt's place at San Mateo, got by Guy Wilkes. True, the sire has had special advantage in getting them, for Mr. Corbitt's mares are remarkably well bred, many being by Athurton and others by The Moor and his sons, and a few by Electioneer. He expects to send three carloads of them to Peter C. Kellogg & Co.'s sale in New York in March, where Eastern horsemen can judge them by their own standard. Mr. Corbitt has been partial to The Moor's blood as a cross for Guy Wilkes, and thus bred Sable Wilkes and others that are very fast. Mr. L. J. Rose of Los Angeles, who built up the family of The Moor and bred Stamboul 2:14¾ from it, returns the compliment, for in a letter just received from him he expresses a very complimentary opinion of Guy Wilkes. Mr. Rose will also send three carloads of youngsters of his own breeding to the same sale, and Mr. G. Valensin of Pleasanton, has consigned a dozen head by his remarkable young sire Sidney. The California contingent will be out in strong force.

HARK COMSTOCK.

Firenzi.

We have received a copy of the current number of Wilkes' Spirit, containing a colored likeness of Mr. J. B. Haggin's great race mare, Firenzi, with Garrison in the saddle. The artist has produced a very clever picture of the horse, but "Snapper's" physog hardly does him justice. The Spirit says: "Firenzi is not a showy mate; she lacks size and elegance; but the daughter of Glenelg and Florida is the champion of America, having disposed of The Bard in the Freehold, and of Kingston in the Champion. Accordingly, it is most fitting that she, of all racers of the present day, should be chosen as our holiday embellishment, and racing men throughout the country will treasure so capital a portrait of one of the best performers known to the turf in America.

"Firenzi is so popular a mare that she needs little introduction. In brief it may be said she is a dark bay, and was bred by D. Swigert, at the Elmendorf Stud, Muirs, Ky., foaled May 15, 1884, and sold as a yearling at the Elmendorf sale in May, 1885, to J. B. Haggin, of Sacramento, Cal., for $2,600. She is a daughter of imp. Glenelg, from Florida, by Virgil; grandam Florence, by Lexington; great-grandam imp. Weatherwitch, by Weatherbit. As a two-year-old she started eight times, winning five, including the Autumn and Nursery stakes. As a three-year-old she started fourteen times, winning eight, including the Ladies, Gazelle, Mermaid, Monmouth Oaks, West End, Hunter, and Jerome Stakes. The past season, as a four-year-old, she started in twenty races, and won thirteen, including such events as the Monmouth Cup, Harvest Handicap, Navesink Handicap, Freehold Stakes, Champion Stakes (one mile and a half in 2:34, the best on record), Monmouth Handicap, Average Stakes, Great Long Island Stakes, Firenzi Stakes, Battle Stakes and Manhattan Handicap. Her total winnings amount to $72,351 Firenzi is only fifteen hands high, but very wiry, and her legs and feet are of the best."

A Weanling Colt's Price.

A telegram was received at the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN office on Friday last, but too late for publication in last week's issue. It is as follows: Senator Stanford to-day sold to Miller & Sibley of Franklin, Pa., the weanling colt by Electioneer out of the mare Beautiful Bells for $12,500. This is said to be the highest price ever paid for a weanling colt in America. The colt is full brother to Hinda Rose 2:19¼, St. Bel 2:24½, Chimes 2:30¾, Bell Boy 2:19¼, Palo Alto Belle 2:28½.

Horse Talk.

A striking feature of the times is the triumphant march of stallion service fees toward the boundary line of fanciful rates. A few years ago it was thought that Nutwood had reached the zenith of his fame when he alone commanded $350 by the season, but his book for 1889 is nearly full at $500. Onward's services for next season are already engaged in full at $300, and I believe $500 will be his fee in 1890. Victor von Bismarck's book is full for 1889 at $300. Phallas will stand at $250 next season. Miller & Sibley are daily declining tempting offers for use of St. Bel to certain choice mares, and so it goes to the end of the chapter. Will the business trot over itself? No; the progress of trotting-horse breeding has been so gradual, and the demand for the best is so widespread, that it is secure against retrogression.—Horseman.

The Baldwin String.

R. W. Thomas, late trainer for "Lucky" Baldwin, arrived here during the week from California, accompanied by J. Manahan, who was Baldwin's light-weight jockey a portion of the season. Both will stay here during the winter. Thomas will not train for Baldwin next season, and Monahan will not ride for the California turfman. It is at least among the possibilities that Thomas will have a stable of his own, and that Monahan will ride for him. The former now owns a half interest in Eight to Seven, and is owner of a promising two-year-old. As any remarks by such an experienced man as Baldwin's late trainer bearing on the California stable would naturally be of interest to the average reader, I append some of his views and comments gathered in a conversation yesterday:

"What about the Emperor of Norfolk?" I queried; "was he a great colt, and will he stand training again?"

"A great colt! The best and greatest I ever laid eyes on, and I have seen nearly all the cracks in the last dozen of years, including Hindoo and Luke Blackburn. The racing public never realized how good an animal the Emperor really was."

"Was the injury to his leg sufficiently serious to suggest the idea that he will not stand the training ordeal next season?"

"You see that big building over there? Well, I'll agree to jump over it if the Emperor is ever brought to a race. I ought to know as much about the matter as anybody, maybe more, and I tell you now his racing days are over, because he is hopelessly broken down, and the more is the pity, because, as I have said, he was the best colt I ever saw. There was nothing at all serious with his legs last spring, although he did pull up slightly lame at Nashville, and when we reached Chicago he was as sound as a dollar. The race at Washington Park, when he pulled up so lame, did the business for him—broke him down."

"How about Volante—will he train again?"

"They may train him, but I predict now he will never run another race, certainly not more than one or two, because I consider him as virtually broken down. Had not the Emperor and Volante been retired so soon, Baldwin's winnings this year would have been away ahead of those of any other turfman. As it was they reached the very respectable figure of $112,000. Of this amount Los Angeles won about $40,000, and the Emperor in the neighborhood of $35,000."

"What is the Baldwin programme for next season?"

"He will have a pretty fair stable, even if he makes no new purchases, although his batch of two-year-olds this year were rather a poor lot. Some of his yearlings are promising. Bob Campbell, this year's assistant trainer, will train the stable next year, and I believe Isaac Murphy will be the principal jockey. The only western point where the string will race will be at Chicago, and from there they will go East."

Isonomy, the sire of Seabreeze, the winner of this year's St. Leger, Newmarket Oaks, and the very rich Lancasbire Plate, has his subscription book full for the season. The serving fee is placed at 200 guineas, Hermit is still 250 guineas, Galopin 150 guineas, Hampton, Springfield, Wisdom and Ben d'Or 100 guineas each.

CATTLE.

Inoculating For Pleuro-Pneumonia.

We have before alluded to a theory, now finding some advocates beyond the Atlantic, that inoculation may be used advantageously to prevent the ravages of pleuro-pneumonia. In order to learn just what there may be in the claim the Agricultural Society of Saxony is undertaking extensive experiments, with governmental assistance, the result of which is looked forward to with interest. We learn from a foreign journal that sixteen heifers, from various parts of the country absolutely free from pleuro-pneumonia, have been collected, inoculated in three different parts of the body, the wounds being treated antiseptically, and the animals have now been sent to a farm where pleuro is reigning extensively, being mixed with the diseased cattle.

Raising Inferior Stock.

It would seem as though, considering how much has been published on the advantages of raising a class of stock that will sell readily and at remunerative prices, that very few would be found still breeding from scrub sires. The class of stock marketed, however, shows that many are yet following this short-sighted plan, and losing money by it, says the National Live Stock Journal. The prices realized at the large markets of the country are evidence of this, and in all probability there will for many years to come be the same occasion for urging a different course. In his annual address before the Iowa Improved Stock Breeders' Association, the President, Hon. John McHugh, stated that in his opinion two-thirds of the farmers in that State were still using scrub or grade sires. Doubtless the same may be said of other States, and it certainly is not a flattering comment on the intelligence of farmers that this is the case. There is a large field among such farmers for work by breeders of improved stock, in setting forth the advantages of a different method. This may be helped by securing the attendance of such men at the Farmers' Institute meetings, at gatherings of breeders where such subjects are discussed, by personal argument, and by the distribution of reading matter on the merits of improved stock, either in the way of securing subscriptions, or by means of specimen copies of live-stock publications. This is a specially favorable time for work in this direction, which may result in personal benefit to the breeder.

Highland Cattle in Wyoming.

When alluding to the improved beef breeds, the bulls of which have been crossed upon the common range cow, the West Highland Scotch bulls seem to have escaped any considerable comment. This may be due to their comparative scarcity in the range country, and the very few of them in use. An inkling of what would be the result from their use on the range stock may be gathered from an account of the experience of Mr. Luke Voorhees, a well known cattle man of Laramie County.

In the summer of 1884 Mr. Voorhees bought a well bred West Highland Scotch bull, and imported him to this country. He placed him among his granger cows on the home ranch in the spring of 1885, and he got calves to nearly every cow he served. Since his importation he has been bred to both the range and domestic cattle, and as a result there are now nearly a hundred of his get on the range. The progeny, in the majority, are almost exact counterparts of the sire—short and heavy, and quartered well down to the hocks. This bull, which gets no feed other than that the pasture affords, weighed this fall, though not in his best form, about 1,400 pounds. Mr. Voorhees says that better cattle could not be wished for this climate; their long and thick hair and great vitality rendering them proof against the cold weather. They are great rustlers, and in the midst of the winter months will be found fat and in good spirits. While the native cattle are standing humped up and benumbed with cold, the Highland bull and his get may be seen either rustling for feed or cavorting around in playful antics. The bulls are very active, and this one has got nearly every cow with calf that he has served. Mr. Voorhees has a heifer from him, three years old next spring, which calved last spring; she is now being milked, and is proving herself to be an excellent dairy as well as a beef animal.

The only objection that Mr. Voorhees or anyone else can consistently offer, is that the cattle make slow growth. Although they are in good form and fat enough to market when four years old, yet they are not heavy enough—adding a great deal of flesh in the fifth year. The heifers mature early enough, however, though the slow beef growth might be considered a detriment, as people are marketing cattle now-a-days long before their prime; but were cattle men to wait, as they did in the earlier days of the business, until their steers reached the fifth year, the grade Highlander would show up with immense weight and splendid form, and their meat, we are told, would bring a price far above the average.

Fattening Too Much.

The brilliant essayist, Macaulay, long ago wrote that prize sheep and cattle were fit only for candles, and prize essays were usually only fit to light them. With only the first part of this antithesis we have now to do. Macaulay lived before the era of electric lights and kerosene, when candles were the common means of illumination. The fat of the beef or the sheep was quite generally worth more per pound than any other part of the animal. Its use for candle making gave it a value which reacted in other directions. The sturdy, hard-working men and women of forty or fifty years ago, ate, relished and digested much fatter meats of all kinds than do most people now. Fat is not easily digested. To a dyspeptic who takes little exercise this is a serious objection. To the healthy worker slowness of digestion may be a positive advantage. The food "stands by" longer.

The objection to too much fat is stronger in this country than in Europe. A larger proportion of our people live in cities and are employed in sedentary occupations than in most European countries. Besides, our fattened meats are mainly corn fed, and the fat made from corn is more than usually hard and indigestible. Corn-fed pork is harder to digest than either beef or mutton, and is therefore the favorite standby of men working in the woods in cold weather. Lumbermen if offered beef or mutton complain of these excellent foods as too light and unsubstantial, as did the Israelites of the Manna in their journey through the wilderness.

The evils of excessive fatness are increased by the policy ormerly prevalent of keeping animals in a condition of semi-starvation during their growing stage, and only giving them full rations when the fattening period begins. The frame of such animals is coarse and muscular, over which is piled an excessive amount of fat. Alternating full and scant rations, instead of making a streak of fat and a streak of lean, as the story runs, is much more likely to pile more fat upon the insides of the animal, and especially on the intestines. This fat in modern times is far less valuable than formerly. Even the fat of the hog has lost much of its former value, because of the competition of preparations of cotton seed oil and other adulterations. Fat of beeves gets now most of its commercial valne from its abuse in making fraudulent butter. That of the sheep is not so well adapted to this purpose, and is less valuable.

The very best meats are grown on animals kept in a thriving, growing condition from their birth until they are killed. They need not at any time be noticeably fat, but rather only in good thrifty condition. Since the chemistry of feeding is now better understood, farmers have learned to make lean meats by feeding larger proportions of albuminous foods and less of carbonaceous nutrients. There is no excuse now for keeping animals in unthrifty condition in order to prevent excessive fatness. If the food is properly varied even breeding stock can always be well fed, and with greater profit than can come from poor feeding. Wheat bran, oats and cotton seed meal, from which as much as possible of the oil has been extracted, will be used as substitutes for corn and corn meal in the feeding ration for animals not intended for speedy slaughter.

In Favor of Jersey Cattle.

At a conference of dairy farmers, held a few weeks ago, Mr. S. T. Floyd, a Maine farmer, read a paper giving his reasons for preferring the Jersey as follows:

First, they are easier to raise than other breeds. The calves take kindly to drinking their rations, wean easily, are good pets and good feeders. They are intelligent and pretty, so it is a pleasure to care for them; children like to feed them. They come to maturity young, coming into the dairy at from twenty-two to twenty-four months old; they will pay their way from that time on. I tested one at two years old that had given milk four months, and she made 8¾ pounds of butter in seven days. Another good quality of the Jersey cow is, she goes dry but a short time; while other breeds require from two to three months' vacation from the dairy, the Jersey will hardly take as many weeks. I have already remarked that the calves are good feeders, so are the cows; always possessed of good appetites, and about as good as sheep to clear the weeds and foul grasses ont of a pasture. Mine was overrun with buttercups and ox eyed daisies when I began with Jerseys, and now June and July can only show close cropped grass.

Again, the Jersey will bear more good feed, convert it profitably into butter, and hold out longer than any breed I know. My nearest neighbor has one sixteen years old that has always been fed what farmers call "high," and now, twelve months since her last calf, is giving 27½ pounds of good, rich milk daily. But the most important reason why I prefer the Jersey is the good quality of her butter. She may thrive well on our hard and rocky pastures, stand our cold winters, or high pressure feeding, still if she will not leave a margin when her product is sold, and the bills are paid, she will soon grow out of favor with the hard-working and economical farmer. It is really the great question which breed will pay best. We do not keep cows and our wives do not make butter for pleasure, but for pay, and the cows that will produce the most at the least cost, as a class, are indisputably the Jerseys. Neither is quantity all. Quality has much to do with the income of a dairy. Ten cents a pound will make quite a difference in summing up the receipts of even a small dairy for a year. Yet this difference is often made by consumers who know the difference between Jersey and other grades of butter. This is no guess, but has often come under my own observation, and it is, in truth, where the pay comes in.

Dairying, like all other farming, is subject to close competition, and the accepted law of the "survival of the fittest" applies to it as to all other progressive things, and to no branch of it more than to the cow; therefore we can only afford to keep the best. The market now seems to demand new butter, in lumps and in cakes, in cold weather and hot. Even dog-days give no respite and no release from the demands of the best paying customers, and from no class of cows can it be furnished to satisfaction except the Jerseys. It may possibly be made with others, by the aid of ice, but by the time it gets to market it will hardly be presentable to the fastidious city customer. If one has a herd of Jerseys he need have no fears, and he can keep the trade both summer and winter, and that is one secret of a good price.

Feeding Cattle Economically.

Not every farmer attaches the proper meaning to feeding with economy. The idea with some, judging from the appearance of their cattle, is that economy consists in getting their stock through the winter on the least food possible, without regard to their growth meantime or their condition in the spring, says the National Live-Stock Journal. The few dollars saved in the quantity of food consumed may be lost many times by this method, for it is much less expensive, as has often been stated heretofore, to preserve the flesh that has been put on, than to replace the weight after it has been lost for lack of sufficient food and care. Some regard it as economy to leave the stock to depend on what can be got from the meadows for weeks after heavy frosts have taken nourishment from the grass and cut short its growth. This is poor economy in two ways, for not only does the stock lose flesh, but the meadows are injured by having the grass eaten off so close that the roots are unprotected during the winter, and having been injured, the next season's yield is reduced. There is more money lost in this way by many a farmer than he has any idea of.

Another way in which it is quite commonly seen that money is lost in feeding, is by throwing the hay, and the grain, too, in many cases, on the ground. Much corn is left uneaten by the cattle, either because of the mud and filth on it, or on account of its shelling off so they cannot gather it up. Where hogs are kept in the same yards, some of the waste is prevented, but it is better economy to feed in troughs and racks, where the cattle can eat up clean what is given them. In some sections it may be considered that the value of hay and grain will not warrant the outlay required to provide better feeding facilities, but such cases are only exceptions to the rule that money is lost by wasting food.

There is no question that cattle consume less food when provided with comfortable quarters in stables, for then less is required to keep up bodily warmth, and a larger proportion of food goes to make growth and flesh. There are some cattlemen who claim, as shown by their contributions to The Journal, that their cattle have done better when allowed to remain in yards protected only by open sheds, the idea being that cattle under such condition are more healthy and vigorous that when confined in stables, where they do not have the same fresh air and abundant exercise. Under such circumstances it is not usual to find that a correct estimate of the valne of the food consumed can be formed, and this lacking, the comparative expense can not be correctly ascertained. While in overcrowded, badly-ventilated quarters, cattle will not thrive so well, it can hardly be justly claimed that in well-arranged stables where the stock have an abundance of light and fresh air and an opportunity for daily exercise, they will be less healthy than when protected from storms and cold only by open sheds or stacks. Those who have tried the two plans mentioned, in a systematic way, could interest many in the same line of business by giving a detailed account of their experience, with the conclusions arrived at.

There is money to be saved, too, in the way the cattle are fed, as this relates to the kind of food or combinations of it to produce best results. Much fodder and hay is wasted on the farm, that if cut up and mixed with bran or meal or oil cake would be eaten readily, and go far towards making up the quantity required to carry the herd through the winter in good condition.

Common Sense.

If there is any one who can upon occasion put more solid sense of the sort usually styled "common" into a few words than an editor whose ordinary utterances may possibly be upon some plane necessitating particularity in choice of words and observance of nicety in grammatical usage we do not know the man. Editor Sanders of the Breeder's Gazette, an indispensable journal to cattle breeders, by the way, had this to say a few days ago, and it may well be read and assimilated by the thousands to whom it will go in this paper:

The senior editor of The Gazette as he pens this article recalls a bit of personal experience that forcibly illustrates this point. Away back, as far as the writer's distinct personal recollection reaches, there lived in the backwoods of Central Ohio a young man who, for the sake of the story, we will call John Smith. He was industrious, intelligent, and frugal. He married a young woman who lived on an adjoining farm, and soon after, with no capital except good health, intelligence, frugality, and industry, they bought on credit a piece of land in the woods—enough to make a small farm. They went to work on it, as thousands of other young couples have done, to clear up, to build a cabin, and to make a home. But there was one thing conspicuous in the methods of this young couple from the very beginning, and which distinguished them from the great average—they resolved to do nothing but what they could do well. The team work of the farm was done with mares, but they were unusually good ones; they were always in good condition, strong enough to plow deep, or draw a good load, and nearly every year each mare raised a good foal, and these also were well taken care of all the year round. He commenced with but little stock, but everything was the best that could be obtained, and the effort for still better was constantly kept up. And it soon came to be recognized that John Smith's horses and cattle and sheep and pigs were always in good condition, and were better than those of his neighbors. Scrub methods had no place in John Smith's management.

It seemed almost miraculous that while crops in the neighborhood generally were frequently very light, and sometimes almost total failures, those on John Smith's farm were always good, apparently regardless of the season. The secret lay in the fact that whatever he did he did well. His seed was carefully selected, his ground was thoroughly prepared, the crops were well tilled, the manure was carefully saved and "put where it would do the most good," the stock was all well cared for, the crops were all safely put away in good condition, fences were kept up, the weeds were kept down; in short, neither scrub methods nor scrub stock had, with him, any place.

His wife was animated by the same spirit. Her butter always brought the highest price; her jeans and flannels, spun and woven by herself, were the best that could be found in the country; their maple sugar and syrup were marvels of whiteness and exquisite in flavor, and from the country fairs each year a large share of blue ribbons were taken home by this energetic couple. Indeed, so remarkable was their prosperity, and so frequent were their triumphs at the shows, that it excited general remark; and envious, less prosperous neighbors would say: "There is no use taking anything to the fair; John Smith and his wife will get the prizes on whatever they take anyhow."

But they prospered, and their prosperity was due solely to the fact that the "scrub" never found a place anywhere on that farm, and by the time John Smith had fairly reached the prime of life he had amassed a handsome competence which stood him in good stead, for just about that time he was stricken down with inflammatory rheumatism, and from that day to this he has been a helpless cripple; but he had saved enough to make him comfortable and independent for the remainder of his life.

There is little difference in the market values of the different staple feeding substances. The values seem to adapt themselves in some way to the intrinsic usefulness of each, unless there is some special scarcity or abundance which causes a temporary difference, and even then the market values soon adjust themselves to a level with that of the particular one. The best feed for a cow is, by general consent of those who keep cows, made up as follows: Cornmeal and wheat bran in equal parts, oatmeal two parts, and bran one part, with good clover hay cut and wetted and mixed with the meal.

W. P. Hinshaw a prominent landowner and dairyman of Two Rock, Oregon, purchased a full-blood imported bull of M. D. Hopkins this week. This bull cost a good deal of money, but it is money well invested when a dairyman buys the best for the purpose of improving his herd. This bull belongs to the "Crnikshank" family, noted for its milk producing qualities, Mr. Hinshaw has set an example that many other dairymen in this region would be benefitted by following. Cows from fine milk strains eat no more than scrubs, and besides giving a great deal more milk, when they get old and are sold for beef, the owner receives money in proportion to weight. Mr. Hopkins has imported some fine cattle, and we are glad to see that they are appreciated by the successful and intelligent breeders and dairymen.

To Subscribers.

Should this paper be received by any subscriber who does not want it, or beyond the time he intends to pay for it, let him not fail to write us direct to stop it. A postal card (costing one cent only) will suffice. We will not knowingly send the paper to anyone who does not wish it, but if it is continued, through the failure of the subscriber to notify us to discontinue it, or some irresponsible party being requested to stop it, we shall positively demand payment for the time it is sent.

The New Volume.

This is the initial number of volume XIV, six months more completing the seventh year of the paper.

It is long enough to fully establish its stability, and we are pleased to announce that there are bright prospects ahead.

The BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN is in better condition than ever before. The staff has been strengthened until we are well satisfied with every member of it.

Miss A. L. Wilson is the business manager, and from the ability she has shown the past six months, there is little question that the experience gained will add to her capacity. Heretofore the business department has been grossly mismanaged, so much so as to greatly annoy our subscribers, entailing severe losses on the proprietors. Miss Wilson has cleared away the major part of the troubles, and we can assure subscribers and advertisers that everything will be done by her to avoid just cause for complaint.

"Rod," "Trap," and "The Kennel" are still under the charge of H. H. Briggs, and it is almost supererogatory for us to say that he is as competent to fill the place as any man in the whole country. We must acknowledge that Mr. Briggs has a tact beyond ours for obtaining correspondents in his department.

While we have several who "write horse" admirably, the trouble is that they are so busy with their own affairs that we cannot solicit them for more than an occasional screed.

A short time ago we secured the services of A. P. Waugh as an assistant in the horse department, and we can assure our readers that we are much gratified therewith. Mr. Waugh was a former resident of California, and since he left here he has made the circuit of the world, witnessing racing in nearly every country, and is thoroughly conversant with newspaper work, having been engaged in it for the last twenty years. Not only that, as he has been employed on the eastern turf journals and is peculiarly well fitted for the position he occupies.

We are averse to making promises, preferring to stand on the record already obtained, though there is work on the trestle board which when carried out, we think will be a valuable feature of the paper. We have been urgently solicited to finish the second volume of Horse Portraiture, and have another edition of the first volume issued. We may do that, in order to correct what we now consider wrong instructions. When the first volume was published, more than twenty years ago, we held to many of the old practices which are thrown aside, and in our opinion replaced by a far better system. We intend, however, to present the results of our latest experiments with tips, and also what has followed other changes in training horses. We thank subscribers and others for the support given, and trust that there will be a continuation of their favors.

It may not be out of place to call the attention of advertisers to the advantages which the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN presents.

The main support is from men who are in circumstances to purchase, and there are few breeders of horses on the Pacific Slope whose names are not found in the mailing list. To those may be added breeders of cattle, and other domestic animals, "business men" and gentlemen who have a penchant for the sports of flood and field.

Master Joe.

In mentioning correspondents it will not do to let our latest escape without special commendation. Those who read our communication in the paper of last week signed Daniel Joseph McCarty, had the head line been wanting would have thought it was the production of a regular turf correspondent or place of a boy fourteen years. A succinct and comprehensive statement of the campaign and we congratulate Master Joe on his entrance into literary circles. We were not aware of the prenomen until the letter was published and having always considered him a namesake of ours never having addressed him by any other name. Shall adhere to the middle one. We are somewhat partial to the prefix as our grandfather always used that when something was done to meet his approbation.

The Stanford Stake.

It is far from being the intention to let the Stanford stake lapse as some have imagined, and the reasons for not closing on the first of January is that it was the desire of Capt. N. T. Smith that a trotting association should be organized to take the management of that and other stakes off his hands. Few are aware of the labor that Captain Smith has performed in connection with these stakes, and we do not know of another competent man who had no other interest than a willingness to aid trotting interests who would have accepted the trust. The first letter we wrote on recovery was to Captain Smith in relation to that the National, Junior and Primary stallion stakes. Since then we have learned that Captain Smith is at Paso Robles Springs. The call for a meeting to organize the Pacific Coast Trotting Breeders Association will be in the next number of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN.

Noonday.

This horse, the latest importation in the shape of a trotting stallion to California, we saw a few days ago, and though expecting to see a fine horse, as so good a judge as Sam Gamble would not be likely to bring an inferior specimen of the famous Kentucky trotter, he exceeds our expectations.

He is so well formed, so evenly balanced and so handsome withal that it is difficult to say in what particular point he excels. A handsome color, too, a dark seal brown with a small star and one white foot to relieve the dark shade. His breeding is unexceptionally good, being by Wedgewood, his dam Noontide by Harold, his granddam Midnight, (the dam of Jay-Eye-See) by Pilot Jr., and his third dam Twilight by Lexington.

His dam has a record of 2:20½, and his sire a record of 2:19. It may be called a remarkable pedigree, closely allied to Maud S., Jay-Eye-See and Nutwood, with a not very distant relationship to Patron.

Death of Piercy Wilson.

Although anticipated for some time, the death of Piercy Wilson was so sudden that the shock was nearly as severe as if he had been stricken in full health. He bore his long suffering for many years with manly resolution and, until the past two years, had hopes of recovery. Before then, though occasionally despondent, he did not give up, cheered by the hopes of returning East, and presumably to England. Literary ventures which he depended upon for the means to make the journey failed, and from that time he lost heart. He would not listen to receiving aid from his friends, and though a few of those would cheerfully have advanced whatever sum was necessary to carry out his wishes. We spoke to him twice in relation to raising the funds, confident that an application to one of them would be all that was required as it was in our power to secure enough for the expenses to New York. All the arguments we could offer did not change his resolution, and strong as the desire was, the sturdy independence of his character resented the thought of what he termed an eleemosynary contribution. There were occasions when he would regain some of his former elasticity of spirits, though as he felt his strength failing from day to day it was rare to see the old time smile and never the hearty outbursts of laughter he was prone to indulge in over a ludicrous situation or a well told joke.

He was on the regular staff of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN until July 13, 1888, when by the advice of his physician he went to the Springs. We have some doubts of the efficacy of this treatment to a man of Mr. Wilson's habits. Retiring as was his nature he had a few friends which gave him great pleasure to meet, and as nearly his whole life had been spent among exciting scenes the quiet of the country would enhance the gloom which overshadowed him and bring desolation in place of relief. Death came in a way which would have been his choice, in fact when he spoke in relation to it he always signified his desire to make a quick exit from the stage of life.

We append the article on his death which was published in the Call. There are two errors in it, his age being given as 55 years, whereas he was 63 last October He came to California in 1875, accompanying Mark A. Littell and Mrs. Littell, the intention being to bring out a play in which Mrs. Littell was to take a prominent part. He was unusually reticent about his former life. Notwithstanding our close intimacy it was rare that he ever mentioned that part of his previous history which necessitated reference to his family affairs, and the only time he mentioned his wife was in relating a visit to Brighton. We never asked him a question in regard to his affairs before coming to California, as it was evident it was a subject which he desired to avoid. The encomiums we heartily endorse, and there is not a man who enjoyed his friendship who will not add still higher praise.

Laid Down His Pen.

Piercy Wilson, an able and well-known journalist of this city, died suddenly at his home yesterday morning, from an attack of hemorrhage of the lungs. He roomed at the residence of W. A. Schadde, 354 Grove street. When he returned home on Saturday night he made no complaint of being unwell, but on arising at 10 o'clock Sunday, he made some remark about feeling ill. He retired to the bath-room, and a considerable time elapsing without his making his appearance, Mrs. Schadde proceeded to that place, and found Mr. Wilson in a kneeling position with his head on one of his hands. On examination he was found to be dead. The Coroner's office was notified, but an investigation showed that death had resulted from natural causes. The body was subsequently removed to Halstead's undertaking establishment where it now lies.

The deceased was a native of England, and 55 years of age. After resigning a commission in the army in his native country, he came to New York, and became connected with a journal known as the Albion. He was quite successful, and returned to England, leaving his wife and child behind. During his absence, his wife attended a ball given to the Prince of Wales on his visit to the United States, caught cold and died. When Mr. Wilson returned, everything was found broken up and his child was gone. He always thought her dead. He came to California early in the sixties, and easily secured employment on the public journals. He was subsequently appointed dramatic critic for the Chronicle, which position he retained for many years. He was also correspondent for several Eastern journals. In his later years he became the turf editor of the paper mentioned, and was rated highly as an authority on all matters pertaining to the race-track. He was the author of a number of plays, one of which was several years ago produced in one of the London theatres.

In disposition Mr. Wilson was conservative and retiring, but when his friendship was obtained, he was whole-souled and strong in his attachment. As a writer, the articles of the deceased always commanded appreciation, and frequently excited admiration in those who knew him to be the author.

The deceased was a member of the Press Club, and will be buried under its auspices.

Colt Show.

Before receiving intelligence of the movement in Kentucky for a sweepstakes to show stallions and their colts, we had outlined a similar scheme. Ours is to make a sweepstakes of $250, or $500 each, to show at the State Fair, five colts, foals of 1887, and the same number of foals of 1888, the get of one horse, leaving it optional with the owner to exhibit the sire or not. This clause would be to provide for cases where the owner did not want to take the risk of sending the sire. It is well known that Governor Stanford will not permit Electioneer to leave Palo Alto, and making the exhibition of the sire a condition would rule out his get. But in order to give those a chance who wish to show the sire in company with the colts, another stake of $100 each or upwards could be opened for the sires. There are so many crack trotting stallions in California that such a stake should receive so many nominations that it might trouble the State Fair folk to find stable room, but if that be the case the exhibition will be such an attractive part of the programme that some extra expense in making provision will be a remunerative expenditure. Doubtless the society will make a liberal addition and offer premiums to go to the second, third, etc. in the contest. The winner of the stake will have enough to reimburse him. Two hundred and fifty dollars each is the minimum amount, as there will be a good deal of expense entailed. The State Fair, of course, to take the whole management, the nominations to be made to the secretary. Should the society receive this proposition favorably we will have more to say in relation to it. If the State institution does not accept the proposition we feel confident that the Golden Gate will offer inducements.

After writing the above there are good reasons why the Golden Gate would be preferable. The larger number of trotting stallions are owned south of Sacramento, St. Helena, Vallejo, Santa Rosa, Petaluma, Pleasanton, San Mateo, Menlo Park, San Jose, and all points south can reach Oakland with less expense than Sacramento, and in case the show is held in Oakland we will add $200 to the second premium.

Chas. Underhill of Santa Rosa, has sold to Geo. H. Kennedy of the same place, a yearling filly called Acclaim by Three Cheers, dam Rosette. Acclaim is entered for the Futurity Stake at Sheepshead, 1890 and also for the Realization Stake of 1891. The price paid was $500. Colts and fillies by Three Cheers can now find ready sale, Applause and Almont having proved such good ones.

Correction.

We republish a corrected list of the sons and daughters of Electioneer, which have trotted in 2:30. The corrections consist in accrediting Anteeo with the record to which he is entitled, and giving Whips the place he won by filling all the conditions necessary to obtain a record of 2:27½. It is certainly a remarkable showing in many respects. Thirty-eight trotters and one pacer in it, and all but two which have gone below the stipulated figure, twenty-six which have beaten 2:25, and ten with records of 2.20 or better. There has never been the equal of Electioneer as the producer of great speed. He and George Wilkes Wilkes are "tied" in the count of the inner circle, but it must be borne in mind that George Wilkes has to his credit fifty-nine trotters, so that the proportion would be 15 8-10; to take better than 2:25 as a basis, and Wilkes has 30 in 59, whereas Electioneer has 26 in 38; so that to be equal on this score Wilkes should have 40 inside of 2:25. This would not be fair argument if Electioneer was very far behind Wilkes in the number of his get which are entitled to a place, but as it stands it is not far out of the way. There is almost a certainty of getting a trotter when a mare is bred to Electioneer; only one pacer in thirty-nine, whereas George Wilkes has five in sixty-four.

We do not share the opinion of a Kentucky writer who claimed that a stallion should have a black mark for every pacer credited to him, but as that phase of the breeding problem cannot be justly treated in a paragraph the consideration will be deferred.

Perhaps the most remarkable feature is the adaptability to acquire the fast trotting step at an early age. Six from two years to four which have beaten 2:20: viz., Sunol, 2 yrs., 2:18; Bonita, at 4 yrs., 2:18¾; Bell Boy, 3 yrs., 2:19¼. Hinda Rose, 3 yrs., 2:19½; and Anteeo, 4 yrs., 2:19¼. "From strictly running bred dams," Ansel, 2:20; Palo Alto, 2:20¼; Gertrude Russell, 2:23½; Azmoor, 2:24¾; Cubic, 2:28½; Express, 2:29½. Six in 38, and until last year, if our memory be correct, there were 56 foals from thoroughbred dams, only 38 of which had been trained at the close of 1887. We would underrate the sense of our readers to take up space to elucidate this part of the problem. In the article copied from the Horseman, it was stated that "Ansel, whose 2:20 is the fastest by a trotter from a strictly running bred dam, and Palo Alto, whose 2:20¼ stands next to it." This may be, but when 2:20 and 2:20¼ of two stallions in 38 trained, it is a better showing than is generally made from ten times the number where there are no new thoroughbred crosses. And then again it is not the fastest got by a strictly running bred sire, as Col. Lewis, by Rifleman, trotted in 2:18¾.

But as a further exemplification of the value of near crosses of thoroughbred blood, nine of the 38 have thoroughbred dams or grandams, just one-fourth of the whole, and four of the nine which have trotted in 2:20 or better, This is a feature well worthy of notice. Nine in 38 are due to the near crosses, six from thoroughbred dams, three having thoroughbred grandams. But when the standard is 2:20 or better, we find four in ten—an astonishing appreciation. In the first, there is a shade under 24 per cent., in the second forty per cent of the fast division. Anyone who has sufficient understanding to master the first four rules of "rithmetic," will not require the assistance of Daboll to master the subject.

The following table has been corrected in other respects, typographical errors having been overlooked by the proofreader, or the revise neglected by the compositor.

Anteeo and Whips.

It seems to be a hopeless task to have Anteeo credited with the record he has made. In some way 2:16½ was appended to his name in the Eastern papers and also in the Year Books. In that of last year it was given correctly in the table of great broodmares under his dam Columbine, but the error still remained in the "list" of Electioneer. That it was overlooked in that was not surprising, but that the erroneous time should be given in California is somewhat of a surprise.

In compiling the Palo Alto catalogue for 1888 it was given 2:16½, though in those which preceded it the correct record was given. We called attention to the error when the catalogue was published, and hence a good deal surprised that the wrong time should have been given in the Breeder and Sportsman in a table containing a list of the get of Electioneer which appeared last week. It came from copying from other sources without proper scrutiny. It may appear a trivial matter to those not conversant with trotting, to add a quarter of a second to the record of a horse, but in reality it is of great importance when the change is made from 2:16¼ to 2:16½.

In addition to the error in the record of Anteeo, there is the omission of Whips, due to the same cause. When Whips trotted on the Bay District course in 2:27½, every condition was fulfilled, and if he is not entitled to the record neither is Sable Wilkes to the record of 2:18. Now if we are to be governed by faulty tables published thousands of miles from here, in place of accepting evidence which is presented at home, and in relation to home horses, we will rebel. There is a picture of Anteeo in the office to which we shall append a card whereon in big figures will be 2:16¼.

Pedigree of Waxy.

With the advent of the New Year we have recovered so much that a little slow work can be given. For six weeks we could not write a line. More than that, there was a vigorous blockade against any one coming into the room, and an embargo, as it may be termed, against reading anything that would turn thoughts towards the business of the office. Something of a deprivation at first, as even the daily papers were taboced, but as we resume acquaintance with the brain-children of Fielding, Smollet, and Sir Walter Scott, grasped the whole-souled "Pickwick" by the hand and enjoyed the quips, conceits and shrewd sayings of Sam Weller there was no lack of company. Nearly a blank, however, in what was transpiring in the busy world, and complete ignorance of that portion, the microcosm of horses.

In the last number of the Breeder and Sportsman there was a note, under the above heading, in which was the following sentence: "In all probability we will have all the available information in reference to the genuineness of Waxy's record in time for the next issue of the Breeder and Sportsman."

We have no knowledge who the seeker after the information is, but whoever made the promise is not aware of the task it would be to present evidence satisfactory to those who are so stubbornly opposed to thoroughbred blood in trotters. There is not a reasonable doubt of Waxy being thoroughbred, and there is little question that the fact could be established so as to remove it beyond uncertainty. Many years ago we investigated it far enough to satisfy ourselves of the genuineness of the claim. At that time we were employed on the California Spirit of the Times, and in the back numbers we found a note of the purchase of the mares, and that the purchaser had started with them across the plains for California. Writing entirely from memory it may be that some minor things are forgotten, but as to the main question we have the utmost confidence in the recollection. Mr. Welsh, the purchaser, died on the plains, and the horses were brought here by the men who were assisting him.

There were three thoroughbred mares, one by Lexington, one by Revenue and one by imported Sovereign. They were sold, Mr. Winters getting the Revenue mare, James L. Eoff the Sovereign mare, the purchaser of the Lexington mare we have forgotten. It may be that neither Mr. Winters or Mr. Eoff bought them at the first sale, as that point we cannot recall, though we had several conversations with Eoff, and have an indistinct recollection that the Lexington and Sovereign mares ran a race on Eoff's track. The Revenue mare was Addie C., the dam of Ballot-Box, Connor, Narcola and several others, and her sons and daughters are proving themselves to be producers.

It would be a big job to "hunt up" the evidence presented in the California Spirit, and a man might work a week without discovering all the paragraphs and articles in relation to these mares.

It was a very large sheet then, and never was indexed, and so little care has been taken of the files that many years are missing, and very likely the volumes which were in the office are not there now. On several occasions we had to search for the information wanted in unbound volumes stuck all over a back room, thrust into holes, and so deeply covered with dust that it was evident that they had lain there from the year of publication.

Even after the search had been rewarded by the discovery of a history of the purchase and transfer to California, of the man or men who sold them in Kentucky, the description and sale in San Francisco, as published in our papers, this would not be received as full evidence by those who are determined to follow the steps of the old Scotchman who proudly boasted, "I wunna be convinced." Affidavits would be ruled out as in the case of Arab, when those of the breeder and several others were thrown aside, and more weight given to the testimony of one man who was in a situation wherein he might have been deceived.

Mr. Wallace has an undoubted right to adopt "rules of evidence" for admission into his register, and should he require that when an animal was foaled it should be accurately scanned before a notary public or some high public functionary qualified to administer oaths, who should give a certificate embellished with a broad seal, before he would give it a place, no one could dispute his authority. We do not find fault with Mr. Wallace, in fact, we approve of the stringent rules he has adopted to guard against fraud. But we do reprehend the universal carping, the unfairness, to sum it up in a few words, the contemptible methods employed by those who hesitate at nothing to attain their ends. The breeding of Waxy has never been questioned, if it had it is of little importance. That she was racing-bred must be admitted. Her daughter Alpha was fast enough and game enough to beat the great Joe Daniels in a hard race of five heats, and as her granddaughter Sunol "approximates very closely the form of the thoroughbred," it must have been inherited from her granddam.

We are "tired," to use a slang phrase, of these constant attacks on trotting pedigrees which contain thoroughbred blood, and now we feel like turning it over to the critics.

Prove that Waxy is not a thoroughbred. This should be an easy matter when so many horses are claimed to have been dethroned in that way. Should Governor Stanford (we had written Senator, but prefer the title by which nearly every man, woman and child in California knows him), desire to trace the pedigree of Waxy we will aid him all we can. It is of little consequence to him to prove what is generally conceded, by further testimony merely to settle the quibbles of a few. There are so many illustrations of the value of thoroughbreds in fast trotters nowadays that there is no necessity for going to extra expense and trouble when, as in this case, that is the only bearing it has.

More About Waxy.

Since writing the above we have visited the office and learned from Mr. Waugh what information he obtained regarding Waxy, and the following is a brief statement of the facts:

Mr. Anderson arrived in San Francisco with three fillies, two of which were bays and one a sorrel. The first of these was Addie C., who was purchased by Theodore Winters; the second was Lillie Hitchcock, bought by James Eoff, while the third, the sorrel, was Waxy, who fell to the bid of William Woodward. Mr. Anderson had a public sale of these fillies, the auction place being then known as the Willows, about where 17th Street is now. As Waxy was the only filly of her own color that was sold that day there could be no changing of horses, and consequently the evidence must remain undisputed that Waxy is Waxy.

We also learn that Governor Stanford is taking steps to get all the evidence that is possible to gather at this day. There is plenty now to establish her right to be incorporated in the American Stud Book, and no fair-minded man would gainsay the right under the testimony.

We do not find fault with Mr. Wallace for adopting stringent rules to govern admission in his Stud Book, but we do object to carrying them beyond the letter of the law when thoroughbreds come into a trotting pedigree. In the Arab case the Board of Censors are to blame, and, as we understand it, that also controls the Stud Book.

No one is more ready to acknowledge the great services of Mr. Wallace, and in all our acquaintance, and that is quite extensive, we do not know of another man who would not have succumbed to the obstacles he met, especially at the commencement of his work.

Sales.

Dan McCarty has bought Roy, b h, foaled 1881, by Electioneer, dam Rivulet by Rivoli, 2d dam Bosio by imp. Eclipse, 3d dam Young Gipsey by imp. Mercer, 4th dam Gipsey by American Eclipse, and also the chestnut gelding St. David.

Oscar Mansfeldt, of Oakland, Cal., has sold to W. H. Wilson, of Abdallah Park, Cynthiana, Ky., the brown filly Anteea Wilkes by Guy Wilkes 2:15½, dam Amy Fay by Anteeo Wilkes 2:16¼, second dam by Alexander 2:31¼, third dam by Naubuc, fourth dam Sacramento Maid 2:38.

CHAPTER VIII.

AN INTERRUPTED ROUTINE.

The ordinary Sunday at Myrtle Heights was, as we have already learned, a phenomenally quiet day, when flies could buzz and birds could sing without fear of disturbance. But the one following the arrival of Mr. Selden's guests took on a different aspect, and seemed (to borrow Mrs. Morrison's vigorous expression) to have been planned in the workshop of "old Nick."

For a beginning, things in her own little home had gone awry since daybreak, and promised to keep on in the same way until nightfall. Tom having, through the potent influence of a too liberal amount of whisky, thrown off his superabundant spirits, was now very repentant and decidedly melancholy over his lost opportunity for advancement. Some of the woes that pressed upon him he might have forgotten while sitting with his pipe in the sunshine, had not his wife been ever at hand to remind him of her own and Tommy's wants, and prophesy that they should certainly find themselves a burden on mother unless he looked to it and mended his ways. From which it may be gleaned that although Mary had made up her mind to be good to him she could not rid herself of the idea that these discouraging remarks were a necessity to a conversion. On the principle, I infer, that if one be born with a predilection for going downward tying weights to his feet will help him up.

With these particular views Tom evidently did not sympathize, for he remarked to his mother at the first opportunity:

"What's the good o' ding dongin' a feller all the time. I feel like kickin' myself now; but that's the difference between a man and a woman, a man's satisfied to kick himself, a woman always wants to kick somebody else."

Tom, you see, did not realize that in the eyes of his wife he had fallen from a height.

Of course Mrs. Morrison, albeit a member of the sex condemned for harboring propensities toward indiscriminate castigation, saw immediately the correctness of her son's reasoning—she had not been a mother else—and resolved that to-morrow should behold Tommy clothed anew, even to shoes and stockings. A perfect understanding of her grandson's peculiarities kept her from announcing this resolution, which was well, since the contemplated addition of shoes and stockings might so far have overcome Tommy's discretion, as to have made him add a burst of sobs to the general unpleasantness.

So much, at least, the small community was saved, and Tommy went his way boisterously, rejoicing in the possession of two twenty-five cent pieces, given him by his uncle Frank and George before their departure for Santa Cruz. These he made the mistake of jingling and throwing in the way of his uncle Rob, who, of all the family, was most thoroughly given over to "Auld Nickie Ven" this morning, until he narrowly escaped a shaking.

I think Tommy must have experienced great delight from having been born to a family whose every member assumed the privilege of helping him along the road to well doing. So much and so openly manifested interest could not fail to make an impression. But it is to be feared that Tommy failed in appreciation of the blessings accorded him; at any rate he evened inequalities through the use of a clever tongue that did duty now by calling after Rob as he took the milk pail and went out to milk Bess:

"I know what's the matter with you, Uncle Rob. You're afraid Miss Erl won't look at you now, because the gentlemen's come."

Rob went on doggedly, though, never heeding, and his mother followed, with glad thoughts of the quiet, clean kitchen awaiting her.

Everything was in place as she had left it the night before, and while touching a match to the fire and pulling up the shades she felt some of the customary, philosophical composure returning, and when Erl came in with the usual warm greeting the earth seemed to be turning properly again.

An earth, however, regulated by human moods would never turn long in the right direction, and Mrs. Morrison began to lose her clear grasp of things while watching the young girl take her way to Bess around whose horns she twisted a long spray of wooobine. It was a pretty group they formed, Erl, Rob, Nestor and the gentle Jersey; yet it made the mother's heart ache, for she noted how foolishly animated her son became, and wondered that he could not see how lacking in everything except true friendliness Earl's attentions were.

So wrapped was she in her thoughts while going mechanically through the morning's tasks that Mr. Selden came to the inner door and spoke twice before she heard him.

"I am very sorry, Mrs. Morrison," he said hesitatingly, pushing his eyeglasses with one hand and buttoning and unbuttoning his coat with the other, "but Mr. Wells complains of not feeling quite well."

Instantly, now that her aid was required she became her practical, active self.

"Aches and pains," she said quickly, "aches and pains from trampin' through the wet."

"I think so. It is really unfortunate we have no spirits in the house."

"Don't need 'em," she said with decision. "Hoarhound tea and a good warm bed 'll take off ackes o' that kind a good deal sooner than whiskey, and leave nothin' after it."

"Oh, but it is such frightfully bitter stuff, Auntie Morrison," said Erl, preceding Rob with his pail of foaming milk.

"Yes, and the gentleman is not in bed, he is dressed and about. I thought perhaps Robert might go down to the hotel and get something."

"Dressed and about," repeated Mrs. Morrison, ignoring altogether the latter part of Mr. Selden's remark. "If that aint just like a man. Where have you got him? In that front hall I suppose, that haint so much as had the window open this morning, and no fire for dear knows how long. Pet you just light up the fire in the sittin' room, and Rob run across and bring me a handful o' hoarhound out o' the back yard."

Erl sped away and Rob began to mutter something about Sunday and every other day "gittin' to be jest alike," but was silenced by a look from his mother that made him forget all lesser things than the immediate necessity for hoarhound.

Mrs. Morrison having thus declared herself mistress of the situation, Mr. Selden took himself back to his guests thinking that after a little while, perhaps, Richard and he would saddle the horses and ride over to Lorenzo. There is nothing more deceptive that the silent acquiescent man; he seemingly yields to argument while resolving on future operations, and leaves you none the wiser.

However it might affect the others, Philip was many degrees more comfortable in front of the sitting room fire. For after all the season was spring, not summer, and the night damps were yet heavy and chill.

He was in that half feverish, half drowsy state which made the mere snapping of the wood fire and its warm glow on books and pictures soothing and grateful. Dick's rallying and Mr. Selden's prescriptions produced no further effect than a slow movement of the lips intended for a smile, but failing to reach the proper point, and when they took themselves off to breakfast he settled back in his chair and tried napping. As often falls out though in such cases the intention was easier than the accomplishment, and a slight tap on the door which announced somebody's interest was a healthful diversion. He made as much haste as possible to open it, and at once forgot his aching shoulder in contemplation of Erl's bright face.

"I am sorry to disturb you," she said, turning her beautiful eyes full upon him, "but Auntie Morrison insists that you must drink this," holding up a Chinese bowl of steaming liquid.

"Have you? Then I shall follow suit, even though it were hemlock."

She came in and he closed the door.

"It's hot," he said, after the first sip.

"I know it is, that is one virtue. Would you—would you like me to go out?"

"No, Miss Selden, no. If you do I must surely drop down dead after the very next taste of this Macbeth draught. Do you fancy it is cool enough now?"

"Almost," she answered, taking up her favorite position at the window, outside of which stood Nestor begging in his pathetic dog fashion to be noticed.

"Please turn your back, Miss Selden," said Philip resolutely.

There was a short silence, then he came and showed her the empty bowl.

"You are very good," she said, taking possession of it, "but how warm and uncomfortable you look."

"I am," he said, in a would-be tragical tone, wiping his silky, blonde moustache, and noting how the light brought out the brown tints in her dark hair. "You surely are not going away now?"

"Oh, yes, but in about an hour I shall bring you some toast."

"An hour! I'm really a wretched fellow to leave alone when I do not feel well, Miss Selden. You see I have a mother and sister."

"Then it will be unbearable for you to-day," said Erl honestly, "for I heard papa and Mr. Foote plan a ride. Perhaps I had better ask them to stay here." She moved quickly toward the door.

"Not for a thousand worlds, Miss Selden," said Philip, wondering what Dick would think if he heard him. "It would be unpardonably selfish to spoil their whole day. If you can manage to look in upon me once in a while and tell me how many of these fishing things it will be safe to handle I think I will pull through."

"I will certainly do the best I can," said Erl, as she closed the door.

Her timidity of yesterday had, in a measure, worn away, and the wonderful free-masonry that unites two people whose ages are close together (Philip was only four years older than she) operated to form a mutual ground of communion. If, under this, hidden from both by its subtle quality, ran the deeper, more magnetic current whose business it is to join souls—whether souls will the union or not—it was no more, as yet, than a sensation of complete happiness and an urgent desire for each other's presence.

Large natures, though, never yield readily to selfish claims, and Erl went about her duties as regularly as if no active little current were all the time inventing excuses to permit her to look in upon Philip. From large experience she had learned that new members in a household meant added labor for the one who managed it, and without stopping to question, or to discuss, she did so much, and performed it with such deftness that Mrs. Morrison's tasks were reduced to their usual dimensions; and knowing how the matron's heart was attached to the Sunday lecture she must lose to-day, it only seemed just to spend the chief part of the morning with her. I am not sure, but that this might even have lengthened itself out into the major part of the day had not Mrs Morrison interposed,

"Come Pet," she said, settling herself by the kitchen window with her Bible and spectacles. "Come Pet, you've done done enough for me now. Just look in and see if the gentleman wants anything in the way o' tea and toast, and then take a bit o' rest yourself. If he is easy you need not trouble to come back."

Philip did not need anything just then, he said, but some company, and before Erl could be gone, had she so desired, he began questioning her about the fishing apparatus in the room. The passion she entertained for this recreation manifested itself clearly in her replies, and Philip's delight in her knowledge of his favorite sport was not to be measured by a small compass.

Together they reached down from a snug corner closet with glass doors box after box of flies and leaders, and ridding the table of its load of books, spread the artificial insects out for inspection.

The small English flies, since grown so popular among California fishermen, were not then well known, and this collection showed a motley variety of gaudy, heavy affairs, elephantine in dimensions and pretentions in tying.

Erl from her outdoor life was fairly posted in regard to the insect world, and joined heartily in Philip's laughter over some of the most pronounced specimens before them.

"I have just such a lot," he said, eyeing a colossal jungle-cock. "And what is worse, spent about three years in using them. Dick set me straight. He's a rare hand with a rod."

"I think these would please him better, then," said Erl, taking from her writing desk a small tin box which with its contents, had been presented to her by an Englishman who had accepted their hospitality for two or three days the summer before.

She took of the lid and drew out several exquisitely tied, wee flies, and placed them on the table beside the larger ones.

"David and Goliath," said Philip, laughing. "Yes, these are right. You must let me replace the worn ones before I go back. What do you think of a trout's ability to detect differences in flies?"

"I have thought so much about it that my conclusion is, I know nothing," answered Erl, taking out two old casts and examining them. "Shortly after these new flies came I had an experience that would almost daunt any one. There was a small brown fly on the water, and my cast, in consequence, was made up of two hackles and a turkey brown, and with it I fished until hope, patience and everything but temper deserted me, and not a trout could I coax up. In a sheer spirit of wantonness I took off that cast, and put on one of three Yellow-Sallys, and from that time until the shadows began to fall my luck was extremely good. At this hour came a cessation; I went back to my brown cast and my luck returned. Do you suppose the light had anything to do with it? It was a very sunny day, and I fancied afterward that perhaps the brown flies took on too much red in the brightness, and that the yellow ones appeared darker than they were."

"But were there any yellow flies about?"

"Not that I could see, and papa and I had been roaming the woods days and days in search of botanical specimens, so it would seem I could not have missed them."

"It was a curious experience; though, I expect all fishermen have had at least one to match it. I have often wished I could be a trout under somebody's flies for just ten minutes, so I could answer one or two questions intelligently. Did you notice the shape of the fly on the water—the natural fly?"

"Yes, and under the microscope it was not very like either, though it leaned just a little to the yellow sally."

"It has always seemed to me," said Philip, expressing an idea freely to Erl that he would never have dared own before Dick and his other fishing friends. "It has always seemed to me that size and form have much more to do with the luring qualities of a fly than color, because light, and a medium like water might affect a particular shade very markedly, but form, even though magnified is still form, and would be found to retain its chief characteristics. Of course, I do not suppose recklessness would be a good thing in regard to either, but my leanings are toward form."

"While I, you see, argued from the opposite premise, and thought color responsible for my good luck and bad. I was even reckless. It appears almost impossible to see from any but an individual standpoint. Color always impresses me, and, naturally I thought it must impress trout."

"Perhaps it would—the artistic ones," said Philip, with a meaning look that brought a swift wave of color to Erl's cheeks. She recovered quickly, however, and said:

"The remark you made about the possibility of form being magnified would seem to be an argument for small flies."

"Oh, that's a favorite thought of mine," said Philip, balancing a huge red and white coachman in his fingers. "I believe all the arguments are against large flies excepting for the very roughest of water. Once in awhile on a lake when the surface is all broken up into waves trout will take large flies with avidity, but the very next day let a calm fall and they will run from them. Why imagine a great affair like this coming down on the water. If I were a trout it would frighten me to death."

"But you are not, you see," said Erl, smiling, "and there is just what ails all our theories. It is so amusing to me in reading an angler's book to come upon passages written with just as much assurance as though the writer were a trout, and perfectly familiar with the water medium."

"A chance for a very bad pun," said Philip, "but out of respect to my angling brethren I forbear. Another thing I never could see any sense in, was the argument that flies for a certain locality, must be exact counterparts of the flies on the water. Naturally the supposition is that trout will take what they know and like best; but how can any one tell that a change might not be desirable? If trout only took what they knew a great many would run the risk of starving, for in every locality flies are apt to change from year to year, as the conditions that tend to their production vary."

"Then you think flies made up after my fancy pattern are just as good as those copied from natural models?"

"Pardon me, I did not say that, and I could not, because in imitating nature man is so often a bungler that even with a good pattern he goes astray, and to think up an original insect is something of an art, for the reason that the head of one fly and the wings of another do not go well together. Once in a while there comes along a clever, naturalist fisherman who can evolve a well-proportioned and taking insect from his brain, but the reverse holds. And trout sometimes evince great cleverness in such matters. Is this the gut you use?" taking up a thread and running it through his fingers.

"Yes; it is not very satisfactory though, and many of my leaders break at the knots."

"That's because the gut is worn in tying. This is too heavy for the little flies, Do you know anything about knots?"

"Not very much. I manage to get my flies on, but am quite ignorant about tying leaders."

"Some day may I have the pleasure of teaching you how?" asked Philip, looking at her long fingers.

"Yes, indeed. And now, Mr. Wells, since you intend to be kind to me I shall be kind to you and put away this litter, for you must rest on the lounge until dinner."

Erl was moved to this sensible course by noting that Philip's eyes were too bright and his cheeks too flushed for perfect health. And from time to time he moved his shoulders in a way which testified that the morning's draught had not fully done its work.

"But you will go away again if I do," he said, looking up appealingly.

"Certainly," she answered, helping him replace the books and boxes.

"I'll agree on one condition; that you sing something like you did last night, before you go."

"That will be a pleasure," she said brightly, opening the doors into the next room and seating herself at the organ.

One after another she sang the sweet, old hymns, so hallowed with associations for us all; and Philip listened and likened her to St. Cecilia, and thought many other things too romantic and too extravagant for a steady, grave pen to chronicle.

PETRONELLA.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 1, 1889.

The French Angler.

During the siege of Paris, in spite of the shells that sang overhead and of the Prussian sentinels on the lookout for a mark, a great many of these bold sportsmen risked their lives outside the city fortifications, and went taquiner le goujon on the banks of the Seine. These are the enthusiastic anglers who count the days and nights to the opening day, and who pass the off season in a state of settled melancholy. These are the men who know every inch of the river's bank, and the holes in which the quarry lies hid, and who stand motionless hour after hour, holding their breath, heedless of rain, wind and sun, half mesmerized by the gentle bobbing of the float on which their eyes are fixed. They will pass the night under a haystack in order to secure at the first streak of dawn a good place where some legendary bite had occurred and which they have carefully ground baited over night. Though a careful man, the French fisherman never sells the contents of his basket; he fishes for his family; and the proudest hour of the day, second only to the rapturous moment of capture, is when he sees the "friture" placed upon the table. The gudgeon, the roach, the eel, the tench, the barbel, the carp, the perch, and the pike are all welcome to the angler's paste or maggot, for fly fishing he considers frivolous, and as requiring a skill that is out of place in so serious a pursuit. But although the net has almost swept the French rivers clear of fish, it is against the modest angler that the law has fulminated its edicts. The fisherman may not make use of more than one line, and may only have one hook at the end of that line; he may not put his rod on the ground, but must hold it in his hand; he is bound to leave the river at sunset and may not begin to fish till sunrise.

TRAP.

A Straight Hundred.

Ohio, not satisfied with the number of Presidential candidates it has elected, on Christmas Day in the person of Mr. Al Bandle stepped in and in an apparently easy manner, defeated the world famous shot. Captain A. H. Bogardus, and in doing so broke the world's shooting record by scoring 100 live birds straight, to the Captain's almost equally remarkable record of 95. Between thirteen hundred and fifteen hundred lovers of the sport witnessed the shooting, and acted very impartially in applause, crediting the champion, Bogardus, when a good shot was made, equally as well as the Cincinnati wonder.

The birds were but fair as to strength of wing in the main, in fact, poor, but among the birds sprung there were some good hustlers. Poorer birds have been sprung, and Cincinnati's record is the best under any established club-rule ever made. It has never been equalled, and stands to-day as the only straight, strictly legitimate score on record. Had the birds been good the prospects are that the form Bandle was shooting in would have landed him where he did. He resorted to his second barrel in the majority of cases where it was not at all necessary, his only object apparently being to make sure and make good his promise made some years ago, that if he shot at the trap long enough he would some day score a straight hundred live birds from English traps. He has done it, and the record made is likely to stand for many years to come. There is certainly nothing of the nervous man about him, and if one defeats him he must do so by merit of better judgment and knowledge of the shotgun. Bogardus, the father of trap shooting, was surprised from the twentieth bird on, and finished with a score that, made against any other man, would be looked upon as phenomenal. Though fifty-six years of age, it is doubtful if even to-day he has an equal in the country.

When he hits his bird with the first barrel he never hesitates at the score, but steps away, knowing well his bird is sufficiently hit to be gathered in bounds safely without resorting to his second barrel. Pigeon shooters that have not witnessed a shooting match for many years were present yesterday to see the world's record beaten. The shooting in detail was:

Denotes resorted to second barrel to kill.

Bogardus shot a 12-gauge L. C. Smith gun, hammerless, 7 lb. 12 oz. in weight, and shot four drams American wood powder in his first barrel, 1⅛ oz. No. 8 shot in first and 1⅛ oz. No. 7 in second, backed up with 3¼ drams Laflin and Rand Orange Lightning powder. Bandle shot the same make of gun, 10 gauge, and used, first barrel, four drams wood powder, second, four drams Laflin and Rand "F. F. F, extra" powder, No. 7. shot.

Goose Shooting.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—I believe I have on former occasions said that about the only shooting we have in this vicinity worth mentioning is dove shooting in the summer with the thermometer at about 90 or 95 degress, and goose shooting in November and December, at a somewhat lower temperature, though generally not cold enough to make it uncomfortable.

As a matter that may interest some of your readers, I will give a brief outline of our last goose hunt, and then the more fortunate of our brother sportsmen can congratulate themselves on the good fortune that places them in a better game country, and perchance sympathize with us for the misfortune of being planted in a wild country, and yet one so barren of game.

One or two good bags of geese having been made this season, my friend H. and I were anxious to try our luck, more particularly as I wanted to test the killing power of an 8-guage, and also to try my new hammerless 10-guage—both Parker guns. While H. was also desirous of knowing just the extreme limit at which his 10th 10-guage (also a Parker), could be counted on, so it is quite evident we were equal to trying long shots, and taking almost every chance that offered in order to ascertain the range of our guns.

Starting from Walla Walla in the evening we reached Blalock Station on the O. R. & N. railroad at 11:30 P. M., and as the only individual we could discover was a rather sleepy railroad man, our chances for securing a wagon or horses to convey us to our destination seemed a most problematical event. At any rate, I carried among my other things and guns, a letter of introduction to a gentleman who would probably help us to the full extent of his ability in securing some kind of transportation, so the next thing to be done was to find him, and as there are only about 3 or 4 houses in that entire hamlet, it seemed an easy enough task to accomplish.

Our first attempt was not in the right direction, for in response to a prolonged and rather vigorous rapping, a female voice in husky tones answered that M. lived in the other house. Thither we wended our way, dreading at any moment to insert our calves in the ever ready and widely opened jaws of some hungry canine. But we didn't. So we knocked again—and again—and when we did gain admittance, our informant calmly told us that the gentleman whom we sought was over there at the identical place we proposed making our headquarters. Furthermore, there was not a buss, cart, wagon, or in fact any animal or conveyance that we could secure, purchase or hire that would carry us out, so there's the dilemma.

H. looked at me, and I looked at H., and we both said simultaneously, "what's to be done?" when he calmly replied, "why let us walk out, its only 6 or 7 miles." Said I, "What's the use of getting out there if we have no decoys." Quoth he: "Why, let us take them and our guns on our backs, then we will have the morning shooting." That was irrefutable, so I, though very loth, acquiesced. Accordingly we took our guns, ammunition and 10 to 20 card board decoys each, and off we started, leaving Blalock at about 12:30 A. M.

Our road lay through a deep canyon along a dim trail, at any rate dim on a cloudy though moonlight night; but on we plodded, our guiding star being the anticipation of crumpling the wary honker within a few hours.

All things have an end, so the canyon had a summit; though three miles up a steep hill with decoys, guns and ammunition drag themselves into so many leagues before they are covered. On arriving at the top my friend conceived the brilliant, though not quite novel idea, of taking a "cut off" as the now plainly demarked road was not in his judgment leading us to our destination and the feeding ground of the predestined geese, so we abandoned the winding (?) road (I with a sigh, for I've done that before) and struck boldly out across the prairie with buoyant hearts though somewhat heavy loads, but pluck, at any rate, equal to facing a cayote should one show himself.

We walked and tramped, first to the southeast, then to the southwest. We marched along in almost every direction, yet alas! the house we assiduously looked for appeared not in the gloom. Besides all this, several innocent though misleading hay stacks enticed us out of our course, and yet the friendly smoke stack did not bob up serenely, though we must have plodded on and on at least ten to fifteen miles. At any rate we won't quibble about the distance, hours came and went, and so did we. Hours were made for slaves and we were making slaves of ourselves. See! When at last my sturdy companion espied in the distance what to him appeared a house, so instead of yelling in tragic words, "A sail! a sail!!! we merely said, "We hope to the Lord it is a shack." Unfortunately a broad belt of recently ploughed land intervened, but what is a mile or so of rough walking after hours of uncertainty. Pshaw! we just skimmed over that field, and then the chase commenced, for although we walked straight for the house, still it seemed to recede in proportion as we advanced, until at length we saw a light in the window. Then we launched forward and fairly ran that house down, reaching it at about 5 A. M, hungry, tired, sleepy, jaded, sore-shouldered, but in good spirits, and just in time for breakfast. The first thing we asked was how about the geese? Where do they feed? Are they wild? Have they been shot at over decoys? and so on ad infinitum, to all of which we received rather vague though somewhat reassuring answers.

Well, we ate our morning meal, shouldered our guns, decoys and a spade, and off we went merry as larks, though not quite so fleet in our movements. We dug our pits in a huge stubble field, placed our much-carried and precious decoys where we thought they would do us most good, and calmly awaited results.

Soon we heard the "ah-hunk," the melodious soul-stirring note proceeding from the outstretched neck of the classical goose, and presently our eyes were gladdened by the sight of a band making for our decoys. On they came, guided by the wily old leader, whose trumpet call had sent a thrill through our veins; and on they came, closer and closer until within sixty yards, when they at once realized themselves to be the victims of some optical delusion or practical joke, for they wheeled with wondrous rapidity, each flap of their powerful wings carrying them further and further away.

Rather late, all the same, for three fell never to honk or flap any more, and that was the beginning, many repetitions of which left us, when the flight was over, with eleven fine geese as reward for our long-drawn tramp to these pits.

The next morning we changed our ground and succeeded in killing 12 more, so that in two days we killed 28 geese, securing only 23, five being lost, three the first day and two on the second, and thus ends the goose hunt for 1888.

Now as to guns. My friend H. killed several birds at over 80 yards and one wing-tipped goose at over 100 yards. For my part I used the 10 hammerless on the first day and killed several birds away off, using Schultze powder and No. 3 chilled shot in first barrel and black powder and same size shot in second. My friend used No. 3 shot and black powder all through.

In the 8 guage I used 6 drams and 7 drams of F Deadshot, and 2 ounces of chilled No. 3 and some loads of soft 1s, same powder charge, and although I killed several geese at over 100 yards, yet my powder was so coarse and consequently slow (not F G but single F) that I got behind many birds that I ought to have killed. Then again, a 13½-lb. 34-inch barrel gun is rather heavy to swing when one is cramped up in a pit, so all in all I would have done just as well with my 9 2-10 hammerless, as "my time" would have been better all the way through.

The great truth, however, was that these geese had been shot at a good deal over decoys, so that only one flock bowed their wings when coming in, while all the others flew well up and away, so that one's shooting was about all at from 60 yards and over.

I learned one thing, i. e. a big gun when loaded with black powder is not a bit better than a smaller one, for although the first shot is more effective, yet the smoke is so dense that the second don't count much, while a 10-gauge loaded with Schultze is away ahead of an 8 loaded with black. But an 8 with Schultze in first barrel would be splendid, and that's what I would have used if I had been able to procure a crimper for it in paper shells, but I couldn't in time, so I loaded with black powder, and as the weather was cloudy, and foggy most of the time, my big gun did not help me as much as it might if properly loaded, and I must confess, directed, for I certainly missed a good many shots from being twisted up in a small pit where I could not handle so heavy and long a gun with comfort. I still believe that an 8 gauge with Schultze powder is just the thing for goose shooting, and next time I will verify my present ideas on that subject.

WALLA WALLA, December 28, 1888. GAUCHO.

Springfield Notes.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN: —The game season is pretty near over in this State. It has not been as plentiful as in some years, quail being very scarce, also woodcock. Partridges were fairly plenty, but very wild, and there are many left over for another year. There is considerable talk of getting some Chinese pheasants and turning out here as an experiment. If any of your readers can give any information on the subject, I would like to get it.

Rifle shooting has been very dull, in fact the local club is about dead, but I have hopes of a revival. The military rifle shots of this city have done well the past year. At the State shoot, Company B, 2d Regiment, M. V. M., (Springfield City Guards), won the State trophy for seven men, seven shots each, with the total of 200 points. This the second consecutive year this company has won it. Last year their total was 197. There is some talk of sending a team of Massachusetts marksmen to Europe next summer, and if the English authorities will allow the use of the Buffington rear wind guage right, a team will undoubtedly be sent. Major James P. Frost of Boston, has it in hand, and whenever the Major takes hold of anything he makes it a glorious success. He is one of the best shots in the State and is a favorite with the riflemen.

The Smith & Wesson Revolver Club have recently put in rifles at their pistol gallery, and the attendance is much increased thereby.

Nine members of the Rod and Gun Rifle Club were the guests of the Broad Brook, (Conn.) rifle team, where they spent a day very pleasantly and were royally entertained. The club has invited the Broad Brook team here early in the new year, when they expect to lay themselves out to give the visitors a good time, both socially as well as at the butts.

T. T. Cartwright, the rifleman of this city, has had an offer to locate in the West and may decide to do so, but wants to wait until the matter of sending a Massachusetts State team to England is decided upon.

Mr. John P. Clabrough of Birmingham, England, who is well known in your city, writes a friend in this city that he expects shortly to again visit America.

The city has fixed over the old County Jail for an armory for the two militia companies. They have a very nice place and two new rifle galleries underneath, one 140 feet, and one 64 feet.

Polo has been the craze here, but as the rink was used as a toboggan slide, and the toboggan man wanted $2 000 to move, the Polo team has therefore moved to New Bedford.

There is likely to be a change in the officers of the local militia companies from promotions. The City Guards have had the same officers for 10 years which speaks well for officers and men. C.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Dec. 26, 1888.

THE KENNEL.

Dog owners are requested to send for publication the earliest possible notices of whelps, sales, names claimed, presentations and deaths in their kennels, in all instances writing plainly names of sire and dam and of grandparents, colors, dates and breed.

Mr. Charles Kerr, a prominent farmer and horseman of Kern, called upon us last week, and stated that he had invited Mr. George Allender to put up at his place with his string of dogs. Mr. Walter is located nicely near the town with his dozen dogs, and Mr. De Mott is with that prince of sportsmen, Hon. D. M. Pyle at Mountain View Dairy about fifteen miles from the town.

The dogs are all doing well and the trainers are sanguine. The weather in Kern county during January is perfect, the days being bright and sunny without wind, and the nights cool and invigorating. Beside the pleasures incident to the trials proper, the local members of the Knights of the Trigger have arranged a series of social entertainments, and the week will wind up with a grand shooting tournament, a feature which will attract that nervy company of splendid shots, Frank Bassford, Frank Coykendall, Major Kellogg, Joseph Delmas, Austin Sperry, Doctor Knowles, Will De Vaull, Henry Hopper and all the rest. More solid pleasure is centered in field trial week than in all the rest of the year.

Sixty-one gentlemen have already signified their intention to be present. Among them Messrs. Wm. Schreiber, Ramon Wilson, Mr. Streaton, Mr. Sutro, Mr. Boyd, and many other keen sportsmen who have not hitherto been counted among those sure to be present. The list should include Will Kittle, Clarence Haight, David Thom, John Stack, Ed. Bosqui, John Adams, Will Berry, E. W. Briggs, and scores of other fine shots and enthusiastic fanciers of setters and pointers. None who once attend a field trial will ever after be content to be absent.

Mr. Emil Boch, at present in the city with the Pylades troupe at the Standard, has with him a Great Dane, Moor by name. The dog is black, with white brisket, stands 29 inches high, is two years old, and weighs 122 pounds. Mr. Boch has owned the dog for two years, and has carried him through Russia, Sweden, Denmark, England, Germany, France and America, at an expense of many hundreds of dollars. Moor is a perfect watch dog, guarding the bedside of his owner with fidelity, and is a pleasant companion at all times.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—This is generally complex, bronchi, lung tissue and pleura being all more or less involved; but the main seat of disease varies in different cases, and it is generally the structure first invaded that is the most seriously affected.

It is best to consider the three forms of chest inflammation together, as they exhibit a number of similarities in causes, symptoms, etc. For instance, a dog is brought to you in a state of fever, panting hard, with a cold and shivering fits. Let us first inquire into the cause Exposure to cold, not properly dried after a bath or a swim, not being well clothed, or removal of his coat in cold weather, by accidental exposure on a cold night, going out on a cold day without a rug, or imperfect kennel. So far we have nothing to specially guide us. Some of the symptoms, too, will further our diagnosis. In bronchitis, the breathing is quick but even, and not apparently painful. In pneumonitis it is quick and oppressed. In pleurisy the expiration is prolonged, and the inspiration sharp and jerky. Auscultation will show a mucous rale throughout the chest, as soon as bronchitis has set in. In pneumonia, crepitus, dullness, and later various forms of rales and sibilus are present, either diffused or circumscribed. In pleurisy there is a friction sound and absence of sound from the lower part of the lung, according to the amount of exudation. The loss of sound alters in change of the position of the patient.

The above is a rough outline of the symptoms afforded by auscultation. Further details are unnecessary, because the information as to the exact extent of the disease will depend entirely on the experience of the observer, and practically the different intrathoracic phenomena are so intermingled that each case is a problem in itself, and must be solved from its own indications. Cough is present in all cases. That of bronchitis is moist and wheezy; that of pleurisy paroxysmal, painful and cut short; and that of pneumonia occasional and small.

In pleurisy there is pain on pressure of the side; also twitching of the muscles of the chest walls. The pulse is frequent, hard and small in pleurisy, oppressed and fast in pneumonia, frequent but generally soft in bronchitis. In bronchitis and pneumonitis there is frothy expectoration, but not in pleurisy.

A dog afflicted with inflammation of the lungs and pleura, sits up with his fore legs apart, and often in the latter stages of the disease, stands until he falls down to die. In pneumonitis the extremities become extremely cold, and the nose cold and very moist. In the latter stages of chest disease, the patient becomes a pitiful object, emaciated, struggling for breath, obstinately sitting or standing, tongue purple and hanging from the mouth, and breath very offensive.

When hydrothorax sets in, the animal is unwilling to lie down; the breathing becomes very laborious, and the intercostal spaces dilated. The beating of the heart will likewise afford an almost characteristic symptom of the complaint, for the hand placed on one side of the chest will be affected with a kind of thrill, quite different from the sensation presented by the beating of the heart of a healthy dog.

In consequence of the frequency of pleurisy of only one side of the chest of the dog, cases of hydrothorax are generally much protracted.

There is a similarity in the treatment of these disorders. The main principle is to support the system in every possible way, with a view to enable it to resist the ravages of disease, and to promote those changes which lead to cure. Again, though special stress is laid upon good nursing, it must not be forgotten that good cool air is a tonic and a necessity for existence. Emetics, bleeding, drastics, and other debilitants must be carefully avoided. Stimulants, febrifuges, with expectorants, when the lungs and bronchi are most affected, must be freely given. Fomentations or stimulant applications to the sides are most beneficial. Later, tonics and absorbents, such as the iodide of iron in two-grain doses, and more powerful stimulation to the side is required, and in advanced pleurisy paracentesis thoracis. In all forms of inflammation of the chest, it is admissible to regulate the bowels by mild doses of laxatives, saline or oleaginous.

American Kennel Club Associates.

1. Any person who, in the opinion of the American Kennel Club Committee, has not misconducted himself or herself in any way in connection with dogs, dog shows, or trials, or in any way acted in opposition to the fundamental rules and principles upon which the Club has been established, or in any other manner which would make it undesirable that he or she should be an Associate, shall enjoy the following privileges upon the annual payment of five dollars.

2. They shall be entitled to a copy of the American Kennel Club "Stud-Book" annually, and also to a copy each month of the American Kennel Gazette, post free. To enter two dogs, bona fide their own property, in the American Kennel Club "Stud-Book," each year free of charge.

3 They shall be entitled to delegates to the American Kennel Club in proportion to their membership—one delegate for every one hundred members, who shall be elected by ballot at their annual meeting held in New York City during the first week in January every year. Voting for delegates by proxy or by mail to the Secretary of the American Kennel Club shall be allowed.

4. The delegate shall be qualified, without the concurrence of his colleagues to individually present any grievance of an Associate member to the American Kennel Club for consideration, and in all such cases the American Kennel Club shall assume original jurisdiction.

5. The names of all persons who wish to become Associates shall be submitted to the Committee of the American Kennel Club.

6. Subscriptions shall be due on Election and again on the first of January in each year. Any Associate who has not paid his or her subscription on or before Febuary 1st following, may be struck out of the list of Associates.

7. Any Associate who, in the opinion of the Committee of the American Kennel Club, has intringed Rule No. 1, as above, shall cease to be an Associate.

8. No Associate shall be entitled to any of the above privileges until his subscription for the current year has been paid.

But few days intervene between this issue and the time when the last car-load of enthusiasts will have started for Bakersfield and the Field Trials. Those who wish to be present at the draw for the Derby and to see the beginning of that stake, should be in Bakersfield by the evening of January 13th. The draw will be made in the rooms of the Knights of the Trigger on that evening, and an early start had on Monday morning. The Derby will have not less than twelve starters, as good in breeding, form, field quality and every other way as any puppies that have been moved in public in any of the eastern trials of the winter. Pointers and setters are about equal in number, a fact which will add to the interest, although it must be admitted that the setters average better in breeding than the pointers. Of the twenty-four entries made on May 1, 1886, several rare good ones have died, but enough remain to make the Derby worth going a thousand miles to see.

The aged stake will probably draw out the best of the Derby dogs of last year, and beside them some of the first rate old timers that have run in former aged stakes. Mr. J. M. Bassford, Jr., writes that he will probably take old Beautiful Queen down and run her.

In some respects Queen is as good as any dog ever seen in the State. She ran in the first trial of the club, winning second in her own way and beating old Belle, a cross-bred red bitch that is now doing regular work on snipe and grouse in Oregon. We should much like to see a dozen of the dogs of five or six years ago started in a "Veteran Stake."

Beautiful Queen, Belle, Judge Post's Dido, Mr. Taft's Dorr, Mr. Kaeding's Duke, General Cosby's Bow Jr., Henry Bassford's Butte Bow and others might be named. Let those who handled them at Walltown Timber in 1883 handle again, and whether the old dogs did well or not there would be fun in plenty. Since the meetings of the Pacific Coast Field Trials Club have grown so popular, and the attendance so greatly increased, it is impossible to "camp out" during the trials, and the fact is a source of discontent. The initial trials of the club were to four notion, about right, even if some rented blankets were filled with chaff, to Mr. Nick White's pain, and Major Harnett's wig could not be found at cock crow in the frosty mornings. There was a briskness and a "go" about those days that do not seem possible in the more cumbrous events since then.

Letters have come during the week from Messrs. Miller, Seymour and Weill of Bakersfield, giving assurance that accommodation for all the visiting sportsmen can be provided during Field Trial season. A monstrous rabbit drive has been arranged for January 13th, and transportation provided for all who care to attend. After the drive a barbecue will be made in the old-fashioned Mexican style, a style that few of those not Californian by birth know anything about, but which needs but to be once seen to recommend itself as most enjoyable.

Mr. Fred A. Taft writes from Truckee that he has purchased a fine new hickory stick with which he intends fighting his way through the rabbit drive, barbecue, trials and everything else that opposes his progress.

Mr. N. E. White will attend the trials, and if he and Uncle Taft can be induced to pool issues for the campaign, they will be freely backed as a model team, to kill more rabbits, destroy more beef, drink more tea or whatever there is, and crowd more quiet blissful enjoyment into the week at Bakersfield than any other two participants.

Those who can do so should go to Bakersfield a few days before the trial and spend the time in shooting, and becoming acquainted with the splendid country surrounding that favored town. Field trials lose much of their charm if permitted to degenerate into barren races for the coin in sight, with the almost invariable concomitants of such racing, jockeying and like evils. After all is said the chief end of sport as of all else, is to better the man by contributing most generously to his gratification and pleasure and there are many who would rather enjoy a field trial with ordinary dogs than to pass discontentedly through one in which the competing animals were all Gladstones or Roderigo's.

We urge the reading of Doctor Bowhill's superlatively good delineation of inflammation of the respiratory tract, which appears in another column. It is one of the best of his many skilful differentiations.

Some Timely Hints.

The winter season in California is peculiar, in that it generally gives rise to a train of kennel diseases, some of them almost invariably fatal. Intestinal ills are most common, and a peculiarly acute dysentery the particular trouble which generally decimates local kennels. It will serve a good purpose to give some hints by Dr. J. F. Perry, (Ashmont), the best authority we know on canine diseases. That author says:

The term dysentery is used to denote an inflammation of the large intestines, accompanied by mucous and bloody discharges from the bowels. In mild cases the inflammation is not severe and may be confined to the rectum. In severe attacks of the disease the inflammation is not only intense but extensive, involving the greater part of the large intestine, the mucous membrane of which becomes reddened, swollen and ulcerated. The ulcers are greater or less in number, some being small and others of considerable size.

Causation—Excesses in eating, food decomposed or improperly cooked, foul drinking water, exposure to cold and rain storms are among the generally recognized causes. In many cases it is not easy to trace the origin of the disease under consideration to any obvious agency.

Symptoms—The affection is generally preceded by a diarrhœa of a variable duration with which some pain has been associated. The appetite lessened and the manner dull and listless. The development of the disease is denoted by characteristic discharges, consisting of mucus with which more or less blood is mingled. The effort to move the bowels is frequently made, and the quantity passed at each act is generally small. Slight evacuations may take place every hour and even much oftener.

The quantity of mucus expelled is in some instances quite abundant and appear in jelly-like masses, for which the popular term is slime. Sometimes fecal matter is mingled with the discharges, but they are more commonly dysenteric in character, consisting of mucus and blood. At times the evacuations present a greenish color. The amount of mucus and blood voided constitutes measurably a standard for judging the extent of the intestinal surface affected.

Pus sometimes appears in the discharges in the acute form of the disease, but more commonly in the chronic stages. The inflammation of the rectum occasions a sensation as if the bowels were filled, causing a desire to evacuate frequently; the effort strained and painful.

The abdominal walls are usually retracted and the back arched. The pulse is materially changed except in extreme cases. Great frequency of the pulse denotes gravity and danger, but the reverse does not hold good, as sometimes in fatal cases it is but little quickened.

Fever is exceptional, although at times high. Nose hot and dry, tongue coated, thirst a prominent symptom. Vomiting may occur and greenish matter be expelled. Loss of strength varies. In extreme cases running to a fatal termination, the discharges become putrid, the breath offensive, respiration more rapid, eyes sunken, expression pinched and anxious. The pulse grows weak and feeble, evacuations occur more frequently, and at last are involuntary and beyond control of the animal. Paralysis seems to pervade the extremities, the skin becomes cold and clammy, the stench intolerable, finally death ensues from exhaustion.

Prognosis.—The disease tends to recovery. It is a distressing affection, but properly treated need seldom result fatally provided the system has not been weakened by some previous disease or some co-existing derangement. Exceptionally dysentery eventuates in the chronic form of the disorder.

Treatment.—It is desirable that as early as possible the contents of the intestines be removed. Nature evidently endeavors to relieve the bowels by a diarrhœa, which precedes the dysenteric discharges. The treatment should commence with an effective purgative; castor oil is the most appropriate remedy in a tablespoonful dose. Following the oil opium must be relied on, as follows:

R. Morphiæ Sulph. gr. ii.
Sodæ Sulphatis drs iii.
Aq. Cinnamon oz. iii. Ft. Mist. Sig. Teaspoonful every 5 or six hours.

It will be necessary in very many cases to repeat the castor oil, especially if fever manifests itself or the discharges assume an offensive odor. The writer has had too little success in the use of so-called astringents to advise their administration in the early stages at least. When the discharges assume a character near normal but watery, then the following may be given:

R. Mist. Cretæ oz. iiiss.
Tinct. Catechu oz. ss.
Ft, Mist, Sig. Dessertspoonful every 3 or 4 hours.

Vomiting sometimes occurs as a prominent symptom at times early in the disease, preventing the administration of medicines at times by the mouth. In such case morphine can be given subcutaneously, (hypodermic) or thirty drops laudanum in starch water injected into the rectum.

The food should be bland and easily digestable; rather withhold it entirely than unwisely select that which is liable to be vomited or add to the irritation.

Milk and lime water in small quantities given frequently will be quite sufficient at first. This can be varied by giving alternately broths, into which raw eggs have been broken. When any diet but milk is allowed some form of pepsin should be administered with the food.

The elixir of bark, pepsin and bismuth is an admirable combination and can be given in teaspoonful doses three or four times daily. If the symptoms indicate failure of the vital powers, concentrated nourishment and possible stimulants will need to be given freely.

When the disease is under control and convalescence commenced, tonics should be employed.

The beef, wine and iron at first in dessertspoonful doses four times daily, then the elixir of Calisaya bark, iron and strychnia, one teaspoonful twice a day. The pepsin should be persisted in until recovery is complete.

Treatment for Distemper.

Some suggestions as to a line of treatment for ordinary distemper have recently been floating about through kennel exchanges, and have received the approval of many considerate dog men, among them Mr. James Watson, who judged at the P. K. C. show in April, '88. The hints are these:

In the first place, distemper is a zymotic or self-limited disease. It must run its course, and is as impossible to abate as small-pox or measles.

When I fully make up my mind that a dog has distemper, by the combined symptoms of nasal discharge and rapid emaciation, I at once isolate the victim from his companions, putting him in clean, dry and cool (not cold) quarters. Then I give four grs. (the dose for a setter) of anti-febrin every four hours for two days, at the end of which time, in my experience, the fever is abated. I have used anti-pyrine, but it has not been so successful as anti-febrin. I then give ten grs. (dose for a setter) of saccharated pepsin after every meal the dog eats, and by this treatment entirely do away with the intestinal troubles that create diarrhœa, which in nine cases out of ten is the cause of death in most cases of distemper. If a dog is very weak and refuses food, I force two or three raw eggs (with the pepsin afterward) per day down his throat; and if stimulants seem to be needed, I give an ounce every three hours of some good extra dry champagne, like Mumm's or Yellow Label Cliquot.

In connection with this treatment I use pure pine-tree tar, applied daily by a small paddle, across the nostrils, so that the dog will lick it off with his tongue. The mucus that accumulates on the nose I wash off with a soft sponge, dipped in a saturated solution of copperas. All the water the dog drinks contains eight grains of anti-febrin to the pint.

As to the diet, I depend almost entirely on scraped raw lean meat. The dog will generally eat this readily, and it is the most easily digested of foods. After the crisis of the disease is passed, and the dog is on the mend, I give a dessertspoonful (dose for a setter) of codliver oil twice a day.

The reason for the efficacy of the above treatment is as follows: The early stage of distemper is always accompanied by a high fever, and anti-febrin, in my experience, reduces the temperature in dogs as no other known drug will. Then the system is left in such a weak state that the power of digestion is destroyed, and the pepsin performs the duty, almost immediately stopping the diarrhœa.

In Manchuria and Mongolia a young woman's wedding portion consists not always of so many head of cattle, but frequently of so many dogs, which are to form the nucleus of a dog farm, these being reared for the sake of the thick fur with which the dogs in these bitterly cold regions are so excellently endowed, as indeed they would need to be, seeing that in midwinter the thermometer (Fahrenheit) sometimes falls to twenty-five degrees below zero, i. e., 57 degrees of frost. This business is as systematically carried on as is that of sheep farming in Australasia. The rate of reproduction being estimated at 10 per annum; so, reckoning the increase by geometrical ratio, it is evident that the bride who receives a dower of a dozen of these very large long-haired dogs is well started in life. But of course the majority of these fine animals are not destined to survive their first year, as they are full grown when about eight months old, and their fur attains perfection in winter, so that only those required for breeding are allowed to see the spring. All over the northern part of these vast Mongolian and Manchurian territories these dog farms are scattered, and there are thousands in which a few hundred dogs are annually reared for the market, while others merely raise enough to supply robes and mats for home use. There are a good many cases in which one can scarcely afford to think of antecedents, and certainly this slaughter of perhaps the handsomest race of dogs in the world for the sake of their coats is peculiarly unpleasant.

CANOEING.

Oakland Canoe Club.

The Club has been very active of late, there being a large attendance every Saturday and Sunday. On Christmas day there was a gathering of members only for festivities in the club house, and the day was duly celebrated. A few of the canoes went out in the afternoon, and had some fine sailing in the southerly gale.

Last Sunday a number of the canoes carrying passengers sailed up to the basin and landed on a tug for luncheon. There were the Mystic, Frolic, Hebe, Gypsy, Mab, Whisper, Pirate, Conchita and others. After enjoying the good fare all sailed up as far as the Von Schmidt dredger, and then started for a scrub race home. The Frolic had hoisted a new mainsail of slightly larger size, just received from the East, and very soon put a gap between herself and the rest of the fleet, and came in an easy winner by a long distance, she maintaining her supremacy with much ease at present, and it seems as though some new cracks would have to be imported to do anything with her.

The little Mab is doing some very fine sailing, and is making it warm for boats nearly twice her size. Her skipper is talking of a new racing mainsail.

New Year's day saw a splendid gathering at the club house, many ladies being present. A royal egg nog was erected, and the eclipse viewed through all varieties of glasses. The effect of the white sails during the twilight was very pretty. The Mayriach badge race comes off Jan. 20th.

Some years ago I drove up to a stage station in the San Pedro Valley in Arizona, and the Mexican stock tender had had a hard time in rounding up his stage stock. His herd pony had been run until, as he stood there under the shade of a brush corral, covered with foam and dust, with his belly drawn up almost to his spine and gasping occasionally as though it was his last, I felt sure I should see him die before I left the station. I was afterwards told by the stage boss in a bluff, matter-of-course way, in answer to my inquiry, that he had "pulled through all right; you can't kill them critters;" and now I am perfectly positive that you cannot.

As a saddle animal simply, the bronco has no superior. The "lope" is a term which should never be applied to that motion in any other breed of horses. I have watched a herd of cow-ponies being driven over the prairie where the undulations of the backs in the moving throng were as regular and easy as the rise and fall of the watery waves. The fox-t ot, which is the habitual gait of all plainsmen, cowboys, and Indians, is easily cultivated in him, and his light, supple rame accommodates itself naturally to the motion.

This particular American horse lays claim to another quality, which in my estimation is not least, and that is his wonderful picturesqueness. He graces the western landscape, not because he reminds us of the equine ideal, but because he comes of the soil, and has borne the heat and burden and the vicissitudes of all that pale of romance which will cling about the western frontier. As we see him hitched to the plow or wagon he seems a living protest against utilitarianism; but, unlike his red master, he will not go. He has borne the Moor, the Spanish conqueror, the red Indian, the mountainman, and the vaquero through all the glories of their careers; but they will soon be gone, with all their heritage of gallant deeds. The pony must meekly enter the new regime. He must wear the collar of the new civilization and earn his oats by the sweat of his flank. There are no more worlds for him to conquer; now he must till the ground.

Startle, the fastest of Hambletonian Star stallions, is dead, from ulcer in the mouth. Foaled in 1867, he had a 3 y. o. record of 2:36, and was sold to Robert Bonner for $20,000.

The New York Sun says:

A marked feature of the trotting tack was taken from it by the death of Mr. Bonner's Startle. The fastest son of Hambletonian, and perhaps a horse of speed equal to any. Startle traveled in a style that always prompted one to whether on the whole he could not be called the best gaited horse of all.

He did not strike the observer with the noticeably inimitable perfection of grace and elasticity of Maud S. He did not have the tremendous resolution of Dexter, nor the wonderful boldness of action of Judge Fullerton, nor the high-pressure rapidity of Jay-Eye-See and the Electioneers. His gait rather suggested the ghostly shape——which shape had none.

It produced upon the mind no distinct impression of its character, so easy frictionless, balanced and perfect was it, and so natural and without effort. But he was lightning when cut loose.

Mr. Bonner suffers a great loss to be sure, but the experience of a great horse owner rather tends to make him philosophical about such disasters, and to find recompense in the expectations of the future, when he doubtless hopes to see young Startles getting the grandest horses of their line. And why shouldn't they?

ANTEVOLO,

Standard, No. 7848.

THIS CELEBRATED TROTTING STALLION WILL make the ensuing season from February 15th to June 15th, 1889, at 2,111 Adeline Street, Oakland.

Terms

One hundred dollars the season for mares engaged before May 1st, and one hundred and fifty dollars the season after that date. The object of this is to shorten the time in the stud so as to give a better opportunity for training before the Fall Circuit commences. Last year it was the first of August before he was through, and consequently he could not be got into condition in time even for the late Fair. In this connection it will be well to state that there is no deviation from the price, and emphatically no free list. The terms are certainly low for a horse of the class of Antevolo, and there were several applications where the applicants expected an increase of price.

Form and Color.

It is rare to find a horse of such high form, and I am not alone in considering him as being as nearly perfect a type of equine form as was ever seen in a trotting-bred stallion. He is sixteen hands and half an inch in height, 69 inches from point of shoulder to point of buttock, and weighs, in ordinary condition, 1,150 pounds. He is very muscular, limbs as good as the most critical could desire, and has highly finished as a great majority of thoroughbreds. In color he is a rich seal brown, with lighter shading in flanks and muzzle. Black legs, mane and tail, small star in forehead and off hind pastern white.

Performances.

He has been eminently of the improving kind. As a yearling he trotted in 3: 2; two-year-old in 2:41; three years old in 2:29¾; four years old in 2:19½, the fastest record for a stallion of that age up to that time, and in his five-year old form he trotted in from 2:16¼ to 2:17 in all of the four heats of the big trot which Harry Wilkes won. As he only made one break in this race, notwithstanding the great speed of the contestants he must be credited as remarkably "steady," almost phenomenally so for a horse of his age. Had it not been for an accident which temporarily disabled him, it can be stated with confidence that he would have trotted in 2:15 or better while he still ranked as a five-year-old.

In 1887 an injury to his left hind leg, first hurt when a two-year old, incapacitated him from trotting. That injury was below the ankle, and last year when apparently entirely recovered from that, and when he gave promise of doing better than ever before, owing to the track being harrowed very deeply he sprained the suspensory ligament, so that it was badly bowed about midway between ankle and hock. This was on the 21st of August, and he was walked and jogged, at times being quite lame, until September 19th, when after short brushes, he was, on the 22nd given two easy heats in 2:28 and 2:25, "worked out" twice a week, giving two heats at each working in time ranging from 2:17 to 2:23. On the 6th of October I gave him three heats in 2:28, 2:19, 2:17 (several watches made it 2:16¾) the last half 1:07½, and going so easily that I felt sure he could trot several seconds faster.

Although I worked him carefully, it was obligatory that he should have some fast work to trot on the 20th, and on the following Saturday I gave him three heats, in 2:24, 2:18, 2:19¼, and the next Sunday 2:26, 2:19, 2:22. He did not show as well in that as before, and though he made a good showing in the National, a wonderful exhibition after the drawbacks, and also his first race for nearly two years, he was evidently "not at himself." I have so much confidence in his speed and endurance that I will name him again in the National if it is gotten up, and will match any stallion heats of two miles for one or two thousand dollars a side to trot in October or November next, and take the chances of his leg standing.

Progeny.

He has only four colts, which were foaled in 1886. Dr. Lilliencrantz has two fillies on his ranch at Aptos, D. T. Sexton of San Francisco has a filly, and C. R. Lewis a colt. It was the intention to train the colt, but having hurt his fore leg when a yearling he had to be thrown out. He is quite promising, and though Sunol and other cracks remain in, third payment was made on him in the Stanford Stakes and Occident Stakes. There are quite a number of foals of 1887, several of which have been broken lately, and every one gives good promise of trotting fast. There are also a number of foals of 1888, and, in my estimation, for form, size, and beauty they cannot be excelled by the get of any trotting stallion. That others share in this opinion is evident from the following quotation; "R. E. Bybee says J. B. Haggin has got a last spring colt by Antevolo, son of Electioneer, dam Mabel, sister of Beautiful Bells, that is as much superior to other colts as the Jersey Lily is to a Umatilla reservation squaw."—RURAL SPIRIT, Portland, Oregon.

Nearly everyone who owns an Antevolo colt thinks that he has the best, which is a token of their uniformity.

Pedigree.

The most exacting critic, if moderately intelligent, cannot find fault with his blood lines. His sire Electioneer is, beyond question, the greatest trotting sire of any age when all things are considered. His dam Columbine is the only mare which has two entire sons which have beaten 2:20, 2:16½ by a six year-old, 2:19¾ by a four-year-old. Antevolo stands in the same relation to the thoroughbred as Maud S, Jay-Eye-See, Sunol, Nutwood and many others of first celebrity. In Stud Book form the pedigree is as follows:

First dam Columbine by A. W. Richmond.
Second dam Columbia Lily imp Bonnie Scotland.
Third dam Young Fashion by imp Monarch.
Fourth dam Fashion by imp Trustee.
Fifth dam Bonnets o' Blue by Sir Charles.
Sixth dam Reality by Sir Archy.
Seventh dam by imp Medley.
Eighth dam by imp Centinel.
Ninth dam by Mark Anthony.
Tenth dam by imp Janus.
Eleventh dam by imp Monkey.
Twelfth dam by imp Silvereye.
Thirteenth dam by Spanker.

Pasture at $5 per month on the Oakland Trotting Park. Mr. Hinchman having resolved to pasture the field inside the track this season. It cannot be excelled, the herbage being alfilleriila, wild oats and burr clover, a living stream of clear water running cross the field, and being enclosed by an inner fence. The gates of the outer shut at night; the animals are as safe within the enclosure as it is possible to have them in a field. In fifteen years which I have known it, there has not been a serious injury to mare or colt.

FOR SALE.

Two Nutwood Stallions

One is Bay, dam by G. M. Patchen. He is nine years old, never been trained, shows lots of speed, has taken several premiums at our County Fairs as a Roadster Stallion. His name is BAYWOOD black legs, mane and tail, and free driver. Weighs 1,200 pounds; 16 hands high, and is a sound horse.

FLEETWOOD is eight years old, dam by Young America, is sorrel, looks like his sire, fine style and lots of action; close to 16 hands, and weighs 1,100 pounds. In perfect health; good mane and tail. All they want is work to make them trot better than 2.20, as they are bred right for speed and staying qualities and has had the best of care up to the present time.

Horses can be seen at my Stable, corner THIRD AND EMPIRE STREETS, SAN JOSE.

Dairy Machinery, Apparatus and Supplies.

The DeLAVAL CREAM SEPARATOR.

Extracts all the cream from milk, fresh and sweet, as it comes from the cow, without setting or holding. Is not affected by extremes of climate. Increases the yield and improves the quality of butter, greatly adding to the profits in dairying. Over 120 of these most valuable machines are in constant use on this Coast alone, many thousand in the United States, and all are proving so profitable that many dairies are using two or more De Lavals.

It is now a well established fact that the Separator increases the yield of butter from 15 to 20 per cent., and even more in some parts of this State, while the quality in many instances has been greatly improved as is shown by comparison of market returns before and after the introduction of the Separator.

Four sizes and styles of De Lavals now in use:

"Hand Power," "Standard," "Increased Capacity," and "Steam Turbine" Separators.

Steam, Water and Horse Power suitable for driving. Complete Outfits furnished and fully guaranteed.

The amount of money raced for and won in England during 1888 amounted to $2,157,650.

The very fast sprinter Gladstone has been shipped to Los Angeles to take part in the races there.

J. B. Haggin has sent in for the Futurity of 1891, 107 entries. There will be over one thousand entries altogether.

If Senator Stanford had wished to have Electioneer stand as a public stallion, his book could have been filled up twice over at $1000.

The owners of Brian Boru, now running at Clifton, evidently think well of their horse, as they have already entered him for the Suburban.

Jay Eye See, who, by an unlucky accident, was severely injured a few weeks ago, is once more able to exercise, and Ed Bither is now jogging the great gelding.

The races advertised for last Saturday at the Bay District track have been postponed twice. No information has reached this office as to when they will be run.

The blind imported stallion Royalty, by Kingcraft (Derby winner) out of Rose by Oulston, sold for $10 at Lexington, Ky., two weeks ago. He was ten years old.

The six-year-old stallion, Sentinel Wilkes, by George Wilkes, dam by Sentinel, has been sold by W. H Crawford of Lexington, Ky., to W. C. France, of the same place, for $25,000.

The Gonzales Bros. have sent all their horses to the Pleasanton Stock Farm under the charge of Lee Shaner. This gentleman will also look after the horses belonging to Mr. Valensin.

The "Elmwood Stable" horses have been taken from the Bay District track and sent to Milpitas. Mr. Boots will very shortly begin to work the horses he has entered in the eastern races.

Matt. Byrnes is very confident that Salvator will show Proctor Knott his heels in many a race this year. Matt also says that Firenzi is in finer fettle than ever before, and the stable has no fear of The Bard.

Mr. W. H. Babb has removed his string of horses from the Bay District track and taken them to San Jose. In addition to Bogus, Arthur H., Rosa Lewis and others, he has also a full brother to the well-known race-horse Argo.

It is reported that Pittsburg Phil, the best known of all the eastern plungers, has arrived on this coast. He will probably make himself known in his own peculiar way some fine morning by cleaning up our local pool-rooms.

"Speed well the parting guest," is a good old-fashioned English motto, says the Sporting World, and it was singularly appropriate, therefore, that the last race of the year at Clifton should be won by Speedwell, who started at 30 to 1.

If the Los Angeles races are kept up, many of the horses now here will be taken to the land of the Orange Grove. Among those mentioned as being probable "flitters" are Al Farrow, Jack Brady, Laura Gardner, Welcome, Naicho B., Oro and Coloma.

Mr. J. B. Haggin states positively that he has made no offer for Proctor Knott, nor authorized anyone else to make a bid for the Kentucky horse. It is strange what peculiar stories emanate from the pens of the irresponsible scribblers, when items are scarce.

Bell Boy trotted at San Diego on the last day of the year, at the Pacific Beach Driving Park to beat the best time ever made on that track (Jim Blaine, 2:29), and although the rain had softened the course until it was almost unfit for racing, the wonderful colt made 2:19¾.

The rumor that Jockey McLaughlin would ride this year for the Dwyer Brothers is utterly without foundation. Jimmy will ride for the Chicago stable, with which he wound up last season. The Dwyers have secured as premier jockey that rattling good rider George Taylor.

There was a singular occurrence at Borris races in Ireland on the 25th of October. One of the five horses which ran for the Adamstown Plate was Mr. Meredith's Dainty, upon which a fortnight previously the operation of tracheotomy was performed as a cure for roaring. Dainty ran the race with a metallic tube in the throat, opening at the neck, where it was fastened with a silver plate, and won.

Our old and esteemed friend, E. F. Smith, of Sacramento, was defeated last Monday for the position of clerk of the Senate. A hard and bitter fight was made against him. Ed has made an acceptable secretary for the State Board of Agriculture, and would have proven himself equally efficient in the "upper house."

The Eastern sporting journals all agree that Sam Bryant's entries, Proctor Knott and Come to Taw will be the winter favorites for the Kentucky Derby, but most of them acknowledge that as Proctor Knott will not start, Almont is the best performer left in the list. Senator Hearst's late purchase may start favorite yet.

Dr. C. C. Mason, of Chico, has visited Sacramento and San Francisco this week, trying to arrange a date for the local fair and race meeting, so as not to conflict with any of the other associations. The Doctor promises even a more successful meeting this year than last.

The following advice is taken from the Rushville, (Ind.), Graphic. If you have a promising race-horse that you want to advertise or put in the stud, take him to California and give him a record. Take a lesson from Bell Boy's performance and others. They trot at least five seconds faster in that climate.

I met Mr. A. Gonzales a few days ago, and asked him whether he was going to accept the proposition of Mr. Linscott in reference to trotting Junio against Jim L., and for an answer got an emphatic NO. Mr. Gonzales says he is willing to trot his horse at the Bay District track, but will not go down to Salinas to trot.

I met the Hon. A. Abbott of Sacramento a night or two since at the Palace Hotel. He was on his way to join the party who have started for the field trials at Bakersfield. In the good old days, Mr. Abbott represented one of the city dailies at Marysville, and always had a hearty grip for the journalistic fraternity when business called them that way.

Bell Boy will be taken East from San Diego about the 20th of this month. Mr. C. C. Seaman's large and varied interests in the Southern portion of this State, prevents him from giving the necessary attention to his Kentucky stable, consequently the justly celebrated trotter will be sold at the same time as the balance of the stock and farm is disposed of.

Another new stable will compete for honors this year on the eastern turf. "Jack" Logan, son of the late United States Senator, has developed a penchant for racing, and is now getting together a string for the coming campaign. It will be known as the Oriole Stable. Young Mr. Logan has an immense income from investments made in stone quarries and iron mines, and can afford to indulge in the rather expensive luxury.

When the racing season of 1888 started, George Engeman, owner of the Brighton Beach and Clifton tracks, offered a purse of $1,000 to the jockey winning the largest number of races on the combined courses, with a second purse of $500 to the next highest one. On New Year's day George Taylor received the larger amount, while Whyburn was fortunate enough to secure the second place purse. They are both good, faithful riders, and richly merited their reward.

The Petaluma Park Association had a meeting recently, to see if something could be done toward improving the race course. Mr. White, the President of the Association, stated to a representative of the Petaluma Imprint that while the Directors fully approved of any project to improve the race course, they did not consider that the financial status of the Association would justly bear increased expenditure at present, owing to their indebtedness.

It is reported that the Buenos Ayres Syndicate of race-horse buyers have offered 600,000f for Stuart, winner of the last Grand Prix and French Derby. $120,000 is a rather steep price for one race-horse, but what makes the story beyond belief is, that M. Donon refused this tempting offer. From my personal knowledge there are many better race-horses in American than Stuart, which can be bought for much less money. Probaby this story is on a par with the one told about the purchase of Ormonde.

Ossory and Galore will be shipped from England on the 20th inst. The latter is entered in the Suburban and the Sheepsherd Bay Handicap at the Coney Island meeting.

The management at Clifton track started a very bad precedent on New Year's day. Each reporter present was offered a present of $50. As might have been expected, the representative of our highly esteemed contemporary, The Sporting World, refused to accept the donation. It was simply a bid to bias the reporters, and no reputable journal could afford to have it said that any of its employees had accepted such a bribe.

One of the San Francisco dailies says that "Lucky" Baldwin has offered $25,000 for the release of Barnes, the lightweight negro jockey. The paper also states that Mr. Tucker has the first call on Barnes, and would not part with him at any price. Shelby Barnes, usually called "Pikey," is an apprentice, and the Dwyer Brother's have secured a second call on his services, so Mr. Baldwin could readily offer a large amount for the boy's release, feeling assured it would not be accepted.

In an exchange, which I had on my table, there is a very funny paragraph. It would not be right to publish the name of the paper, for it is simply a case of gross ignorance on the part of whoever wrote the item. It is as follows: "Al Farrow, the Lake County flyer, won another five-eighths mile race at San Francisco. Della Walker, another Lake County horse, was second." Mr. Walters, who owns Al Farrow, will probably step into that office and inform the editor that Della Walker was the dam of Al Farrow.

The races which took place near Jacksonville, Or., in Col. Miller's field, says the Democratic Times, were witnessed by a large crowd from every portion of the valley. Everything was conducted "on the square," and all had a fair chance to win. C. G. Rippey's gray horse, from Central Point, won the first race, distance 600 yards, with Ed. Hanley's sorrel horse second. Thos. Miles' horse, Secret, won the quarter race in straight heats, beating five others.

"Grim, is it a fact that they run the horses in Australia without shoes?" This question was asked me at the Bay District track a few days ago, and when I told the gentleman that I had seen the stewards at Caulfield threaten to expel an owner who wished to start his horse shod, they stating it would make two seconds difference in a mile, my friend evidently thought I was deviating from the paths of truth, still it is a fact. The stewards wished to protect the betting public, and knew the horse would be handicapped with shoes, as all horses run there much faster when not shod.

The Western Associations have arrived at an amicable understanding in reference to dates, and the following is the time allotted to each one: New Orleans, April 8th to 13th; Memphis, April 15th to 20th; Nashville, April 22d to 31st; Lexington, May 1st to 8th; Louisville, May 9th to 18th; Latonia, May 20th to June 1st; St. Louis, June 1st to 15th; Kansas City, June 17th to 22d; Chicago, June 22d to July 20th; St. Paul, July 23d to 31st. Then the horses can come east to Saratoga, Monmouth, and the other tracks thereabouts, or rest a bit in the west waiting for the Western Autumn circuit to open.

I had a very pleasant call from Sam Caton on Tuesday last, he being on his way East to look after his personal interests. Sam came to the Coast bringing Bell Boy with him, hoping that the three-year-old record might be broken, and it would have been, but the elements conspired to defeat such a desired end. Mr. Caton speaks in the most unqualified terms of the California climate, and says Bell Boy could not beat 2:30 when brought from the East, and yet with only six weeks of its invigorating influences, the beautiful stallion reduced his record, and now has 2:19¼ to his credit. Mr. Caton will, in all probability, bring his horses to this Coast next winter, as he considers it will be a gain of many seconds in speed to each.

"J. S. Brown, of Westerly, R. I., writes: 'I claim the distinction of having bred, raised, broken, trained and driven a faster stallion (Mount Morris, 2:19½) than any other man has done. Correct me if I am not right.' We do not dispute you, Mr. Brown."

"Joseph Cairn Simpson, of the California BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, has done equally as well, Mr. Brown. He bred, raised, broke, trained and drove Antevolo to a four-year-old record of 2:19½."

General Topics.

Although "Grim's Gossip" occupies a part of the same field which was allotted to "General Topics," there is need of a sort of a combination, a kind of double crop, to utilize the whole area. What may be called journalistic heats, in place of a long straight dash, a succession of paragraphs in lieu of long articles is certainly popular, or it would not be adopted by so many papers. The London Referee is the best exemplar among sporting papers, and has got such a lead in that feature that it gallops across the score so far in the lead that "two stun ten" or even a four stun handicap would not equalize it with the other contestants. But then I do not know of any other paper which has such peculiar advantages. Like the big stables of Mr. Haggin, Mr. Baldwin, the Dwyer brothers, etc., there are so many cracks in the string that when all run at a time there are little or no hopes of getting a place. The opening on the first page is "Sporting Notions," without a signature, and then comes "Pendragon's Handbook." Following that is the page under the title of "Dramatic and Musical Gossip." which "Carados" has in charge, and further along Dagonet handles "Mustard and Cress," so deftly that I must confess a partiality for that when amusement is the motive for reading. Pendragon is the pseudonym of Henry Sampson, the veteran editor of the paper, and he has not an equal in presenting turf matters with paragraphical precision. A par, or two will present the main features of interest in a meeting or race better than columns of labored writing, and even a sentence is likely to present a clearly cut picture of what has been seen. While there must be a natural gift for this kind of composition, breeding must be aided by judicious training, and that both of these qualities are combined in the quartet of paragraphers connected with the Referee will be readily admitted by the readers of that paper.

Grim's Gossip is a transcript of what is going on in local circles, and what can be gathered in the way of what is transpiring elsewhere. It is intended to be an epitome of current news regarding horse affairs, and a few lines may be all that is necessary to place it before the reader, or it may require a long paragraph to convey the intelligence. When he gets his plans perfected, a system of organized aids all over the Pacific Coast, nearly every occurrence in horse circles, of any interest to the general reader, will be duly chronicled. Some time will be necessary. as it will entail an extensive correspondence to arrange the business, but when effected the trouble, in a measure, will be at an end. General Topics has a more extended range. Embracing other subjects than horses and their belongings, discussions, perhaps, and the bearing that passing events have on the future. It has so wide a scope that it is difficult to give a synopsis. One paragraph may treat a subject widely differing from the next, or the whole series embrace the same topic and those which are cognate to the question. In that case it would appear that a continuous relation should be the vehicle to convey the thoughts of the writer, and yet there are benefits derived from the practice. It permits breaking off at any point and the use of a style which would be inappropriate in an unbroken article. While not exactly proper to term a column, in which parts of it are divided by asterisks, lines, etc., a collection of paragraphs, as a rule, the sections are not divided by paragraphs proper. Some writers, however, fancy a redivision of the section and make a paragraph of every few lines, thinking, doubtless, that it adds to the force of their style. At all events it has become such a prominent feature in journalism that apologies are not necessary.

Althongh somewhat annoying to my better half—I might write with great propriety the best half of the company—it has been a gratification to me to be called "The Old Man." Should a stranger visit the Oakland track, or any other where I may be at the time, hear a conversation in which the horse folk are engaged, and the appellation used, he can take it for granted I am the person referred to. And in many other places where horses are the theme. "Well Morris, what does the old man think of my colt?" is asked a hundred times or more during the year of my horse lieutenant, or it may be, "how did the old man like my horse when he saw him move the other day?" Many have yet to learn that when I praise the colt in presence of the owner the opinion is not qualified by a mental reservation, and should the scrutiny be unfavorable the owner is the recipient of the opinion in preference to blowing hot to him and cold in other places. I have been dignified with all sorts of titles, from Captain to Colonel in the military, and the civic one of Judge. The only claim I have to military rank was from having won a substitute during the war, and as for that which permits the use of Hon. as a prefix there can be no further claim than having officiated in the judges' box of a race course, or as an arbiter in cases of disagreement in turf or trotting affairs. Inasmuch as "no good" came from the substitute, and the honors of the ermine are prememptorily declined, and also a determination to avoid as far as possible refereeship, the more familiar title of the old man is most in accordance with my feelings.

Then again I think at times I am too young to deserve the title to which grey hairs give only a brevet rank. Apart from periodical attacks of rheumatism, or a cerebral trouble, my "bodily condition" is capital. "Sound in limb and feet," saving a spavin on my right ankle, caused by an accident in a saw mill forty years ago, and last summer, when I was in the open air from sunrise to sunset, with two or three hours of writing in the middle of the day, and my "wind" was not affected by a brisk walk to the track and back, or an occasional short gallop to catch a car. The fact is there may be many years and youth, not a quarter of a century of life and senile old age. But the prefix of old is not used among horse folk entirely as a designation of age, but rather as a token of affection, and trainer and jockeys will speak of a favorite four-year-old filly as the "old mare," and very frequently a three-year-old will be patted on the neck with a hearty salutation of "how are you old horse." These reflections arose from a paragraph in the Examiner of Monday recounting the arrival of two far-Eastern tourists who are named "old gentlemen." I prefer "old man" as being a more comprehensive term. "Gent," a horrible contraction, and lady are used with so little regard to whom they are applied that the significance has been lost. Not a great deal worse than the exclamation of two "Randy queans" who were quarrelling, when in response to a charge the other said, "I admit I am a——— and a thief, but beyond that you cannot say black is the white of my eye, and I am a lady."

The Eastern tourist is not as yet very numerous among us, but a few of his kind are here. Two very jolly old gentlemen were at the Lick House the other evening, preparing for a tour of the State. They came from Salem, Mass. One is seventy-three years old and the other seventy-one. Both are very rich, and both are childless widowers, as one of them confided to a listener. They have been life-long neighbors, and as both have retired from business they concluded to set out together upon a tour of observation—like Lord Lovell, "strange countries for to see." They crossed the Continent leisurely, stopping at Chicago, Denver, Salt Lake and other points, and finally brought up in San Francisco. They are a very frisksome pair of old gentlemen, and as full of fun and jollity as an egg is full of meat. They ask all sorts of questions, and invariably express their surprise at anything told them by the genuine Yankeeism, "I want to know!" They intend to see every point of interest in the State, from the placer mines of Klamath to the vine-clad hills of San Diego. There is great rivalry between the two as to which shall get his hand in his pocket first when any item of expense is to be settled, and many a squabble "Eph" and "Job"—those are the names they address each other by—have when one gets ahead of the other.

Regarding the substitute. In 1864 I lived in Chicago, my family, and, consequently, my home, being in Jackson Co., Iowa. The greatest of the Iowa fairs in these days was held at Davenport, and which was also the most popular of the Western exhibitions. I took several horses from Chicago to participate in the sport, and when the destination was reached I found that drafting for our section of the country was in progress. Without having the least dread of the draft, my business would have been irretrieveably ruined by enforced absence. Had I been differently situated I should have enlisted, as in addition to patriotism I had a strong desire to see and participate in actual warfare. Not perhaps actuated by the same fervor as governed Young Norval, but to aid the cause which I believed to be right, and the gratification of witnessing the most exciting events in human life. Two men came from Sabula to Davenport bringing substitutes which had cost them over $800 each. Both were lamenting the outlay, and I proposed that I would put in a third of the outlay, play billiards (we were closely matched at that), old sledge, any game, in fact, with which we were acquainted. A declined the hazard and B was reluctant, though the next morning, when I was going to the track to exercise the horses, B said he had consented to the arrangement. Another townsman, a German who kept the billiard saloon of the village, was present, and he was also matched with the trio in the games we had played together. I gave him one-half of B's outlay, with instructions that should he win, he must not pay the substitute until he was accepted and sworn in. The entrance gate was not very far from the track, and as I was exercising the horse he came a short time before noon. He was smiling his best and shouting at the top of his voice, "I wins him, I wins him." "What did you do, H?" "Oh B would not play any game, but me tossed heads and tails, and I beat him." He had a pocket piece, a lucky thaler which he claimed was a grand "luck piece," and the substitute was accepted, sworn in and paid his $800. That evening when at dinner at the Burtis House the provost marshal informed me that the substitute had escaped before they got him into camp, so that my representative had "stole away" in a few minutes after he received his bounty. My friend H. felt very much elated at his victory, and also at having tossed heads or tails for as large a sum as eight hundred and odd dollars.

"Sleepy David" and the tin peddler is an old story, and that and kindred "Bites" have been the subject of many tales for more than a hundred years. Something of the same sort was played upon me at the Davenport track many years ago, though the bite was discovered before the teeth were fairly inserted. The Scott county fair had closed, and the day after there was quite an assemblage at the track. Many horses still remained, expecting to take the boat the next morning for the State Fair, which was to be held in the Dubuque. I had a large number of Blackbird colts, 17 of them, if my memory be correct, and among other horses a fine looking chestnut mare called Lady Peosta. She was one of the fastest trotters in the State, though a terribly "bad breaker," and, consequently a "kittle quean" to drive. I was jogging her when a boy mounted on a big bay stallion rode alongside. The only trapping was a blind bridle, and he shuffled along as gently as the "ambling pied poney," celebrated in the song. His first enquiry was if I wanted more help to take the colts to Dubuque, and being answered in the negative his next remark was that maybe the horse he was on could beat the mare. He kept me company for several rounds, when becoming out of patience I offered to wager him $100 that the mare could shut the horse out. He was a fine looking horse "bodily," though his legs were swollen and he was evidently in "no sort of condition."

The boy shook his head, but when I had finished working a man stepped up and said he would accept one of the propositions made to the boy, viz.: to give the horse 60 yards in half a mile for the amount named. I answered that he had played it rather too fine, but that I would give $25 to see what kind of a horse he had. He was accommodated with a sulky and after warming his horse up commenced to score. He found a good deal of fault at the mare coming in the lead although I was endeavoring to give him a good start, and the word was eventually given with the mare on a break. The horse went away from her opening a gap before the first quarter was reached which I could not close, and the result was that he beat me further than I was to beat him. It appeared to me as though the few men present made more noise than the thousands who attended the fair, and the promise of a basket of wine when we got to the Burtis House was all that put an end to the laughter and clamor. The horse trotted the half mile in 1:20—no bad rate for a horse, especially a stallion in 1864—and evidently could have gone faster. Enquiries of the man who trotted him elicited the following information. He was quite a noted six hundred yard horse, but owing to a slight injury to fore leg he was thrown out of training and his owner used him for work and driving on the road. He had taken kindly to trotting, but my informant stated that this race was the first he had ever taken part in. He borrowed him and actually made him one of a team which drew a load of apples to the fair, and a small machine to grind and press them into cider. I took the address of the owner intending to visit him after the close of the State Fair. But Mr. S—— of Muscatine exhibited more sense. He was one of the timers, and before the horses were unharnessed he was on his way to cross the river, and in less than 24 hours became the owner of the stallion. He did not show the same good sense however in the treatment after he became the owner. The horse was very fat, his blood out of order as was evident from the swollen limbs, and cold weather was approaching. It was asserted at the time that he sewed a thick blanket on his neck which he wore night and day, and when he drove there was an additional envelopment of a big hood. At all events he died during the winter, pneumonia being the cause I felt confident that had he lived he would have proved one of the great horses of the day.

While I was called upon to decide many disputed cases, there was one which was of more than passing interest. Dexter was purchased of Geo. B. Alley by A. Fawcett and George Trussel, and Budd Doble was engaged to train, ride and drive him. It was important that the man should be a rider as well as a driver, and the first intention was to employ John Murphy. He was engaged, however, and Budd was so warmly recommended that he was taken in his place. No better selection could have been made, and he went through the first season with eclat. As is well known, Trussel was killed the fall of 1866 by a former mistress, and the estate administered upon. The first purchase was made for $14,000, and at the administrator's sale Fawcett bought the other half for $10,000. In 1867 he made a contract with Budd, the terms being that Fawcett should receive two-thirds of the gross earnings. The agreement ran from May to a date in November, perhaps all through that month. He was campaigned, or, it will be more proper to state, exhibited all over the country, with many engagements to fill. Mr Fawcett sold him to Robert Bonner, receiving $33,000. Mr. Bonner paid $35,000, the agent who managed the sale getting $2,000 from Mr. Bonner and the half or whole of the trotter Silas Rich from Fawcett. It was shrewd management on the part of the agent. He went to Mr. Bonner and learned that he would pay $35,000 for the reigning King of the Turf. He induced Fawcett to take $33,000, and the seller was so well pleased with the transaction that he presented him with the bonus described. As Fawcett had an interest in Dexter Park he reserved the right to meet Dexter's engagements thereafter which the horse was to be delivered to Mr. Bonner. That could only be done with the consent of Doble, as his contract ran for at least six weeks after the last trot in Chicago. He trotted on the 5th of September against Silas Rich, Bashaw Jr., Tackey and Gen. Butler, and on the 7th against Brown George and running mate. There was a a very large attendance on both days, the interest heightened by the knowleoge that it was a decided farewell to the glories of a public race.

The parties to the contract could not agree as to what would be a fair compensation to remunerate Doble for the unexpired time, and so arbitration was determined upon to settle the matter without troubling the courts. Fawcett selected a friend from Cincinnati, Doble a Chicago friend, and I was chosen referee. It was evident that the umpires were in the position of advocates, each striving to gain an advantage for his client, and at last both insisted that I should make the award. Before entering upon the business, the parties were made to sign an agreement binding themselves to abide by the decision rendered, and so it became an imperative duty that due care should be observed in arriving at a just verdict. Mr. Doble exhibited his books, which had been carefully kept, every item of receipts noted from the time he trotted his first race in the spring until his last race at Chicago. The gross receipts were something over $18,000. So that Fawcett had cleared over $12,000, and as Doble told me that he had made Bolly Lewis (the Pilot Jr. Bolly) pay the expenses, he was something over $6,000 "ahead" on the work from May to September 7th. Taking that for a basis, and after making due allowance for bad weather, the verdict was that Fawcett should pay Doble $3,300. Mr. Doble at once tore up the contract, though the other had a glum look, and when I learned that he had offered $3,000 to settle the matter, and found fault with the additional $300, I came to the conclusion that refereeship hereafter should be carefully avoided.

Eastern Entries.

We published last week lists of the entries made by Californian Stables for the events of 1889 at Kansas City, St. Louis, Chicago, Louisville, Nashville and Monmouth Park. This week we publish those for Brooklyn, Jerome Park and Baltimore. The Golden State, it will be seen, is this year to be even better represented beyond the Rockies than heretofore.

A Californian's Opinion.

"It is a thorough treat to see New Yorkers driving, and to see the splendid turn outs they have. I allude now entirely to the trotters driven either single or double." The speaker was a Californian, says the New York Times, who had just returned faom a drive through the Park and "on the road" behind the 2:24½ mare of a prominent Union Club man. "California raises the fastest, and I, of course, believe the best trotters in the world, but one might drive daily for a month in and about San Francisco without seeing as many really first-class trotters as I have seen to-day. A California bred trotter that cannot do better than 2:40 as a four-year-old our breeders don's deem worth his keep. Yet one could almost count the horses actually used as roadsters in 'Frisco' on his fingers and toes who can do that gait on our drives. It's another case of the shoemaker and his barefooted children, I suppose. Our horses are raised for the market, and as I find them scattered everywhere the market must be a good one east of the Rockies. Our wealthiest breeders seem content to drive their 'plugs' at home, and our best ones are flying over the drives here in Chicago, Boston, Washington, St. Louis, and everywhere I go except in 'Frisco.' Strange, isn't it?"

A Rich Stake.

The many rich three-year-old stakes of the past will be thrown into comparative insignificance this year by the Realization Stake to be run for in June at Sheepshead Bay. This great stake race is really the outcome of the Futurity, for while it was opened long before the latter was run for the first time, still the Secretary of the C. I. J. C. with his keen perception, saw that the Realization would be a fitting supplement to the great event which overshadows all other two-year-old stakes in this or any other country. Mr. J. G. K. Lawrence never does things by halves, and in bringing the newly created stake to a successful termination, as far as entries are concerned, has shown much discernment and great executive ability. The Coney Island Club has the Prince of Secretaries, and its unqualified success is due in a great measure to the indefatigable efforts put forth season after season by Mr. Lawrence, who never seems to tire in the good work of providing first-class sport for the spectators, and enormous purses for the stable owner.

There are almost two hundred horses entered, still eligible to run for the rich stakes, and it will not be out of place to pause and consider what the owner of the winner will receive for his share. From the data at present to hand it will not be hard work to make a somewhat close estimate, and while of course the number of starters may not be guessed exactly right, still an approximation can be made. For this rich stake it may be assumed that at least ten starters will face the flag when the bugle note is sounded, and taking that small number as being the correct one, there will be $40,200 to divide between the horses placed 1, 2, 3. Of this amount the second horse will receive $3,666, while the third will place to the credit of his owner a consolation plum of $1,833. This will still leave for the first horse the magnificent sum of $34,700, which even in this day of large stakes stands pre-eminent over all other three-year-old events, as the "big money" stake of the year.

A glance at some of the entries may not be amiss, especially as California is liberally represented. It seems strange, but still is nevertheless true, the crack two-year-old of last year, Proctor Knott, is not a candidate for Realization honors, probably from an oversight on the part of Mr. Bryant. Among the most prominent of the Eastern entries we find the name of D. D. Withers represented by the superb Faverdale colt and also by the Cadence colt and the Sweet Home filly. The Dwyer Brothers have Brussells, Oregon and Longstreet. Mr. A. J. Cassatt's late purchase, Eric, is companion to Madstone in the nominations. Mr. A. Belmont has Lady Margaret and that beautiful filly She. The choice of David Gideon's lot is the unbeaten French Park and that game horse Radient. The McMahon stable will furnish Hector with a probability of Garrison having the mount, he being the silent partner of the firm. As opposed to "Snapper," his rival, McLaughlin, will ride the Faustus colt Galen, for the Chicago stable. Genial Walter Gratz has entered Blue Rock and Forum, while Capt. Sam Brown's colors will be displayed on either Galop or Reporter. Proctor Knott was defeated last year by Kasson, Mr. J. J. Carter's colt, and his name is also in the list. McClellan and Roche have The Lioness, Liberty, Metal, and the fleety Limbo as representatives, and J. E. McDonald has The Bell, Bill Barnes and Corinth. Green Morris will start either Tipstaff or Lannes, while A. G. Newsum has Sportsman and Mamie Fonso. If Lady Pulsifer comes to in good shape, Major Thomas will possibly send her on from Kentucky to compete, and Mr. Burch has placed in entry that good colt Seymour. We now arrive at the Californian contingent, which is headed in quality by Mr. J. B. Haggin's prime race horse Salvator, while in that gentleman's list is also the fairly good Fresno, Firenzi's brother Florentine, Ransom, Marsac and the moderate Winfield. "Lucky" Baldwin has two entries, neither of which proved high class last year, Caliente and Ganymede. As Senator Hearst's Philander is drawn from all Western and Pacific coast spring events, he will in all probability be specially prepared for this rich three-year-old stake. By an oversight, The Czar, owned by Theodore Winters, was entered for 1890 instead of 1889, thus barring the Emperor of Norfolk's brother out from the Realization. Although only a few of the many have been picked out, and then only what is supposed to be the best of the lot, still it is just possible that neither the first, second or third is named in this short article, and that the leaders may turn up in the hundred and fifty or more who have not been mentioned.

Where Proctor Knott Lives.

A few weeks ago the writer was enabled to take a private peep at the winner of the rich dual events, the Junior Champion and the now celebrated Futurity, and as all our exchanges have had more or less to say about the great son of Luke Blackburn, it may not be considered out of place to tell the readers of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN where and how he is kept. I arrived at Louisville one winter afternoon and asked for the stable of Mr. Bryant. Much to my astonishment my informant said that Bryant had two stables, but as they were close together no trouble would be had in finding what was wanted. As I walked out toward the Jockey Club grounds my thoughts reverted to a day in last summer when thousands were congregated on the Monmouth course, each and all feeling anxious as to the result of the next race. It was Junior Champion day, and the largest gathering of the meeting was present; from all sides and high above the din could be heard only one word, Oregon. It seemed to be the generally accepted fact that the Dwyers could not lose the rich stake with their fast Onondaga colt, and although there were fifteen down on the card to start, the pencillers would not do better than 5 to 2 about the favorite. The one name seemed to drown all mention of the others, and I must confess that when Col. S. D. Bruce quietly told me that Mr. Withers had a sure thing in the Faverdale colt my surprise was great, for it seemed like heresy to even think that any horse beside Oregon had a chance. I shall never forget how the horses were critically examined by the knowing ones; conjecture was at an end, the race was seemingly all over but the shouting, people in anticipation were jingling their winnings in their pockets. But there, they're off. The great crowd was silent, then up went a cry, "Oregon's beat! The Faverdale colt wins!" For an instant how I did inwardly swear at not taking Col. Bruce's tip. But what is that forging ahead? A big chestnut, his rider showing a polka dot outfit, which, when discerned, causes every one to glance at the programme to find out what horse it can be. Proctor Knott, who is he, what is he, where did he come from, only that small knot of Western men could answer; but as their cry went up, "Knott wins!" that vast body of spectators knew that another marvellous two-year-old was making his bid for public favor. The Faverdale colt and Fresno were trying to lessen that three clear lengths of daylight, but try as they would the son of Luke Blackburn would not be caught, the little midget "Pikey" Barnes, carrying the Scoggan and Bryant entry on to easy victory.

Then again, I saw a retrospective view of the Sheepshead track on futurity day, forty thousand persons anxious for the "big event," but hardly any doubting the speed and ability of Proctor Knott to carry the Polka Dot again to the front. Nineteen starters and only even money against the Kentucky horse. What a grand scoop the bookmakers will make if any of the less favored can by any possibility win. From the west comes a cry, "Look out for Galen; at five-eighths he is a world beater, and may go the three quarters." I kept my eye upon the reputed western wonder, and when he passed the five furlong post, I looked around for some one of whom I will borrow money enough to get home on. But there comes that little black imp on Bryant's Proctor Knott, closely pressed by the Golden State entry, Galen has found his superior and falls by the wayside; he cannot go the distance. What a long breath I did take when number 4 was hoisted; it was a perfect sigh of relief. Proctor Knott had won, and I took a palace car home.

Just before the race I saw a man come rushing in frantically, as though an extra lease of life depended on his leaving nothing unseen. He called a messenger boy, and told him to put this (handing him a gold note) on number 4, saying that was his lucky number. The boy started off to execute the commission, and I watched the odd-looking man standing close beside me, who had superstition enough in his composition to warrant him in placing money on a number instead of on the known merits of a thoroughbred. The race is over, and the old gentleman asks who has won, just as the boy returns with the ticket. "What! Number 4 is Proctor Knott! No, my boy, keep the money. No Duluth man would accept money won by any horse having such a name." And he walked away, conscious that he was justified in his action, but no doubt feeling sorry that Proctor Knott was number 4 on the programme.

However here I am at Fourth Street road, and there is Sam Bryant standing talking two gentlemen. When his interview with them was at an end I stepped forward, and after a hearty hand shake inquired for the horse. I was invited in to see Mrs. Bryant, than whom no one more dearly loves a good horse, and was greeted cordially by the lady of the house. As I sat in the back room the door leading out into the yard opened, and I turned my head as one will and saw a rather strange sight. One of the servants had entered the room, the door being open for a second or two, and it was what I saw in that brief space of time that caused my astonishment. At the back of the residence there is a neat two-story frame building, with two windows facing the rear end of the residence, and from one of those windows was shoved the head of a horse, a head when once seen never to be forgotten. As the door closed I turned to Mrs. Bryant and said, "he seems to know you have company."

"Know when we have company, well I should think he did, why he just watches the house all the time."

When we went out to see the greatest living three-year-old in America a look of pleasure seemed to light up the face of the noble animal, and as we sauntered toward the door his eye brightened, the nostrils quivered just a little, and the ears were picked up, waiting to hear a pleasant salutation from his master and mistress. They both spoke to him, and the delighted son of Luke Blackburn showed by a look of intelligence unmistakable how pleased he was. On entering the stable I found a good liberal portion partitioned off for his use and benefit, the walls and front of the manger being heavily padded. On the floor was a thick, heavy bedding of selected straw, and everything about the place was as clean and neat as could be. The greatest care is taken of the horse, some people think even to childishness, but when the reader considers that he won almost $70,000 for his owner last season, and that there is a chance for even greater winnings this year, is it any wonder that every attention possible is paid him? In the large yard surrounding the house he is given his breathing spells; and while present he was allowed to go out and race around the enclosure much to his delight. He is full of playfulness, and as gentle as a kitten. At Mr. Bryant's request I pared an apple and held it out toward the great race horse, but before coming toward me he seemed to ask permission from his master. Slowly the big, handsome head, ornamented by the large white stripe, came toward me, and finally took a bite of the apple. He enjoyed it immensely, but when I tried to pat his nose he indignantly threw up his heels and would allow of no familiarity, although from members of the family he expects and receives pats and rubbing a score of times each day.

The large yard is kept free from rubbish of any kind, not even the most minute particle of wood or stone being allowed to remain on the ground, for fear of any injury to his feet. The food given him is carefully selected by Mr. Bryant, and consists of shelled oats, bran and hay. He has not had even a bridle on his head since he was brought home after winning the Futurity, and in this one particular point I think Mr. Bryant displayed first-class judgment in not starting him after the big race. The horse was not over-worked last year, he retired without a strain or blemish, being perfect in every particular, his long rest will enable him to stand a heavy preparation, and the racing public of America can rest assured when Proctor Knott faces the flag next season it will have to be a world beater that can make him lower his colors.

Mr. Bryant will not start Proctor Knott in the Kentucky Derby, and will in all probability wait until the American Derby before giving him a mount. There are many who would like to have him meet Galen at the early meeting, but most assuredly he will not, as Bryant is opposed to the early work and says he will not be started. Come to Taw, another horse belonging to the same owner will carry his colors at Louisville, and the public will have to be satisfied with that.

Something About Horse Haven.

We are indebted to Mr. Shults for a copy of the Brooklyn Times which contains a description of the stock on his Parkville Farm, and also a synopsis of the methods employed by Mr. Shults in the early stages of training, that portion is appended. One of the paragraphs we hold to be of so much importance to every one who has horses in training, that we have marked it to be italicized. The advice is especially applicable to youngsters, and a great many—it may be said nearly every vicious or unsteady horse—has been made so by brutal treatment. Even treatment which can hardly be called brutal may be sufficient to spoil the temper. One severe blow of the whip may have the effect, a succession of them is nearly certain to do injury which months of kind treatment will not remedy. Some colts, of course, are more easily "spoiled" than others, and this class are generally the kind which with proper care would prove to possess desirable qualities, though once made a party to a battle in which man and colt have lost their temper it is a difficult job to undo this injury.

A good illustration is furnished by Anteeo. When a three year-old, and commencing his work in the spring, he was "hitched" to a heavy cart. In front of the stable, and between that and the street there is a gravelled space, the northern boundary being a high fence made with upright redwood boards. When given the word to start he wheeled part way around and commenced to back. A cut of the whip, harder than was intended, and he rushed back with so much force as to smash the wheels through the fence. The response was two lashes under the flank, given with a will, and the return was an effort to back still further, and when that could not be accomplished, owing to the obstruction in the case, he made an upward bound and threw himself down, with great force, on the shaft.

He was permitted to lie until he got up of his own accord, but his ears were laid back during the whole of the drive, and it took months to overcome that one mistake. He was grossly ill-treated thereafter, and it has always been our opinion that the ill-usage was all that prevented him from the honor of the topnotch in the stallion record.

It will be seen that Mr. Shults' "primary school" is similar to that at Palo Alto, and the curriculums practically alike.

Horse Haven is a name as applicable now to Kings County as it is to Saratoga or any of the great breeding districts of Kentucky or Tennessee.

Facing the Coney Island Boulevard and between that beautiful driveway and the old Coney Island road and just below the Manhattan Beach Railway tunnel is the Parkville Farm, owned by Mr. John H. Shults. Only those who have been permitted to pass though the gates can have an idea of the immensity of the place and the completeness of its appointments, of its mile track and its comfortable stable, where over a hundred box stalls are occupied by brood mares, two-year-old colts, yearlings and weanlings, all of the finest breeding.

A Times reporter visited the farm during one of the days of the week just closing and was greeted by Mr. Shults with his well-known cordiality. That gentleman was superintending the work of a number of mechanics and laborers who were completing what is to be the school for the primary education of the colts raised on the farm. Mr. Shults is a gentleman who believes in doing things thoroughly when he undertakes them. He has original ideas concerning the training of the horse, and neither his own time nor money is spared in carrying them to completion.

The building in which the primary school is to be located is a substantial one, ceiled with narrow, spruce pine boards, and well lighted by many windows fitted with small panes, surrounding which are frames of parti-colored glass. The ring will be about ten feet in width, and one-twelfth of a mile in circumference. It is to be oblong in shape, and will be fitted at the sides and corners with rounded beams, so that it will be impossible for the youngsters to injure themselves.

"In order to train a horse thoroughly," said Mr. Shults, "it is necessary to have two fixed rules, kindness and firmness. A horse can be well and thoroughly taught if treated well. He cannot be by any show of brutality. I don't want any man who uses brutal force about my place. The result of this treatment is shown in the fact that anyone of my horses, even the stallions, can be approached without fear that he will bite or kick.

"This is to be the primary school," continued Mr. Shults. "It is where the youngsters will be taught their alphabet, the A B C of their education. When the colt has been weaned—say when he is about six or eight months old—he is brought here and two accomplished trainers will take him in hand. He is placed in the ring and the first letters of his alphabet are taught him. 'A' is to make him stand at the word of command and allow himself to be handled. This teaches him to be gentle and become used to men. Then comes 'B,' which is to have him walk and stand. After that is 'C,' in which he learns to jog. Of course his former lessons are impressed on him at the same time, and lesson 'C' includes also lessons 'A' and 'B.' The fourth course, teaching him the 'D' of his alphabet, is to have him trot. When he understands that thoroughly he becomes ready to break to harness. All that he has been taught thus far is without harness. This method of treatment gives the horse a confidence in himself. It causes him to become used to the word of command, and when the harness is placed on him he is not apt to become unruly, as might be the case if he were entirely green.

"When the horse learns all this that I have outlined," Mr. Shults added, "he is ready for the intermediate schooling. He is then taken to the track outside, and goes through the same course of treatment in harness to a light sulky. It is again impressed upon him to stand, to walk, to jog and to trot. If the weather is not fit for the continuance of the training out of doors we train him under cover."

The directors of the Latonia Jockey Club reinstated Jack Chinn Monday last. He was expelled from the turf last autumn for cutting John Dowling of St. Louis. Strong Kentucky influences have been urging his reinstatement for some time and have prevailed. Away down in 'old Kaintuck" they do not seem to think it such a heinous offense to eviscerate a man.

CORRESPONDENCE.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—Noticing in your columns dates are claimed by various associations for this season's fairs, but I note, too, that our end of the State is entirely overlooked. We think that we should have some rights, and naturally our fairs should come first by reason that our products come earlier and can be shown earlier, and as regards racing it makes a natural circuit beginning at San Diego, Los Angeles, then to Fresno, San Jose, Sacramento and back again by Stockton, Napa and so on. We have many good horses, are willing to give good purses, and can promise large attendance. Conflict of dates would be unfortunate, and can and should be avoided, which can easily be done by having a meeting of all the different associations at Sacramento, and I would suggest that Mr. L. U. Shippee President of the State Agricultural Society, call such meeting, say Feb. 12th, or about that time. L. J. ROSE.

LOS ANGELES, January 8th, 1889

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—It will not be out of place during the present enforced quiet times in trotting-horse circles, to discuss the good of the cause before the next circuit opens. I would therefore cail the attention of the managers of our fairs and trotting parks to the fact that some of them are members of the "National," while others subscribe to the regulations and rules of the "American" Trotting Association. A horse, driver or owner suspended at Los Angeles would be debarred from starting at Petaluma, Santa Rosa or Napa; but the punishment inflicted at the place first named would not necessarily follow him or be enforced at Oakland, Sacramento, San Jose or Stockton. A fine imposed at San Jose need not necessarily be respected by Los Angeles, Petaluma, Santa Rosa or Napa, but must be recognized at Sacramento, Oakland and Stockton. Should not one or two of our fair managements take this matter in hand, and ascertain what are the desires or opinions of all the Track Associations in the circuit or in the State? The fact of Sacramento and others preferring the National, whilst Los Angeles and others elect to join the American Association, should not stand in the way of all of our coast tracks acting jointly for the best interests of the trotting horse enterprise. The jealousy and rivalry of the two parent associations should be made to redound to the benefit, not to the possible injury, of this great and ever growing interest. Let it be understood that every punishment or fine inflicted on any track will follow the culprit upon all other tracks throughout the State, and it will soon make no difference whether the National or the American go out of existence, for we shall then have the nucleus of a "Pacific" Trotting Association. If a joint circular were sent out by the State Fair (representing the National) and the Los Angeles (for the American Association members), and if this were done at an early date, there is but little doubt that every association in the State would subscribe to the agreement. Messrs Smith and De Camp would certainly serve the interests of the trotting-horse breeders, and of all lovers of fair play in trotting races, by taking this matter in hand.

Respectfully, A BREEDER.

DEAR GRIM: I am the proud and happy recipient of your letter, written yesterday, and am pleased to know that a long sojourn in the effete East and an intimate acquaintance with foreign potentates and princes have not effaced from memory's tablets (that last expression is chaste, but a little bold, ain't it?) the recollections of those who knew and loved you when you stood Patsy Donelly up for cocktails, and called trousers "pants," when the click of Ridgeley's revolver made sweet music at infrequent intervals, and the voice of the Keno box was heard in the land. Dropping into a foreign tongue with which I doubt not you are familiar: "Tempora mutantur et nos mutamur in illas," which translated illiterately means: "There are silver threads among the gold."

Among those that we then held nearest and most dear, few are now paying poll tax (they never paid any other; for cause.) Death in many shapes and forms, among which might be named delirum tremens, solitary confinement, strangulation, cold lead—and Dr. Jordan—has claimed them for his own, and I, even I only, am left (to quote from Holy Writ.) To say "Peace to their ashes" might be considered as irony, and a covert insinuation as to their present habitation, while to "drop a tear" might be construed as a reflection on the mater supply.

But to return to our muttons, as we say in the French. I am more than pleased to know that you are again one of the people, and I fancy that your entire and startling ignorance of the horse will adapt you admirably for the position you are preparing to fill. Some fellow once said of another fellow that "He relied on his memory for wit and his imagination for facts." While I will admit that you do not come within the ban of the first paragraph, I have no alarm but that you will never fail under any circumstances to apply the rule of the latter, when you consider it beneficial and proper, and I am layin' me bets that you have ere this convinced Mr. Simpson, breeder of Anteo, Antevolo, etc., that he is an ignoramus, and his mind is dark on the horse.

Pardon the intolerable length to which I have strung this out. In reply to your brief note I will, as you request, from time to time send such items as may be of interest to your readers, and will certainly call and renew our long lapsed acquaintance when next in town. Very truly yours,

Jo D. SPROUL.

CHICO, Cal., January 7, 1889.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—I see by the Horsman that Richmond is dead. Another good horse gone. Should Kate Allen foal a horse colt I would take great pleasure in giving you a colt by him in three or four years.

I have decided to breed Kate Allen to Mr. George Hankins' horse Terra Cotta, by Harry O'Fallon, dam by Bay Dick, son of old Lexington, his dam by Brown Dick, he by imp. Margrave out of Fanny King, by imp. Glencoe, Bay Dick's dam by Boston, 2d dam of Terra Cotta by another son of Lexington, his dam by imp. Glencoe, Harry O'Fallon by imp. Australian, dam by Irish Birdcatcher, etc, etc.

Oh, no, I won't get much of a colt from this breeding. Some other man will hold over me, in their mind. I shall keep Kate Allen as long as I can, and breed her to just such horses as Amadis and Terra Cotta. If her foals live I will give the country the best breed or horses ever known. No S. T. B business. Anybody can find out how Kate's foals are bred. They can tell them readily, wherever they see them. They will always be in the lead, never looking for a hole in the fence, or laying back in their britchings. The road will never be too long for her produce, or too heavy, too hard, or too dry. They will be bred so they will be equal to any task they are called upon to perform. Do you follow me? I will not have them registered in the Broadway Journal, either. They will go to the end of the road, if they do not stand out in broad array in said book.

The road drivers are told that they shall have a road to exercise their horses. Of course they are all delighted, and feel as happy as the lad with his first pair of boots, or pants with pistol pocket. We have had the most lovely Fall in Chicago this season that we ever had. The roads are as smooth and safe as in June; no frost as yet. Old Probs tells us no snow until the middle of the month.

New Year's Day we had lots of fun at Ed. Smith's, on 51st street. I should say in and about the Club House a couple of thousand people perambulated. We had pacing and trotting races. Had you been here, Mr. Editor, you would have recognized many a face which you could call the name of, such as Hank Milligan, Ira Holmes, Charley Daft, Charley Eaton, and any number of others. Wishing you the compliments of the season, I am, yours, etc.,

ON THE ROAD.

CHICAGO, Ill., January 4, 1889.

Racing at Los Angeles.

It looks as though the Holiday race meeting was not being attended with any better results than those held in San Francisco. The Tribune says of the races on January 4th:

Blue Bonnet and Estrella were the only two to sport colors in the mile heats. Estrella was a heavy favorite. In the first heat Estrella led throughout and won by half a length in 1:50. The next heat proved quite a surprise to the "talent." The horses were sent on their journey without much delay, and a blanket would have covered them at any point of the race. They came down the straight, neck and neck, and both jockeys plied their whips with vigor, and when the judges decided that Blue Bonnet had won by a nose, a shout of joy went up from those who had backed the short end. The time was 1:47, the fastest heat by three seconds, but that is not saying very much. The third heat was captured by Estrella by less than a length. Blue Bonnet entered the straight with a good lead, but young West sent Estrella after the leader, and was soon at the head of affairs.

The "one and one-forth" brought together Dave Douglass, Grisette and Consuelo. Consuelo assumed the lead at the fall of the flag, and the order past the stand was Consuelo, Dave Douglass, and Grisette. The trio were bunched at the quarter pole. Denison sent Dave Douglass to the front along the back stretch, and Grisette, who brought up the rear, appeared to have had enough. Turning at the home-stretch Dave Douglass looked all over the winner and came under the wire pulling hard, a length ahead of Consuelo. The distance was a trifle too far for Grisette, with such a heavy weight on.

MILE HEATS.

Estrella (West)	1	2	1
Blue Bonnet (D. Denison)	2	1	2

Time 1:51; 1:47 and 1:54

ONE AND ONE-FOURTH DASH.

Dave Douglass, 116 lbs, (D. Denison)	1
Grisette, 120 lbs. (Brown)	3

Time 2:13.

The second day's racing was not largely attended, only about two hundred persons being present Saturday, January 5. The Tribune in a short account says: "The heat race, one mile and one hundred yards, resulted in a win for Dave Douglass. Four Aces, 85 pounds, won the first heat, defeating Dave Douglass, 121 pounds, Grisette, 115 pounds, and Eddie Smith, 80 pounds, in 1:51¼. The second and third heats were captured by Dave Douglass in 1:52½ and 1:55. Grisette sold favorite in the field. D. Dennison rode the winner.

Estrella, 113 pounds, beat Consuelo, 100 pounds, in the three-quarter mile dash in 1:18. West rode the winner.

The consolation race, distance one mile and 40 yards, resulted in a boil-over. Consuelo sold favorite two to one over the field, but Telephone proved victorious, defeating Consuelo, Blue Bonnet and Eddy Smith in 1:51. The latter horse led and looked all over the winner at the three-quarter mile post."

Los Angeles April Meeting.

LOS ANGELES, January 7th.—The programme arranged by the Los Angeles Turf Club for the annual meet, to be held April 8th to the 13th, just completed, offers attractive features to horse owners. The events are as follows:

Second day—Purse for all ages, $150; $25 to second, 10 pounds above the scale; entrance free; second race, Pioneer stake, handicap, all ages, $25 entrance, half forfeit, $150 added, one and one-sixth-mile heats; third race, trotting dash of one and three-fourth miles, $400, free to all.

Third day—Inaugural sweepstakes, for three-year-olds, $20 each, $200 added, one mile; second race, two-year-old trotting, mile heats, 2 in 3, $200 added, third race, trotting, three-minute class, purse $200.

Fourth race—Lullaby stakes, for two-year-olds, five-eighths of a mile, purse $200, 10 per cent. entrance; second race, trotting, 2:35 class, one mile, 3 in 5, purse $350; third race, trotting dash, two miles, free for all; Novelty, $250 added, according to time.

Fifth day—Southern California cup, all ages, two and one-quarter miles; second race, pacing, 2:30 class, $350, one mile.

Sixth day—First race, three-quarters of a mile, purse $300, all ages; second race, trotting, double team, free for all horses that have never beaten 2:30, $400, one mile.

Monterey District Colt Stakes.

The annual meeting of the Monterey District Colt Stakes Association was held in the City Hall, Salinas, Saturday, Dec. 29th, 1888, President Kilburn in the chair. The meeting was called to order at 2 P. M., and the Secretary, S. Z. Hebert, presented his report, which was read and adopted. Treasurer J. B. Iverson also submitted his report, showing that he had paid the winners of the 1888 stakes $445 and had $100 in cash on hand.

The next order of business was the election of officers for the ensuing year, which resulted as follows: President, Paris Kilburn; Treasurer, J. B. Iverson; Secretary, S. Z. Hebert.

Messrs. J. B. Iverson, P. Kilburn, Wm. Vanderhurst, J. D. Barr, C. C. Allen, E. Zanetta, C. F. Langley, and Ed. Maguire paid their second entrance installment for the stakes of 1889.

A new stake was formed for 1890, and on motion of J. B. Iverson the time for entrance was extended from Jan. 1st, to Feb. 1st, 1889.

A two-year-old running stake was then formed for 1890, to be run for at Salinas by colts foaled in the countries of Monterey, San Benito, Santa Cruz and San Luis Obispo, with entrance fee of $50 to be paid as follows: On or before Feb. 1st, 1890, $10; June 1st, 1890, $15; Sept. 1st, 1890, $25. Distance, three-quarter mile dash.

A stake was also formed for colts foaled in 1888 in said counties to run in 1890, entrance fee, $50, payable as follows: On or before Feb. 1st, 1889, $5; Jan. 1st, 1890, $10; June 1st, 1890, $10; Sept. 1st, 1890, $25.

The Association adjourned to meet again at the same place, on Saturday, Jan. 26th, 1889, at 2 P. M.

Those desiring to enter colts, will please send name, color, dam and sire of colt, with entrance money, to the secretary at Salinas City, Cal.

A Foreign Endorsement of Tips.

We have received a letter from Randolph Huntington, Esq, of Rochester, N. Y., which had inclosed still another letter, from A. Haslewood, Veterinary Surgeon to his Grace the Duke of Devonshire. As they may prove of interest to the readers of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, both are given below:

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Dec. 12, 1888.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—My correspondence for three years has been mostly abroad, with gentlemen; and I have had opportunity to benefit some worthy of mention.

I have presented several copies of your "Tips and Toe Weights," and in every instance your teachings have been endorsed.

When the Arab mare Naomi came to me in August, she was beautifully shod with Charlier shoes, put on so as to be almost a part of the wall of the foot. A. Haslewood, private surgeon to the Duke of Devonshire, had been long my correspondent. He is a very able man—one of the best in England.

I had sent him copies of your paper, and also told him of you, and of your methods in matter of "Tips."

As he could not understand me, I presented him with my private copy of your book, presented and addressed to me by you. (It was the only one to be had here.) And thinking to please you, I send you his last letter to me, which please return.

I have letters from France also approving your methods. This one I enclose is from a man whose influence is very great. You know that "His Grace the Duke of Devonshire," is one of the biggest and best breeders in England.

Now that I have given your present to me away, I want you should replace it in my library with your own presentation, as in the other.

If I were a younger man, or even had I the means I once had, I would train and trot this Arab mare Naomi. You know she is as pure as pure can be, and is of the best of the best, and yet is a whirlwind at trot. When she came, she only knew how to run, as she had been used in the hunt; but in two days, holding her at trot, she took quick to what was wanted, and astonishes everyone who sees her move at trot to saddle. She is not broken to harness. I got her (through the kindness and interest of my English friends in my undertaking) expressly to breed to my Arab bred horses.

Truly, RANDOLPH HUNTINGTON.

BLUXTON, Derbyshire, Nov. 15, 1888.

MY DEAR MR. HUNTINGTON:—Thanks very heart ly for the two books you sent me. "Toe Weights" is capital. Have used the Charlier for years, and am now riding a mare with the half plates advised in "Tips and Toe Weights." The great thing is to let the foot alone, and especially to let the frog reach the ground. I only wish it would do in hard frost, but there, of course, we must have some special aid to progression. I believe you may quite implicitly rely on Mr. Fidal's statements, and I feel sure you have got the pure breed from him. It is pleasant always to read your communications to the Live-Stock Journal. Any time command me if I can do you any service in making inquiries, etc. You might send me a Christmas number of some of your sporting papers; the last you sent were highly appreciated.

Yours Respectfully, A. HASLEWOOD.

Ormonde Not Coming.

"Though it was stated last week as an accomplished fact," says the London Sporting Times, December 22 "that Ormonde had been sold for $85,000 to go to the United States, we said that this intelligence required confirmation, and that in any case the report was incorroct, so far as the horse being sold to go to the States was concerned. It now transpires that the statement which was so widely circulated has no foundation in fact, and that for two years to come, at least until Ormonde has been tried at the stud, the Duke of Westminster will not listen to any offer for him. What caused us to throw doubt on the alleged sale was the knowledge that if he was sold at all it would be to the Argentine Republic, who have been promised the first refusal, and we believe that they would have closed at the figure stated. If he gets roarers he would leave his country for his country's good, but it is to be hoped that he will not."

The New Weights.

The new weight for age schedule, as adopted by the combined Jockey Clubs of the East and West, practically went into effect yesterday, for though the scale as agreed upon does not provide for the months previous to May, yet it is almost certain that the few associations that are now racing will, for the sake of uniformity, inaugurate the new system. We feel satisfied that the wisdom of the committee that decided on the change will speedily be demonstrated by practical results. The prejudices of many of the old-time owners and trainers in favor of the light-weights has been overcome by a square consideration of facts, Weight never hurt a horse, and under the new schedule experience on the part of a jockey and the skill which comes with it, will no longer be at a discount. There are more two-year-olds ruined by inexperienced boys every year than one has any idea of. Every racing stable can furnish one with a long list of instances where youngsters with undoubted speed had their courage broken, their tempers ruined, their mouths spoiled or their joints wrenched by hot-headed, light-weight jockeys. We do not think that the now rule will be a panacea for all this, but it will go a great way toward dimminishing existing evils, and this, after all, is a great step.—Sporting World

The First in 1889.

We have received from Mr. D. L. Hall, Superintendent of the Overland Park, Denver, Col., an account of the first record breaking in the new year. The account given is taken from the Denver Republican of January 2d:

Quite a number of enthusiastic horsemen assembled at Overland Park yesterday at 2 o'clock to witness the first trotting events of 1889. There were no regular races, but several of the best road-horses and teams in the city were speeded on the track, the inner half of which had been put in excellent condition. The interest of the afternoon's exhibition centered in the trotting performances of DuBois Brothers' bay horse Magnet, who was started to beat his record of 2:28¾, made during the fall meeting of the Overland Park Club. More than local interest was attached to the undertaking, as, if successful, it would undoubtedly be the first lowering of a 2:30 record for 1889, and probably the only race in which 2:30 would be beaten on New Year's Day. There was a wager depending on the result, and as the association had regular judges appointed and in the stand, the time made is a record for the horse. Magnet came on the track looking in the best of condition, and after a warming-up mile received the word, and trotted the full mile in 2:28¼, the time of the quarters being, to the quarter pole, 35 seconds; half mile, 1:13½; three-quarter mile, 1:49. This lowered the record, but as another wager had been made that the horse would beat 2:27½, he was again started at the expiration of 25 minutes, and in this heat the time was, quarter mile, 35½ seconds; half mile, 1:10½; three-quarter mile, 1:47¾; mile, 2:27¼. Magnet was driven by Chas. Benjamin, who also drove him in his races last fall. The judges of the race were D. D. Streeter, D. L Hall and W. T. Duncan. The many friends of the DuBois Brothers present warmly congratulated them on their victories over Old Father Time.

Rosemeade Stud.

NEW YORK CITY, Jan. 2 —From early days the spirit of horsemanship has been active in California. The energetic pioneers who peopled the State in search of fortune were a speculative, chance-taking class—a gambling class, if you will—who were ever ready to enter into the excitements of racing and risk their money on it. The consequence was that the mining districts soon found amusement of that sort provided by venturesome sporting men, who carried running horses, and, a little later, when driving became more common, trotting horses, across the plains to the Golden State. The amusement began with quarter-racing, but its popularity soon demanded the establishment of tracks and regular performances to rule, both of running and trotting. Many a fast trotter was picked up in the East and quietly forwarded to California, either across the plains or by vessel, for the money and sport that could be had out of the venture. Later on breeding began in a small way as a natural sequence, and success following, more systematic plans of breeding were entered into, the best strains of blood imported from the East, and an ambitious push made by the State for recognition as a superior horse producing country, capable of holding its own with any in the world.

Among the earlier systematic breeders to take up the production of trotters as a specialty was Mr. L. J. Rose, of Los Angeles, Cal. He never had a large stud, and has not at the present time, but in proportion to the number produced it is questionable whether any breeder in the world has bred as many horses of fast record as Mr. Rose. The foundation of the success of his stud dates to The Moor, a stallion that he purchased of Mr. George C. Stevens, Milwaukee, Wis. The Moor was by Clay Pilot, a son of Neaves' Cassius M. Clay, Jr., out of Belle of Wabash, a fast trotter of high breeding; Clay Pilot's dam was by Pilot Jr.; 2d dam by Mambrino Chief. Along with The Moor he bought the mares Gretchen, by Mambrino Pilot, dam by Canada Chief; Minnehaha, by Bald Chief, out of Nettie Clay, by Strader's Cassius M. Clay; 2d dam by Abdallah; 3d dam by Engineer 2d; Sultana, by Delmonico, dam by Mambrino Chief, and a few others. This gave him a combination of the blood of all the prominent families of the day except that of Seely's American Star.

The Moor died at eight years old, and left but 51 foals, of which five have records below 2:30. His daughter, Beautiful Bells, 2:29½, out of Minnehaha, is proving a wonderful broodmare, having thrown Hinda Rose, 2:19½ at three years; Bell Boy, 2:26 at two years, and 2:19¼ at three years; St. Bel, 2:24½ at three years, and Chimes 2:33½ at two years, His daughter Sable, out of Gretchen, by Mambrino Pilot, produced Sable Wilkes, 2:18 at three years. His daughrer May Sproul produced (by his son Sultan) Margaret, 2:28. His daughter, Madame Baldwin produced (by Sultan) Bay Rose, 2:29. But from Sultana, by Delmonico, The Moor got the stallion Sultan, 2:24, who succeeded him in the stud, and proved one of the most phenomenal of sires, having to the close of 1888 17 representatives in the 2:30 list, and that at 13 years old. Among them are the bay stallion Stamboul, that as a six-year-old has a record of 2:14¾ against time, and a record of 2:15 in a race. Mr. Rose sold Sultan a year or two ago, believing that in his sons Alcazar, 2:20½ at five years, out of Minnehaha, and Stamboul, 2:14¾ at six years, out of Fleetwing, by Rysdyk's Hambletonian, he has better stallions than either Sultan or The Moor. Whether this will prove so remains to be seen, but the promise afforded by the first of the youngsters to come forward is of the highest order. The two-year-old filly Vesolia, by Stamboul, was separately timed in her race with Sunol, at Los Angeles, last August, a mile in 2:26¾, and Murtha, a yearling by him, has just taken a record of 2:41½, and his three-year-old daughter, Nehushta, though defeated in her race, took a record of 2:34½. It is thought probable that Stamboul will be brought East next spring after a brief stud season, and contest the circuit for the stallion championship. He is a gallant-looking large bay horse, and trots in as handsome form as any horse on the turf, and is regarded as near an absolutely sound horse as ever drew a sulky.

There is a family likeness pervading nearly all the descendants of The Moor. They have a high-bred look, and an appearance of quality that more nearly coincides with the thoroughbred than with the usual trotting type. Mr. Rose thinks it has developed chiefly as the result of selection and care for several generations, rather than from any unusual amount of thoroughbred blood, and the pedigrees of the incoming crosses as far as known show no unusual degree of thoroughbred blood. The Moor's dam, Belle of Wabash, was a mare of silky, blood-like quality, and he still believes the original pedigree that she was by Bassinger, son of thoroughbred Lieut. Bassinger, dam said to be imported by William IV., thoroughbred. This may have introduced a strong dash of blood, and may have set the type of the family, which is at all events a departure from the usual trotting form, and not an unattractive one. Belle of Wabash, though a fast trotter, was a high-strung mare, hard to control in races, and had the appearance of a running mare of high form rather than of a trotter.

Stamboul, now the most prominent feature of the family and in public esteem, the head of Rosemeade Stud (though its proprietor is quite as partial to Alcazar), is somewhat a departure from the family type, having in two generations from The Moor partaken of a strong mixture of Hambletonian blood through his own dam and that of his sire, Sultan, with additional lines from the Mambrino Chief and Clay sources. The trotting habit of action is therefore bred into Stamboul line upon line, and he is as pure-gaited as a horse can well be. He is of a very good racing temperament, too, though a trifle nervous, and liable to be frustrated for the moment by untoward circumstances. All things considered, his chances are unusually good for capturing the fastest stallion record in which he is now led by but two performers.

Eastern breeders cannot fail to become deeply interested in a family that has produced such uniform success as that of which Mr. Rose is the creator and Rosemeade still the headquarters. Its remoteness and inaccessibility for a time led them to an indifference regarding it, while not unmindful that it was in its own field making singular progress. The most profitable nick that Palo Alto has yet made for Electioneer was a Rosemeade mare—Beautiful Bells by The Moor, out of Minnehaha—though some of the St. Clair mares, and others highly bred, have done splendidly. San Mateo, too, owes to Rosemeade a share of its greatest success, for when Mr. Corbitt secured Sable by The Moor, out of Gretchen, he captured the dam of the fastest three-year-old to date, and the first by Guy Wilkes to enter the list. That she has also thrown a brother and sister to Sable Wilkes that can go into the twenties whenever called upon is an open secret. When the near neighbors of Rosemeade have found it so highly profitable to dip into its family for successful crosses for the Electioneer and Wilkes blood, and surely for a cross so little tried the results are brilliant. The breeders east of the Mississippi can hardly allow the lethargy of indifference to dull their perceptions to the signs of the times. The world is very small after all. If there is anything in California that bids fair to produce the highest results as a cross for the Wilkes blood, which, in fashion based upon achievements has taken such a hold upon every breeding district from the Atlantic to the territories, neither the distance nor the difficulty will long deter enterprising breeders from having it. At the present stage of the breeding question the Rosemeade family is a most interesting one. But little is known of it here from actual observation. In 1887 Mr. Rose brought some thirty head, mostly yearlings, to New York, and sold them at auction. They were well received, and mainly went into the hands of breeders who had already awakened to the rumors of speed that later in the year culminated in such sensational performances. Colts and fillies sold under such circumstances are little apt to be developed, the buyers preferring to use them for beeeding purposes in hopes of producing a sensational result more exclusively identified with their own interests. Nevertheless, excellent reports come of the little they have been driven, and of several of the elder ones there are reported miles below 2:42 in their three-year-old form.

Mr. Rose has had a gratifying and encouraging experience as a breeder, and one somewhat unusual. He began with stock that suited his judgment as a horseman, though at the time it was selected it was not of really fashionable character. He bred trotters from the start, and so few failures that either his luck or judgment was marvellous. He has bred three generations, each of which was of highly creditable speed, as compared with the productions of prominent contemporaneous breeders. Each generation had far more speed at the average than its predecessor, and while it was apparently a great loss that so good a sire as The Moor should have died so young, it proved ultimately a great advantage, for Sultan, thus forced prominently forward, was greater than The Moor. Profiting by this lesson he had no sooner tested the quality of Alcazar and Stamboul, and found them individually, as in breeding, a decisive improvement on their sire, and that their eldest progeny tried higher than anything he had ever had in hand, then he was willing to let Sultan go in the full tide of his success. Perhaps few breeders in this country could have parted with a sire of Sultan's tested quality without a sense of committing business suicide. But while conscious of parting with one of the most successful young sires that had ever appeared, the owner of Rosemeade felt that he knew himself to be already on such firm and secure ground for the future, by virtue of Stamboul and Alcazar, that he could not afford to use Sultan any longer, great as he was. It is a theory with Mr. Rose, if we understand him rightly, that while the formation of the trotting breed of horses is yet in a progressive stage, the greatest possible results to be achieved within a given space of years will come of creating the greatest number of generations of the best trotting blood that can be fully tested at each stage, in each branch of its mission, before its adoption. In other words, hold to one generation only until the first moment that you can plainly satisfy yourself that you have found its equal or superior in the next. This rather conflicts with the prevailing sentiment of sticking to the old horse as long as he is available, and taking up with his son when you must. But one's views of such matters are apt to be found in the school of personal experience, and, as we have shown, circumstances have conspired to give Mr. Rose a peculiarly vivid insight in this direction, from which he has not been slow to draw his conclusions.

That each generation of trotting stock at the average possesses far greater powers than its predecessor is beyond the question of a doubt; but we sometimes think that individual horses existed some generations back that, could they be reproduced and bred upon the selected mares of to-day would get as successful an average of speed as any of the stallions of to-day.

If Mr. Rose is correct in his theory of breeding, not only will the progeny of Stamboul and Alcazar surpass those of Sultan, as those of the latter surpassed those of the Moore, but the broodmares by Sultan will outbreed those by The Moor, and those of Stamboul and Alcazar will outbreed the daughters of Sultan and The Moor. This is the logic of his school of experience, and he has the courage to practice according to its teachings. The views of a breeder who has accomplished such remarkable results with so small a stud as that of Mr. Rose, are certainly entitled to weight.—HARK COMSTOCK IN N. Y. Spirit of the Times.

Rumors are current that Robert Bonner is negotiating for the purchase of Sunol. The only reliable information that can be obtained is that the price of $50,000 has been placed on the filly, and Mr. Bonner will have to give this figure if he desires to buy her.

Technical Racing Terms.

Sometimes persons reading an account of a race are puzzled with the terms used by turf correspondents, and frequently we have been asked questions, which to the initiated seem simple enough, but which are asked by the semi-occasional race spectator in all sincerity, and with a desire for knowledge. To make the ordinary terms used on a track thoroughly understood, we have carefully prepared the following glossary, which should be read attentively, and hereafter the reader of racing reports will have little or no trouble in understanding the vernacular.

Added to the charmed circle. Meaning that a horse has trotted in 2.30 or better.

Aged. An aged horse is one that is six years old or over.

All to pieces. A horse goes all to pieces when his opponent beats him badly; at least that is the common acceptation of the term. Gone all to pieces means that a horse is lacking the necessary form, to warrant him in making a good race.

Allowances. There are certain reductions allowed from the standard scale of weights, when so advertised, to non-winners, or, as they are usually called, "maidens;" and also to horses in selling races, who are entered at a lower price than that for which the weight is fixed. Allowance in weight is given to gentlemen riders, when public jockeys are in the same race.

To Back. Is to bet on the horse which you fancy will win. You can also back him for a place, meaning he will come in either first or second.

A Backer. A man who bets on a horse, as in contradistinction to the bookmaker who bets against the horse winning.

To Bolt. Is when the rider loses command of his mount and the horse cannot be controlled, or when the horse swerves from the course in which he should go.

Bar. The bookmakers at times will offer 2 to 1 bar one, which means they will lay 2 to 1 against any horse in the field except one.

Bore. To impede the progress of a competing horse by swerving in upon him, thus preventing a jockey from using his whip, or to press him upon the rails.

Bottom. Means that a horse can go long races: has plenty of endurance.

Break Away. A horse breaks away when almost immediately after the word go is given he assumes a commanding lead. It is also sometimes used to designate a false start.

Cast Off. A horse sold from a stable because he is thought to be no account, or inferior in quality, is a cast off.

Catch weight. The owner has the privilege of putting on any weight jockey he pleases: only naturally he puts on the lightest one possible.

Colt and Filly. A male horse is usually designated a colt until he enters his fourth year. A horse of the other sex retains the term filly until she enters her fourth year.

Combination. In pool rooms backers name a horse in each of two or more races to win, and in some instances to run second. This is termed making a combination.

A Crack. A horse of high quality. The best horse in a stable is usually called the crack of the stable.

A Cropper. Where a jockey is thrown from his horse he is said to come a cropper.

Cut down the field. When a horse shows a splendid burst of speed and assumes the lead after being behind, he cuts down his field.

Dead Amiss. When a horse from illness is unable to run he is dead amiss.

Dead Heat. When two horses come under the wire exactly together it is declared a dead heat, or tie.

Duffer. A horse supposed to be no good. The term is also applied to either horse, jockey, or owner when they are known as being unreliable.

False Start. When some of the horses attempt to start and others of the field are behind, the starter does not give the word, or let the flag fall, as those behind would be at a disadvantage, consequently those who have attempted to start must come back and try over again.

Favorite. The horse against which the smallest odds are laid by the bookmaker, or the horse that sells for the largest amount in the pools.

A Long Shot. A horse which the bookmakers have laid large odds against. An outsider.

The Field. The entire number of starters in a race. In betting the mass of horses as opposed to the favorites.

Place Betting. When one wagers that a selected horse will be either first or second. Some of the New York bookmakers make a placed horse either first, second or third.

Fixed. A horse may be said to be fixed when he has been put into a condition rendering it impossible for him to win.

Following. Is a word applied to persons who bet on a stable or a jockey irrespective of how the betting is.

Form. A horse may be in good form or in bad form, and the word applies to his fitness and condition.

Gentleman Rider. Is one who rides for sport and enjoyment, and gives his services without reward. This term is used as opposed to "jockey."

Got at. When a horse has been "fixed," lamed, poisoned, a pail of water given him before the race, etc.

Handicap Race. A race in which the weights on each horse is arranged according to the merits and performances of the entry, instead of in accordance with age. As will readily be seen the object is to give each horse an equal chance.

Hands Down. When a rider has no occasion to use his whip, the horse going fast enough to win without punishment.

Heat Race (As opposed to a dash). When a horse has to establish his superiority by winning two out of three, or three out of five heats in a race.

To Hedge. When money has been wagered on a horse sometimes the person so betting afterwards fancies his selection may be beaten, so he then bets on the other horse to save the money originally bet. This is termed hedging.

In and Out Running. This term applies to a horse who at times will run splendidly, while at other times he will not do near so well. Widely varying form.

Impost. The weight which a horse has to carry.

A Moral. This term is used when it is thought a horse cannot possibly lose. Probably an abbreviation of a "moral certainty." Morals have been known to lose, as backers know to their sorrow.

Nowhere. When a horse comes in far behind the winner he is said to be nowhere.

On the Post. When a horse wins in the last stride or two he wins on the post.

Flat Racing. This is an English term meaning that there are no jumps. Except hurdle and steeplechases all other races are "on the flat."

Velvet, sometimes called clover. A man is betting velvet, when he is putting up money already won. Winnings.

A Plater. A horse not considered good enough for the big events, but kept in the stable for "selling races" and small purses.

A Quitter. A horse that lacks courage, and when challenged falls behind.

Persuaders. Whip and spurs.

A Pocket. When from a combination of riders on the other animals, a horse is behind another and between two others, or one other and the rails, he is in a pocket.

Racing Qualities. A breeder or owner of a well bred mare not wishing to sell her out and out, will at times dispose of her racing qualities for a period, the mare to be returned after the alloted time has elapsed. Horses are sometimes disposed of in a similar manner.

Ruck, also Pack. A body of horses behind the leaders in a race.

Shut Up. To quit. See "A Quitter."

Spread Eagle. When a horse shows such superior quality that he is far in the lead, and the balance of the field is strung out far in the rear, he is said to spread eagle his field.

A Sunday Horse. One capable of doing a brilliant thing at times, but unreliable generally.

To Throw a Race. See "To Pull" and "Fixed."

A Tip. Information how to bet to the best advantage. A "straight tip" is advice or information direct from the stable.

Gone Wrong. When a horse has been in good form, and from sickness or any other cause cannot show his average speed, he is said to have "gone wrong."

A Length. When a horse wins by a length, that is supposed to be by about nine feet. A "length of daylight" is really two lengths.

Hollow Victory. When a horse wins "hands down," or in a canter.

Ups and Downs.

Says a writer in Bailey's Magazine: The fortunes and misfortunes of owners of race horses would extend to a long chronicle if they were to be recorded at length. Modern instances and examples are not wanting, as it has recently been placed on record that whilst one man's horses brought him cash sufficient to enable him to buy back his family estates, it has been stated that the horses of another man have cost him his patrimony. And, in passing, let it be said that the uncertainty of the great game of turf speculation is never so graphically illustrated as when a horse that has cost $2,000 retires from the turf without, perhaps, having won for its owner as many shillings. There have been many such animals. Men, too, could be named who have year after year expended thousands in the buying of blooded stock, and have never been able to place an important turf event to the credit of their racing account. Other men have been more fortunate, but Rosebery's victories were not matters of chance. They had been carefully planned by that excellent man of business who owned that horse, and so were the much spoken of successes of Goldseeker.

About all that can be won in stakes on the racing arena in one season is a little over £400,000, and that sum divided among the horses now in training (say from two to six-year-olds) would only afford to each a nominal amount, and no man who pursues the past-time of racing from pure love of the sport, can, in face of the enormous expenditure which is now the rule, possibly hope to reimburse his outlays from any stakes he may win. A well informed sporting writer wrote the other day that one owner had in other seasons paid for entries alone a sum of over £40,000. With such outlays to contend against, what signifies the winning of a few paltry handicaps, or even a Derby or Oaks, or both of these classic events, with a St. Leger added. In one year (1865) of his career on the turf, a great French racing magnate won close upon £60,000 in England and France. That was undoubtedly a large sum for one year's racing work, but when it is incorporated in the accounts of the seasons which proved less productive or resulted in loss, it is as pence to pounds. Other prominent supporters of the turf have in their day experienced similar vicissitudes of fortune. In the year 1863, a gentleman—the owner of Macaroni—came to the front who carried all before him, and especially winning the Derby, taking out of the ring in absolute money, I am told, the largest sum ever won over that celebrated annual struggle.

But calculation, as brought to bear on the Turf, is best exemplified in the war that is being continually waged between the bookmakers and the backers. In this battle the chance and luck of the racing arena come into prominent view. The £400,000 which are annually fought for by owners is as a drop of rain added to the ocean when compared with the enormous sums which are annually gambled for over the horse in the race courses of the kingdom, and in the many clubs, where betting is now carried on all day long, and in not a few of them during the night time as well. One has but to watch the course of business in paddocks of any well known seat of racing sport to know how vast are the accumulated sums which change hands over each race. No sooner are the number of the runners hoisted than the gambling begins. A popular ready money bookmaker has been known to draw £2,000 over a small handicap, and, according to his own statement, to lay the odds to over £2,000 on a good betting race in one day.

Think, then, reader, of the total sum involved at meetings where over a couple of hundred layers of the odds are to be found loudly shouting for business, giving room and verge enough for the most wonderful frolics of fortune. Only the other day the fact was recorded of a bookmaker's clerk, who, beginning with a sovereign (he was speculating on his own account) was so fotunate as to end his endeavors by the pocketing of a sum of £1,300. Such tales have often been told, but when Fortune bestows her favors the grateful recipients are prone to boast of the fact. On the other hand, when Fortune frowns nothing is said, the loser has then to bear his 'bad turn' as well as he can. It is needless to say that for one winner of the kind alluded to there are ninety-nine losers. The men who do the business of laying the odds on the turf must find a profit, and a glance at the daily returns will show that they usually manage to obtain the where withal to pay a hundred when it is won, and have a bit for themselves.

How Shall We Breed Winners?

Observer writes to the National Live Stock Journal as follows:—The question of how winners are to be bred is easier asked than answered. We have hitherto bred winners from their like. We may expect the same cause to produce the same effect in the future. Like producing like is the legitimate effect of inheritance. It must produce its counterpart agreeable to the logic of events, unless prevented by the violation of some law of nature. The fastest horses in the world would naturally produce the fastest colt in existence, if like produces like, or the likeness of an ancestor. This rule may be counteracted by some physical defect in the constitution of the progeny, inherited from their parents. If we select sound parents to breed from, with a good pedigree running back through a long line of powerful ancestors, we should, according to hereditary law, get the leading characteristics that gave speed and value to those great progenitors.

It was the law of inheritance that gave character and value to the descendants of Flying Childers, English Eclipse and King Herod. It was the same hereditary influence in this country that gave distinction to the descendants of Rysdyk's Hambletonian, Mambrino Chief and Justice Morgan. The inheritance that they entailed on their posterity has not only enriched individuals, but has contributed to public prosperity and the wealth of the State. The runners and trotters of great celebrity owe their distinction, in a remarkable degree, to these distinguished sires. The same blood flows in the veins of their progeny that caused the triumph of their illustrious ancestors. If we keep the blood pure that has bred up such a race of winners, it will perpetuate the same indomitable energy to future generations of horses, and spread over the land the glad tidings of victory. The renown achieved in the triumph of victory is imperishable. It will not crumble into dust, but live in the veneration of the public as long as the art of printing survives.

We should patronize progenitors that seldom fail to stamp an enduring impress upon their offspring. We can estimate the value of the sire from the number of winners he has sired, and determine the merits of the dam by her pedigree and produce. This rule seldom fails to give a faithful history of the distinguished horses that have figured in the pedigree. It is a charter of their origin, and a history of the improvement of the breed. "By their fruits ye shall know them."

The progeny have the temper, habits, and likeness of their ancestors. Those bred in high condition will have all the speed and stamina of their most distinguished ancestors. Hence we have the form and action and general characteristics of the breed reproduced. What better sign of a pure and perfect pedigree is there than superior produce? It is a living photograph of the family, representing kindred blood through a long line of predecessors, terminating in an illustrious race of worthy descendants. We want no better evidence of the merits of a breed than the fruits of their union. It proves their quality through the medium of positive facts, based upon actual trials.

When we have started a breed upon a good foundation, we must rear them up agreeable to the laws of health. The food and care bestowed upon the growth and development of the equine tribe, determines, in a remarkable degree, their future value. They should be fed on that bone and muscle-making food that will grow a superior quality of flesh and bone. The cereals and nutritious grasses are indispensable to the production of a superior class of horses. They must have a bountiful supply of food to sustain the natural waste of the body, and to re-supply the blood with the constituents of living matter that enters into the growth of the muscular structure and stimulates the organs to superlative action. It is the powerful structure founded upon hereditary law, and developed by artificial cultivation, that makes great horses. Let us examine the history of some of our most celebrated horses, and see how they were reared.

American Eclipse was reared in the following manner, according to a memorandum in the handwriting of Gen. Nathaniel Coles, the breeder. The colt was weaned on the 10th of November, 1814. At the commencement of winter he was fed with four quarts of shorts, which was increased during the winter to eight quarts per day, hay, clover dampened. Second year—In the spring turned to grass with no grain; November 10th put up; fed with eight quarts of shorts per day; during winter, shorts increased to ten quarts; hay the same as first winter. Third year—Turned out with four quarts of shorts per day; September 1st commenced breaking; feed, eight quarts oats; through the winter hay as formerly; grain, ground corn and oats equal to eleven quarts of oats; March 1st commenced and trained for nine weeks, then gave a trial of two miles, and found the colt very superior. Fourth year—In summer turned to grass; fed with ground oats and corn equal to nine quarts of oats; in winter, hay as formerly, with nine quarts oats per day till March 1, 1818, when commenced training; feed, oats and cracked corn equal to twelve quarts oats. Fifth year—Late in May, 1818, ran the three-mile heats at Newmarket, on Long Island, and won the first day's purse with ease, beating Black-Eyed Susan and Sea Gull, then called the best three-year-old of the day; turned to grass first of June with about six quarts of oats per day; in winter, fed with hay as before, with ground corn and oats; March 15, 1819, sold Eclipse to Mr. Van Ranst.

It is interesting to know how this great race-horse was reared, and to learn about the food that assisted to develop his powers to become the champion of America. He was not confined to the stable, when a colt, in the winter, but turned into a yard every fair day. Eclipse, when a colt following his dam at five months old, showed his owner such a wonderful stride that he named him American Eclipse. He honored the name by performing the greatest achievements known to the early annals of racing. He was allowed to mature before he was called upon to exert every nerve and muscle in the body to win long, bruising, four-mile races. Eclipse, like his English namesake, never lost a race. At nine years old he was retired from the turf without a rival. His owner announced his determination, "never, on any consideration, to risk the life and reputation of the noble animal, whose generous and almost incredible exertions have gained for the north so signal a victory, and for himself such well-earned and never fading renown."

CATTLE.

A Huge Steer.

Mr. James Kiernan, of Shasta Valley, purchased from David Deter, of Little Shasta, a steer, which weighed 2,420 pounds on foot, and shipped it to Grayson, Owen & Co., the extensive beef contractors for the San Francisco and Oakland markets. It was sold at special rates, as beef of that kind sells for about 40 and 50 cents a pound on the block in this city. This immense steer of the Durham breed, was furnished to Owen Lafferty, of the People's Market, in Oakland, and the mammoth quarters hung up attracted the attention of epicures, who looked with longing eyes on the feast in store for those desirous of securing choice, juicy steaks. This steer was stall fed, and it would be difficult to estimate the exact number of tons of barley consumed by him before he fell a sacrifice. He was led around the streets of Oakland before Christmas, on exhibition, to advertise what was in store for customers at the People's Market on Christmas day, and the demand proved greater than the rush for turkeys or any other meat. This huge specimen of beef, was the finest and largest ever seen in Oakland, or probably anywhere else. and Deter of Little Shasta, has more of the same kind, being noted for his great care and attention in raising the finest and fattest beef stock to be found on this coast or in any section of the country.

Care For the Cow.

The instinct of retaliation when subjected to ill usage is common to all animals, in varying degree, and is never wholly eliminated from our domestic ones, no matter how thoroughly trained they may be. By reason of this—the instinct of self-preservation—some of our domestic animals are vicious. and endanger the lives of their owners. Some have this instinct less prominently developed, and are simply troublesome to handle, while others show almost none of it.

In farming, which is a purely money-making business, these facts are frequently considered, to the exclusion of other facts in animal life which are of equally great importance. The Western farmer is the Achilles whose most vulnerable point, by reason of his surrounding circumstances, is his pocket; and anything which is likely to attack him there will bear watching Perhaps no one of the animals with which he comes in contact is capable of retaliating so strongly when ill treated, or of responding so readily when well treated, as the milch cow. If fed upon poor or insufficient food, if compelled to withstand the storms without sufficient protection, if roughly or brutally treated, she strikes back every time, always hits the vulnerable part—the pocket-book.

On the other hand, if she is well fed, well housed and well handled, her response is most ready; and we doubt if any animal ever kept by the general farmer brings better returns to his pocket-book than does the milch cow that is "built that way."

The Ripening of Cream.

Now as to ripening cream, the writer did not know the general opinion of it, but he would assert that if they had two dairies of fifty cows each, in one of which they churned a sweet cream and in the other sour cream, a strict record would show much larger profit in favor of sour cream. It was well known that the Danes artificially soured their cream. They were wise, because they obtained a better yield. A friend of his, a Dane, now a chemist in Sweden at one of the colleges, had made a series of experiments in proof of this, but they had done the same in Canada. They churned with different creams. No. 1 was sweet and No. 6 sour, the intermediate samples being more or less sour in proportion. The result was that No. 1 gave 5¼ pounds per cent. of butter in the buttermilk; No. 3, 31.2 pounds; No. 4, 2½ pounds; No. 5, 1 pound, and No. 6 one-fourth pound. Sour cream churned better, and it mixed better than partly sweet and partly sour, which entailed great loss. Nevertheless, the Danes were wrong in one particular, they washed their butter in the buttermilk and not in cold water, thus inclosing much caseine or curd, and that it was prevented their butter preserving fine flavor on arriving here. It could not compare with our butter for this reason, nor even with the French. We could beat either if we liked, and we were generally doing it. Preserving butter depended entirely upon the removal of the curd, and not on the presence of salt—Mark Lane Express.

Select Dams Carefully.

It has often been said that "the bull is half the herd," and this is in a certain sense true, for while there may be forty calves from as many different dams during the season, each will inherit more or less from the individual dam, making in every case a different combination, and the longer one lives, and the more closely he studies the problems of heredity from practical results, the more importance will he attach to the dam, says the Breeder's Gazette. In that very strange and incongruous story entitled "An African Farm" there is a world of rubbish, but the author occasionally causes Lyndall, the heroine of the story, to give utterance to some great truths, worded in language that is sometimes startling in its plainness, and among them is her assertion that "there was never a great man without a great mother." The statement is scarcely an exaggeration—all history, so far as we know the facts, attests its truth—and it affords an explanation of the often-noticed fact that so few of our great men have children that are worthy of them. The fact is especially noticeable in horses that have become famous on the turf. The writer hereof a few years ago, when engaged in compiling a record of the pedigrees of the famous trotters, became impressed with the fact that in almost every instance where the pedigree of a great trotter was unknown he found the legend "dam a great road mare." The lesson is obvious; select the sire with as much care as you may—you cannot be too particular in this—but if you expect to achieve success as a breeder of any kind of stock pay quite as much, if not more, attention to the females that are to become the dams of the herd or flock. The success that has been attained by the Woodburn farm in breeding trotters affords a striking illustration of this, and more than one famous sire has had his reputation based upon the produce of a single brood mare The law is the same throughout all animal life, and should be as generally recognized by breeders of cattle, sheep and swine as it is now by breeders of trotting horses,

Constitutional Vigor.

Among the large number of people incidentally interested in stock-raising, there is quite a common opinion that all well-bred stock is delicate and lacking the constitutional vigor of mongrel stock. But the practical breeder of fine stock knows that the facts of the case are not as they appear to the minds of those whose experience with well-bred animals is limited, says Colman's Rural World.

In some respects all highly bred stock may be called tender, but this does not imply the delicacy of constitution that is often inferred. Cows or horses, with their soft skins and fine coats, cannot endure the same amount of cold and wet that thicker-skinned, long-haired mongrels can, not on account of their constitutions, but because of their coverings.

Their constitutions not being so well protected, they are more easily affected. They need a little more care on this account, but the extra labor is not begrudged by those who know the comparative value of well-bred and mongrel stock.

There is great danger, however, of a constitutional weakness becoming a characteristic of a breed. Greater than it is among mongrel stock. Choice stock animals may have a constitutional weakness, just as common stock may, but the choice animal is bred to so much more, that of a necessity he becomes instrumental in spreading his peculiar disorder. Once transmitted, it is very apt to be perpetuated, and if to some simple constitutional disorder is added still other difficulties, the result compounded in succeeding generations is likely to amount to something serious, and to eradicate it from the breed is as difficult as it is to breed out any other race peculiarity.

The breeders of to-day whose ideas of their calling are not bound down by ancient rules are fully alive to the fact that a clean bill of health in a long pedigree is quite as important as a long line of other qualities. They know that disease may be induced by conditions of existence, and perpetuated by the laws of heredity, just as other peculiarities may be taken on and handed down.

The importance of selecting sires free from constitutional weakness can scarcely be overstated, and all breeders should examine the breeding of the sire with as much care regarding this point as any other. Good health is a part of a stock animal's desirable individual quality, and the constitutional vigor of his ancestors is of equal importance with any other ancestral virtue.

Butter Making in Devonshire.

By the courtesy of the Right Hon. Sir Thomas Ackland, Bart, a correspondent was privileged to attend the dairy class at the Home Farm. Miss Maidment demonstrated the making of butter from cream separated by the latest methods, and Mrs. Quartley made butter by the old-fashioned plan of scalding the cream. Each demonstrator was allowed fifteen gallons of milk, the weight of which was a little over one hundred and fifty pounds. And en passant it is as well to mention the great importance of weighing milk rather than measuring it, a point which was incidentally referred to by Sir T. Ackland. Miss Maidment treated her subject in an exceedingly interesting manner, lucidly explaining each point as she proceeded, and giving her audience some hints which cannot fail to prove of the greatest value. She explained that the most important point in churning was to stop immediately the butter breaks or assumes granular form. Unless this is done it is impossible to extricate the buttermilk. She then washed the butter in three waters and placed it in a strong brine—made in the proportion of two pounds of salt to eight quarts of water—where it was allowed to stand for four minutes. It was then placed on the butter worker, and the water gently pressed out of it. When it was thoroughly worked the butter was broken and the grain was distinctly shown, at the same time keeping "as close as wax." Miss Maidment then demonstrated how good butter can be made on the system in vogue in Devonshire without the use of the churn or butter worker, to which, she said, she lately had devoted some study. She showed that in this way it could be made quite as granulated as churned butter. She used scalded cream, and the only appliances was a pair of Scotch hands—which the uninitiated should be informed are two pieces of flat wood with handles—and an ordinary dairy tub. Stirring the cream with one of the Scotch hands until it assumed a granulated form, she washed it in brine, and made it up into patties, and it was found to be equal to that made by the butter-worker. None of the butter made by Miss Maidment was touched with the hands, so that a dairymaid with a cold hand is no longer such a valuable person as she was wont to be esteemed.

An interesting point mentioned by Miss Maidment was that the best way to test butter is to snap it in halves. When so broken it should resemble a piece of cast iron, every grain should separate, and it should be perfect in texture. Answering questions addressed to her by members of the class Miss Maidment said that the temperature of cream for churning in the winter should be fifty-nine, but on no account should warm water be mixed with it. To raise it to the right temperature a bottle of warm water should be stood in the cream, or it should be placed in a room where the thermometer stood at 60 degrees. In the summer, the night before churning, the cream should be stood in a large tub of cold, spring salt water. There were three principal things to be observed in butter making—temperature, cleanliness and uniformity in quality and color. The temperature of the dairy should be 55 degrees in summer and 60 degrees in winter, and no dairy should be without a floating thermometer, which she preferred because it was made of glass, and therefore easily washed. The use of a separator, turned by steam, horse or water power, was considered the best way for making cream in large dairies. And it should not be unnoticed that the same power which is used for driving the separator could be utilized for turning the churn, butter worker, etc., thus effecting a great saving of labor. The great thing in butter making was to preserve the butter in the finest granulated form, and when the granules were about the size of the heads of pins it should be washed in order to get out the caseine, or curd, which invariably turned butter sour. The reason why brine was used instead of dry salting was this:—Butter, dry salted, required much more working, and therefore the grain was more likely to be destroyed. If the salt was not properly intermixed, the butter would be full of wet streaks and spots. The reason why the butter should not be touched by the hand was because the heat caused thereby would destroy the grain of the butter entirely, which was just what they wanted to prevent. Moreover, the hand was very injurious to the keeping qualities of the butter. If these few details were more generally attended to there would not be a bit of bad butter in the United Kingdom.

The Model Stock Farmer.

The model stock farmer is he who is content with nothing but the best, either in flocks or herds. He may possibly grow such stock as his farm is best adapted to, or he may buy a farm suited to the rearing of a certain kind of stock that particularly strikes his fancy, but in either case he stops short of nothing but the highest type of that which he breeds. The man who has a well-filled pocketbook and can stock his farm with pure breeds, with fashionable pedigrees, is not necessarily a model stock farmer. Such a one may be a very poor breeder indeed—anything else but a model. It is no feat of wisdom to be able to purchase the prize-winners from some one's herd who has spent years to bring his animals up to this high standard of perfection. To the farmer who begins at the bottom of the ladder, and, with only the scrub stock that his limited means will buy, produces a flock or herd of superior animals, by judicious crossing and grading up, the meed of praise is due. He makes the business a special life study, finds great delight in experimenting and watching the results of his labors, and sets an example worthy to be imitated. He is indeed and in truth the model stock farmer. We learn to look to him for advice and instruction in his specialty, and we always find him just as ready to impart as we are to receive the knowledge desired. However enthusiastic and energetic he may be in his work, he is never too busy to counsel the new beginner, and give him whatever is desired from his fund of wisdom. In practice he breeds to get out all there is in the favorite kinds of animals he keeps upon the farm. He generally has a specialty of some particular breed of stock, and improves it, approximating perfection according to his standard of excellence, but he does not do this to the detriment of other kinds of stock, for they receive proper attention, and are graded to a high degree of excellence. The model stock farmer is of incalculable worth to the community in which he lives, but often receives poor encouragement for the untiring energy put forth, from those who should know and speak of him as a public benefactor. His envious, unlettered neighbors generally hold him up to public ridicule as far as possible, and if his experiments prove unsuccessful in any instance, he is laughed to scorn, and the circumstance is held as a sweet morsel under the tongues of his less enlightened neighbors. Instead of being encouraged to go on in the good work, he is discouraged and belittled, and sage agriculturalists advise him to go back and fall in rank with the common herd. His failures only nerve him to greater effort. He profits by his mistakes, and improves from dearly bought experience. When he perchance meets a kindred spirit, it is a love feast indeed, and he gathers in enough consolation to last him quite a distance along life's journey. Surrounded thus by old fogies, who are constantly trying to pull him down, it is a wonder that his illustrious example ever buds, blossoms or bears fruit; but it does, and generally he has the consolation of living long enough to see rising up around him energetic young men, imbued with progressive aims and purposes akin to his own.—W. W. Stephens, in Western Agriculturist.

Better a Good Steer Than a Mean Bull.

The breeders of blooded cattle, says the American Dairyman, are always greatly exercised over what to do with the redundant bulls. Just now the Holstein breeders are discussing the matter with a view to refusing a certain percentage of them to admission to the herd book. The sole purpose of such a move would appear to be an effort to "bull" the market and force up prices for those that are left. If this was done on the basis of performance of dams, thus insuring the best animals among those that are registered, we could see some sense in the movement, but why should not all the bulls be registered, so that those proving good can be used in the pure herds. The trouble is that there is no means of cutting out the poor cows. They are the ones that should be refused registry. Bulls from good cows, no matter how ugly they may be, are excellent for use in native herds, but what can be done with the unprofitable female? She goes on breeding just as industriously as does the profitable cow, making more poor females and stocking the market with still poorer bulls. Is there no way for getting at the poor cow to send her to the butcher's block, where she belongs?

The Rural World is aware of the fact that there is apparently a surplus of bulls of the improved breeds, but the trouble is more apparent than real. Of the 30,000 farms in Missouri an improved bull cannot be found on one per cent. of them; that is to say, there are not 300 bulls of improved blood in use in the State, or one to every one hundred farms. This is course is estimated, but had we said half that number, we believe it would be nearer the truth. There are in the neighborhood of 660,000 cows in the State or an average of two to each farm, calling for the services of twelve thousand bulls, if each was to stand to fifty cows a year. Oh no, we are not over-stocked with blooded bulls; the great difficulty is in finding customers for them among the men who are breeding to scrubs or grades the produce of their own scrub cows. This always was a difficulty and ever will be so long as they who breed bulls refuse to advertise and sell them at private sale to those within range of their own farms so to speak. The farmer breeder is not ordinarily a good salesman, or for that matter, a good business man as we find them in commercial life; but when we do find such an one, we never find him over-stocked with bulls.

But as all men are not first-class salesmen, having the aptitude for ferreting out customers and disposing of their surplus stock, as the men who sell merchandise, we may possibly do the next best thing and make good steers of them. Good steers illustrate what blood will do. A three-year-old weighing fourteen or fifteen hundred pounds, makes a most admirable object lesson, particularly if well handled from birth and nicely finished, because it affords the farmers who breed native cows to bulls of the same persuasion an opportunity of comparing them; that is to say, of seeing what other men have done, and what they themselves can do. If three-fifths of the bulls were altered and thus used, the remaining two-fifths would bring as much money as if the whole had all been saved entire. Better sell forty bulls at one hundred dollars apiece than one hundred at forty dollars. If the breeders had only the grit to see it in that light, that would be the end attained. Better have four customers for one bull than four bulls and only one customer: and it would in the end be better all round, for only the best individuals would be saved, and the probabilities are that as like produces like, the best would, even at the higher price, be the cheapest animal to the buyer.

Pacific Coast T. H. B. A.

As Captain Smith is still away from home, the call for a meeting to organize the Pacific Coast Trotting Horse Breeders' Association has not been issued. We are extremely desirous that he should attend the meeting, and sincerely hope that his health will soon be so much improved, or rather that his recovery be so complete, as to permit his presence.

Washington Park, Chicago.

The stakes of the above popular club close on Tuesday next, the 15th inst. It is so nearly supererogatory to say anything, further than to make the announcement of the closing of the stakes, that the only requirement necessary is to call attention to the closing so near the time that the fact will not be overlooked by those who are desirous of making nominations.

It is safe to assert that few owners of horses who have attended the Chicago meeting are not gratified with having participated, and it is one of the great points of interest with California turfmen.

The added money to the stakes is on the most liberal scale, the forfeits are small, the course and its adjuncts of the highest class, the management popular, and then Chicago, in summer time, is as pleasant a city to visit as can be found on the Continent. From June 22d to July 20th the weather is unusually fine, and though in the latter part of July the heat may be fervent, whenever the breeze comes from the eastward, it is nearly as refreshing as the western aerial currents which flow through the Golden Gate.

Apart from the stakes, there are purses and handicaps with such varying conditions, that any sort of a horse which is entitled to the appellation of a race horse is sure to earn something, purses for these ranging from $600 to $750; and this is a boon which owners who endeavor to make their horses pay expenses, and who are obliged by their circumstances to depend partly, at least, on their earnings, will appreciate.

The advertisement will afford all the necessary information. Entry blanks will be furnished at this office, and any assistance required to make nominations cheerfully given.

Christopher Buckley.

We admire Christopher Buckley. Although politics are tabooed in the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, except in cases where the interests in which we are so deeply interested are threatened, that does not prevent expressions of admiration when there is unusual capacity displayed. We admire fine horses, whether the royal racehorse, the flying trotter, the stately animals which form part of the pomp and panoply of wealth, the gallant charger, and the ponderous draft horse, when far above their fellows, elicit admiration. We admire superiority no matter what form it takes. The powerful athlete who sends the heavy hammer far beyond where some puny dude could hurl the hand implement of a blacksmith, the clean limbed, truly proportioned sprinter, who can knock off 150 yards inside of 15 seconds, to sum it up in as few words as possible, physical championship of any kind is a quality which we delight in. But fervently as we admire physical characteristics, there is a still greater degree of admiration when mental qualifications are of a high order. We cannot fail to express admiration for a man who, under circumstances which would appal men of strong nerve, can exert such a powerful influence as this blind, and, as we are informed, of rather a weakly constitution, wields in city and State. We never saw Mr. Buckley excepting once at San Jose, and then he was pointed out as he went through the door. We never heard the tones of his voice, and therefore the only data to measure his capacity is the work he has accomplished. That is wonderful. There must be an odic force, a will power, magnetism, mesmerism or some other potent attraction with which he sways, not only his followers, but men who came to curse, and leave him with a warm grasp of the hand, converts ready to obey his beck or command whenever he gives the signal. Journals of immense influence, writers of renown, orators who can move an assemblage to tears, laughter and virtuous resolutions lose their power whenever the attack is directed against this invulnerable general. We hear of him entering a room where factions were warring, where oaths, shrieks and blows made a pandemonium of discord, and when the magic of his voice was heard, ere a full sentence was enunciated, the storm was lulled. Never oil on waves, never a torrent of water on fire so instantly efficacious. He handles men as a skilful chessplayer manipulates pawns, bishops, knights, rooks, queens and kings, men who would be turbulent, rebellious under any other leader are as docile as lambs. It is not necessary to portray what this man has effected, and that against odds which appeared to ensure, to warrant victory beyond doubt or uncertainty, and he stands in the pass and routes them as the handful of Greeks threw back their enemies at Thermopylae, as Wallace with his single blade overpowered a score of assailants through wearing armor which was proof against lance and longbow.

Now we learn that this man whom we admire is going to stand in the way of the passage of a bill which is of vital importance to the horse-breeding interests of this State, and that is an interest which we are bound to subserve to the best of our ability. We have heard Mr. Buckley was interested in every pool and book-making room in San Francisco, and one of our informants was in a position to obtain reliable intelligence.

This may or may not be, and it does not figure in the argument further than to show that he has a big pecuniary stake at issue. Whether his antagonism to a measure arises from a desire to "protect" his own revenue, or anxiety to protect his friends, the effect is the same, and hence his antagonism is likely to be fervent, and the battle conducted with his usual skill and determination. With the major general of the California democracy to guide the opposing forces with so many of his field marshals in Senate and Assembly with his coadjutors in the "third house," the campaign is sure to be arduous from the time the first gun is fired until the last redoubt is carried. The only hope of those who desire that California shall retain the foremost place as the breeding ground and nursery of fine and fast horses, and who realize the strength of the obstacles which are in the way, is to blaze the path as soon as possible, bring their forces into the field at the earliest moment, organize and drill and "fight it out" on the line of reform if it takes the whole session to gain the victory.

Hereafter we shall endeavor to show, for that matter will prove by irrefragable testimony, that pool and betting rooms which are kept open as long as race-meetings are held, and that nowadays is from the first of January until the 31st of December, are not only a present drawback but threaten the destruction of racing and trotting on this coast. Furthermore, that every fair from San Diego to Siskiyou, from the Pacific to the eastern boundary line of the State is affected at present, and with an exceeding gloomy outlook for the future if the evil is not remedied.

In this connection it may be well to state that we have not a word to say derogatory to those who are engaged in the business. Acquainted with nearly all of the bookmakers and pool-sellers, intimately so with several of them, and so far as that knowledge extends, their business is pursued with due regard to fair dealing. It is not their fault that men will pay large premiums for the sake of laying a wager, and it would be equally just to declaim against a man, who, by superior business tact, had obtained goods at a low price and held them at rates which others, not so fortunate in purchasing could afford to sell them at, as to rail against a bookmaker for laying short odds when those who took them thought a "long shot" was their due. There is no compulsion, and it is optional with the taker whether he makes the investment or "lets it alone."

Neither do we give the slightest heed to the charge of "manipulating" races. A successful bookmaker must have more than an average share of acumen. If he lacks in judgment his career will be short. He must be well balanced, of quick perception, and have the power to analyze character. His whole dependence is on square racing. Ten to one that he will get the worst of a fraudulent race, and it would not require long arguments to prove that statement to be correct. Should he enter into a partnership with trainer or jockey he places himself at the mercy of his confederates, and it is still longer odds than ten to one that a man who had the weakness to join in fraud would develop strength sufficient to be master of the man who bought him. Were bookmakers such rascals as some designing men claim, and which a few well-meaning men, but entirely ignorant of the business, think the evil would rectify itself without other aid.

As it stands there will have to be a stubborn fight with the advantages of a concentration of forces in the opposition.

Not Quite the Thing.

Mr. L. J. Rose, in a short communication, which appears in another column, suggesting a circuit commencing at San Diego, and then Los Angeles, Fresno, San Jose, Stockton, Napa, and so on, has overlooked Santa Rosa, Petaluma and Oakland. These have been held heretofore in the order as written above, and it is nearly certain that the Golden Gate will adhere to the date it has held for so long a time, viz., the week preceding the State Fair.

The suggestion, however, that Mr. Shippee should call a meeting, to escape as much as possible from clashing of dates, is a good one, and well worthy of being acted upon.

A Wrong Impression.

The following advice is taken from the Rushville, Ind., Graphic: If you have a promising race-horse that you want to advertise or put in the stud, take him to California and give him a record. Take a lesson from Bell Boy's performance, and others. They trot at least five seconds faster in that climate.

This is likely to create an impression that horses trot faster in California than they can in the East, whereas the truth is that with few exceptions the reverse is the case. St. Julien, Palo Alto, Bonita, Manzanita, Hinda Rose and others have lowered their California records on Eastern tracks. Regarding Bell Boy. His driver, Mr. Caton, was in the office a few days ago, and informed us that Bell Boy was in such bad condition when he took him that he could not trot a "forty gait," and in his race at Detroit 2:31 was all that he could do. Unquestionably the California climate was a potent aid to recovering condition, and should he return East without mishap, and reach the Cleveland track in good order, he will "knock off" several seconds from 2:19¼.

The paragraph quoted is a revival of the old story. When St. Julien trotted in 2:12¾, columns were published in the Eastern papers discrediting the account, and we wrote pages in reply. This was effectually squelched by his oriental campaign, and when the Palo Alto contingent swept the country on the far side of the Missouri with a succession of victories, when California colts displayed such qualities of speed and endurance on Eastern tracks that they were debarred from participating in races for colts of their age, the answer was more emphatic than volumes of writing, the retort to the false charges so forcible that people of any sense dropped the controversy, and had to acknowledge that California had trotters which were capable of playing their part more than satisfactorily in any part of the country, and over any track which other horses could trot upon.

Stanford and Occident Stakes, 1889—1890.

A very fair proportion of the colts nominated in the Stanford Stake and Occident Stake of 1889 have made third payments, eight in the first and eleven in the second. As there were fourteen which made the second payment in the Stanford of 1889, one of which, Norlaine, was burned to death, it is good evidence that there has been satisfactory progress. Palo Alto has kept four in of the six original nominations, so that in reality only one has been thrown out. It speaks well for the spirit of the other subscribers to the stake, that with Sunol eligible they were willing to abide the combat, the only ones declaring being a bay colt by Stamboul, a bay filly by Guy Wilkes, and Brilliant by Director. In all probability these colts met with mishaps, though eight in fourteen is certainly a good proportion. There were twenty which remained in the Occident for 1889, and of these eleven put up the third payment which is also doing well, and when one comes to the stakes to be decided in 1890 there is an extremely gratifying showing. There were twenty-eight nominations in the Stanford stake for that year, and twenty of them "stay in." There were fifty-three in the Occident, and no less than forty-two have signified their willingness to remain, twenty-two of them credited to Palo Alto. As twenty-two were all that were named in the first place, this is the most remarkable showing one ever knew in a stake of any kind. Only two which dropped to the rear in twelve months, leaving twenty to battle for the honor and glory attending the winning of the stakes is something unparalleled in the history of trotting colt stakes. That twenty in twenty-two encountered the vicissitudes attending that critical period of colthood, and came out, not only safe, but also exhibiting such capacity as to warrant further investment, is, to say the least, astonishing. The following are the lists:

The Stanford Stakes.

THIRD PAYMENT IM STANFORD STAKES FOR 1889.

Jos. C. Simpson, for C. R. Lewis, Athenian.
C. O. Thornquest, b c Cupid.
San Mateo Stock Farm, Jet Wilkes.

Hoppin Bros.' b f Maud H,
Hoppin Bros.' blk c Blossom,
Hoppin Bros.' b c Arthur F.,
Wm. Corbitt's blk f Atlanta Wilkes,
Wm. Corbitt's b f Rosema Wilkes,
Value of this stake at date $1560.

The entries in the Occident for 1891 closed January 1st, with nearly seventy entries. It is not possible to get copy of entries ready for this issue, owing to incompleteness of one or two, but we hope to give our readers the complete list in full next issue.

The Colt Show.

From several conversations held with admirers of trotters, and two who are likely to join in the exhibition, the proposition made last week meets with general approval. We have spoken to officials connected with the State and Golden Gate Fair, and they were favorably inclined, but there seems to be a drawback in the large number of stalls required when all the room is imperatively demanded by the animals which compete for the regular premiums. In that case the exhibition might be held on either the Bay District or Oakland track some time prior to the opening of the Fairs circuit, when the drawback alluded to would not exist. There is another point which may tend to differences of opinion, that is, the judging, but in our opinion that is only a fanciful drawback. There are a hundred men in California any three of which would meet with our approbation, and, in fact, we will be as well suited with one man to decide as three or more.

The plan which appears to meet with the most favor is to have five or more nominations to fill, so that the minimum number of colts will be fifty. We cannot imagine an exhibition in the horse line that would be so interesting to the horse-loving public. There is scarcely a doubt of it being gotten up.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

PLEASANTON STOCK FARM.

By referring to the advertising pages it will be seen that there are several new advertisements, every one of which demands special notice. Taking them in the order represented on the "proof," the first is a double column ad. of the Pleasanton Stock Farm Sale, and although the appended remarks are brief, enough is conveyed to prove that the "lot" is remarkable in many respects. The get of Director, Nutwood, Sidney, Monroe Chief, Steinway and Del Sur, from such mares as Sweetness, Echora, Electioneer mare, Fernleaf, etc., it must be a hypercritical individual which is not satisfied with the blood lines. Goldleaf and her brother, a half brother to Sidney, a brother to Direct, a sister to Miss Gilmer, a half sister to Margaret S., and a Del Sur mare in foal to Director, eleven in all, every individual of them with claims to a high place.

J. O'KANE HORSE BOOTS AND TURF GOODS.

Any one who will take the trouble to step into 767 Market street will not question the accuracy of the statement that a wonderfully full stock of everything pertaining to the turf, track and road will be found on exhibition. San Francisco "leads the world" in one class of horse equipments, and in every kind of equine furnishing goods is not far behind. Mr. O'Kane has been so many years in the business that his knowledge of the wants of the coast is so extensive that he is prepared to furnish everything wanted in his line.

SACRAMENTO COLT STAKES.

The indefatigable Secretary, Wilbur Field Smith, of the Sacramento Colt Stake Association, gives publicity to five colt stakes, three for trotters and two for pacers. The trotting stakes are limited to named counties, and though as a rule we are opposed to "ruling out" colts wherever bred or owned, it becomes an absolute necessity in some cases. The southern line of eligibility is the south boundary of Yolo and San Joaquin counties, and though this includes the farm which has Hawthorne at the head, and the district where Tilton Almont, Alexander Button, Berlin and many other good stallions are domiciled, it was a wise move to cut off the portion where so far the "world beaters" have been bred and reared. There is plenty of material to make good sport in the district named, and the restriction will induce nominations which otherwise would not have been sent. Pacing stakes for colts is a late innovation, and California has not only jumped to the topmost round of the ladder in this branch of sport, but, metaphorically illustrating, has bounded so far above the topmost round that another metaphor is applicable, viz.: "as high as Gilderoy's kite." Without really knowing the altitude that celebrated sky traveller reached, if it soared as high as the young California pacers of 1888, it went to a mere speck in the cerulean vault. Heretofore it has been held that fast pacers were a sort of freaks which could not be accounted for by any reasonable hypothesis. This has been so thoroughly demonstrated to be an erroneous idea that there is no necessity for argument. Sidney gets a fast pacer with nearly as much certainty as a first-class thoroughbred sire gets race-horses, and lays in the shade the best trotting sire that ever was foaled. Adonis and Goldleaf nearly out of the teens, and that on the fast-side, and John Rohn has another three-year-old in his string, which if he had been placed in his charge in the early part of the season, would have been close on the heels of his distinguished relatives. Alexander Button has outdone all of his predecessors in the way of the championship of the young sidewheelers, and our old favorite, A. W. Richmond, has done his part to "witch the world" with fast lateral motion. Pacing stakes for colts are bound to flourish when such youngsters as those named can be produced with reasonable certainty.

ECLECTIC AND MORTIMER.

Wilfred Page, Penn's Grove, Sonoma County, California, advertises the above stallions for service, and at such reasonable figures that they cannot fail to attract attention. Mr. Page has told the story so well in the advertisements that little is left to add in the way of comments. And, by the way, we much prefer that the advertisements should convey all the desired information, leaving nothing for the editorial columns than to call attention to the same. Writing from long experience, we are aware that we stallion owners are a touchy set, and should one editorial comment exceed another in length, or contain a modicum of praise more than is awarded to another, there is tumult in the camp. Then again California stallions are of so high a class, that accounts degenerate into a sameness of praise that must become tiresome to our readers who have not a direct interest in them or their progeny. When the list is complete, we will present their united claims, and that will be a display of merit which will astonish those who are not fully posted on the trotting horse of California.

NOONDAY.

The above remarks are also applicable to Noonday; with this addition, however, that he brings a new stream of blood into the California paddocks. We are not aware of any other son of Wedgewood in California, and the only near relative on the side of the dam is Electricity, which is from Midnight, the grandam of Noonday.

ANTEVOLO AND RATHBONE.

Further than for the purpose of illustrating some new departure in training or stable management the names of our own horses only appear in the advertisements and the list which heads the editorial page.

NUTWOOD.

This grand horse is so far away from this side of Uncle Sam's farm, that a short deviation from the prescribed course may not be far out of the way, although there are so many of his get in this State that he is not entirely free from the conditions imposed. This much can be said without trenching on the enclosed ground, that when Nutwood landed in this State, the seed was sown which has grown into a crop that has added an immense sum to the wealth of the country, and that crop is perennial, spreading from year to year with a prospect of still higher value. We are pleased that the fastest son of the famous sire was bred here, and that a big majority of the names included in his "roll of honor" are still with us. That was to be expected, however, as he had only got a few colts before his exportation, and of course the most of his eastern-bred colts are too young yet to occupy the place they will surely fill in the future.

LEON.

F. P. Lowell of Sacramento, California, offers this son of Leinster and Ada A., provided the purchase is consummated before February first. When he galloped away from Canny Scot in the race alluded to in the ad, we were a hundred or two out of pocket, for the simple reason that Leon was the better horse on that day, and that he is a good race horse is beyond question. His age and conformation will give him high claims for consideration in the stud.

THE MONTANA CIRCUIT.

California horsemen who have visited Montana return with gratification at the treatment received, and we have never met with one who was not fervent in his eulogies of the people and, the next best thing had coin galore. The month of August is occupied with the meetings at Deer Lodge, Anaconda, Butte and St. Helena, and though there will be several California fairs held in that month, fortunately there are so many horses now in training in this State that there can be a division of forces without detriment to the fairs, and to the manifest advantage of owners and trainers.

Early Foals.

Gray mare Mollie McCarty by Eugene Casserly, foaled bay filly by Woodnut, Jan. 3rd, the property of B. C. Holly.

Names Claimed.

By Oscar Mansfeldt, Oakland, Cal.

CON BRIO; for brown colt, foaled June 1, 1887, by Antevolo, 2:19½, dam Frolic (half sister to Allo, 2:25¼, Flora G, 2:29, Gerster, four-year-old, 2:34, etc.), by Altoona, son of Almont.

Slightly Mixed.

An Eastern contemporary says that Senator Hearst will retire Gorgo from the racing stable and will send her to his breeding farm near Chico, where she will be bred to his famous Australian stallion Darebin. That is similar to a story which appeared some years ago about the Hon. George C. Gorham, when he was Secretary of the United States Senate. Many newspapers printed a paragraph stating that George C. Gorham's aunt had died and left him $500,000. Mr. Gorham sent out a denial, couched in about the following language: The story as printed is true, except that I have not had $500,000 left me. My aunt is not dead, and I never had an aunt." So it is with the horse story. Senator Hearst does not own Gorgo, has no breeding farm at Chico, and has not as yet purchased Mr. Haggin's Darebin.

BOSTON, Jan 10.—The nine-months-old filly, Carlotta Wilkes, owned by a Boston gentleman, yesterday trotted one-eighth of a mile in 20¼ seconds. Newton Highlands and other responsible parties saw her do it and caught the time. This speed, which the owner thinks she can maintain for a much longer distance, is at the rate of 2:42 for one mile, while the best record for a yearling is 3:12.

This very nonsensical telegram was sent by the Associated Press from Boston to the San Francisco daily papers yesterday. Without consulting records and finding all the horses who have beaten the time mentioned above, we refer to Norlaine, 2:31½; Sudie D. 2:35¾; Fleet 2:36; Hinda Rose, 2:36½; Murtha, 2:41¼, Bedouin 3:05, and many others.

ROD.

Among the Redwoods.

CHAPTER IX.

PROSPECTING AND ITS RESULTS.

Human nature may be likened to a vine capable of throwing out tendrils in all directions: robbed of the one thing it hugs closest, it yet clings to whatever it may reach, and only when eaten out at the root falls lifeless. Of this Mr. Selden was an example; the delight he had for a brief space felt in existence had flown with the spirit of his wife, but he still possessed large power of attachment, and tried to find in his child, his books, his home and the animate and inanimate things around him nepenthe for memories that even after a lapse of eighteen years could fill his eyes with tears, and bring to his heart the weary, dragging pain of unsatisfied love.

Not all, striving in a like manner, are so fortunate in gaining the full return that came to him; so, neither, are all so patient and so deserving.

Was he absent from home a week the very roses and shrubs seemed to miss him, let Erl do her best with watering-pot and spade; and Jerry, his stout bay horse, to whom he introduced Dick while Philip was enjoying toast and other delicacies accorded only to invalids, was said to indulge in the sulks, which, for a horse who occupied such snug, warm quarters, was not good behavior.

"My! my! Mr. Selden, but this is perfect!" said Dick, pausing at the stable door, and giving a comprehensive glance to stalls and general finishing; "the Sequoia is a grand old tree."

"There's a dainty little creature," said Dick, pointing to a slender black horse in the third stall.

"Yes, he is our pride. I bought him for Erl a year ago. Turn out, Wolfgang, and let us look at you."

The handsome, nervous animal gave a low whinny, as if inquiring for his mistress, and accepted Dick's petting in a way that said plainly, "It is my right."

Meanwhile Mr. Selden sought out Rob, and instructed him to saddle Jerry and Reuben and lead them over to his mother's cottage. "I thought you would not object to startiug from there," he said, as Dick joined him. "I have a few words for Tom this morning."

"Object? Not I. My curiosity is the most infinitive bump you ever examine i."

"I remember how you once brought disaster upon us all in your childhood," said Mr. Selden, smiling, "by investigating an electrical apparatus I used in teaching physics. Do you recollect?"

"Perfectly," said Dick, following him into the rough yard where grass, weeds, and some sickly-looking geraniums struggled for first place.

Tom was still sitting on the low porch smoking his pipe, and meditating on the bad luck that showed such a disposition to follow him, when the click of the front gate interrupted his thoughts, and he stood up to bid Mr. Selden good-morning.

He was a heavily-built man, with large hands, and a face like his mother's, strong and stern, though appearing much softer because of the thick brown hair and beard that framed it.

He acknowledged the introduction to Dick nervously, as one unaccustomed to strangers, and asked them to step in.

"We have no time now, Tom, thank you," said Mr. Selden kindly, while Dick stopped and began to examine a richly-grained section of redwood root, which Tom, at odd times, was seasoning and getting to take on a dark polish.

"I don't mind tellin' you," he said, casting his eyes down. "I'm discouraged altogether. Here I am teamin' it from one day's end to the other fur wages that won't keep us, and that miserable sneak o' a Gilbert actin' as foreman, and livin' on the best. If I'd had no promise made me 'twould be well enough, but Mr. Tanner's said, time and o'er, that the place was mine. But he's a ready man at forgettin' when the time comes."

"Have you had any words with him?"

"No, sir, I took whisky to keep my mouth shut. One kind o' poison does as well as another to kill a cur. I was a fool, but no man'll pay the price of my foolishness but myself. There's a weak sort o' comfort in that."

"Yes, and perhaps I can find some which is stronger," said Mr. Selden, as the horses appeared. "Mr. Tanner owes me money, and it is possible between one thing and another we can so adjust matters that you will come out ahead. Have no more downcast moments. Something shall be done."

He shook Tom by the hand and called Dick, who managed to mingle a few complimentary words with his good-bye.

Oh blessed power of doing good! of being kindly! Nothing is so replete with happiness, and no gift –to the everlasting loss of manhood– is so rarely exercised.

As Tom stood and watched the two riders take their way to the road he felt light-hearted over the prospect of a return to work, because he was confident that Mr. Selden had not promised what he could not perform.

"Though the wonder is," he said, knocking the ashes out of his pipe against a post, "the wonder is why he takes the bother o' it fur me."

"The bother o' it" did not seem to weigh on Mr. Selden as he and Dick rode slowly down the hill beside a shallow canyon, through whose centre rippled a humming stretch of water that seemed a fit home for silvery trout. It was so completely his habit to do good that he breathed the very atmosphere of such efforts and forgot to think about it. Instead he was listening to the saucy canzonet of the tumbling stream and remarking that a new growth of lichens had appeared on the rocks.

"Dear, dear! That water should be full of trout! Good trout, too," said Dick, leaning to the side and looking down. "Some of those pools are first-rate in breadth and depth, and that rippling fall is absolutely peerless."

"Yes, the trout, though, are scarce, and growing more so every year. I hate to call attention to faults," sliding his hand uneasily back and forth on the bridle rein, "but people living along these streams seem to have no idea of the habits and needs of fish. They drag the poor things out at all times and in every conceivable way. There sits a young rascal now that I have had more trouble with than a little."

Mr. Selden reined Jerry in and pointed down to one of the large, flat stones common to the banks of every stream in this locality.

With one of his uncle Rob's broad straw hats on his head, the same individual's rod poised nicely over an attractive ripple, and his bare feet embracing either side of the stone, sat Tommy, reveling in a stolen pleasure which he knew (when he found time to think of it) would cost him a whipping.

"Fust rate! got two bully ones."

"Are you fishing with worms, Tommy?" asked Mr. Selden.

"No, sir. Hope I may die! I got on them flies what you gin me last week."

Anyone closely interested in the matter might have questioned what the round, tin can was needed for at Tommy's side, but neither of the gentlemen could see it as they passed, and Mr. Selden took up the conversation where it had dropped.

"I dislike extremely to see the 'don't care' principle interfering so markedly with our water courses To keep them clean and well stocked with fish is a duty the State owes herself, but how poorly, how indifferently is it done! There is no real necessity for streams like ours becoming exhausted, and under proper management I do not think they could be."

"What is your opinion about enlightening the general public on the pleasure of fishing? Is it a good thing?" asked Dick, turning Reuben aside to clear a mud hole in the road.

"The general public, Richard," he replied, with his usual hesitancy when about to say something not exactly complimentary, "is not easily enlightened on any subject. It prefers to enlighten itself and sacrifice whatever interferes with it. Very few people, speaking fairly and impartially, have the right kind of temperament to make true anglers. For that a man must have something beside the mere capacity to catch fish. He must be able to sympathize with nature in nature's own way, and to enjoy a gentle quietness in his sport. If the general public could be educated to this point I think it might be a good thing, not only for the water courses but for the human family."

"A real fisherman can whip water a great deal without exhausting it. That's the idea?"

"Yes."

"And keeping silent about everything and leaving the streams free for poachers winter and summer is worse than trying to make the men who do go fishing appreciate the necessity for going in the right way."

"So I think."

"It only looks reasonable that a well-preserved stream should last. But I have not the slightest doubt that what you say of these streams is true of every decent sized bit of water in California. You will notice hanging about nearly all the fishing resorts a class of men not over remarkable for fine characteristics. And when people attempt to tell me that such men are above spearing fish during the winter season, I am perfectly justified in doubting it. In the markets of San Francisco you can buy, if you choose, trout at all seasons of the year. This means something. To be sure, a man who knows anything about fit living will not buy at the wrong time, and a fisherman would never indulge in them, because, as a matter of fact, he prefers that kind of fish a little fresher. I feel it would be a great gain if everybody could know when all varieties of fish are in season, particularly here where our winters are not rigorous. What have we now, a change?" drawing in his horse as they came to a wooden bridge. "Is this our old friend the Lorenzo?"

"Yes," said Mr. Selden, pointing to a turn in the road, "and on the other side of that group of trees are the post-office and the hotel."

The post-office was a small, white structure, presided over by a leisurely individual with a sandy beard, who, in addition to distributing the mail kept a stock of sweets and other small things with which the youths of the neighborhood were wont to regale themselves. His present occupation, however, was the entertainment of Mr. Tanner, who sat on the porch with his chair tipped back, and drew nourishment, or pleasure, or something from a large piece of tobacco which he rolled back and forth in his mouth to the distraction of a small cur on his left, that lived in constant anticipation of a dainty morsel to eat.

"Good mawnin', Mr. Selden," he said, rising unctuously as became a man who owed money and saw no way of paying it, "good mawnin'. You're stirrin' right early; won't you git down a spell?"

"Mr. Selden declined, but introduced Dick, and said they would be pleased to see Mr. Tanner some time during the morning at the hotel; after which he called up the post master and inquired for mail.

There was only one letter, and that addressed to Philip in care of Mr. Selden. Dick looked particularly annoyed as he scanned it closely, yet it seemed harmless enough. The envelope was dainty, the seal carefully stamped, and the address in a woman's fine, clear hand. However, perhaps Dick was right to be ruffled; such seemingly harmless little packets have done grave damage before now, and will, in all probability, continue to do it unless women mend, and learn the maxim of Talleyrand.

The hotel toward which they now turned their horses was just across the road—an ordinary white building, looking clean and comfortable in the full sunlight. Beyond it a short way stood the hall, whose bare sides had resounded to the stirring sermons of revivalists, the exaggerations of temperance lecturers and the shrieks of country fiddle-strings with the same calm unconcern that marked the majority of the human beings who had enjoyed like advantages.

As our riders drew near, a dark-eyed boy whom Mr. Selden called Jack made himself of service, and the cordial landlord, known far and near as "Happy George" gave them ready welcome. His anxious, watchful wife stood in the doorway holding a plump baby, but Mr. Selden declined her invitation to enter the house, and sat down beside Dick on the veranda, where they were speedily joined by the tobacco-loving Tanner.

"I tell you it must be refreshing," Dick was saying to the landlord, as he came up, apropos of some remark in regard to the beauties of Boulder Creek.

"That ain't no kind of a name for it. Just come over a piece and take a look; the bar won't go bankrupt in ten minutes."

"Nothing," Dick said, "could please him better," and together they went toward the rocky stream.

No sooner were they out of hearing than Mr. Tanner deposited a great mouthful of yellow tobacco juice on the back of a luckless fly that happened to be sunning itself on the veranda, and turning to Mr. Selden said:

"I reckon you hev a word fur me on the subject of that overdue interest?"

"Not particularly, no. I want to speak to you about Tom Morrison."

Mr. Tanner's yellow face took on a more sallow tinge, and his little black eyes glittered. Without noticing him, Mr. Selden continued:

The little black eyes showed a gleam of cunning as their owner answered:

"You hev it about right, Mr. Selden, and I'd allowed to put him on to somethin' better if he hadn't got drunk and knocked my kalkilations sky'ards. Thet hull family, in my opinion, is on the road to everlastin' destruction. There's Rob to begin. Of late he aint worth a peck o' oats a week. I hev been wanting to speak with you about him fur nearly two weeks back. He's clean no account."

"But my errand is in behalf of Tom," said Mr. Selden, with a quiet man's obstinacy, "I want you to do better by him. He is getting discouraged. For two years you have promised to make him foreman, and every Saturday brings the same old disappointment. Advance him; it will mean money in your pocket."

"You reckon what they say agin Gilbert's true?"

"I know nothing against Mr. Gilbert."

Mr. Tanner stopped his active chewing, and looked long and intently at Mr. Selden. Then he spit again, and wiped his mouth on the back of his hand.

"Do you reckon to tell me," he said in a perplexed way, "thet you're jest a doin' this fur my good and fur Tom Morrison's?"

"For no other reason in the world."

"Then I'll be durned if I don't jine you. Tom goes on to-morrow mawnin' as sure as sun-up, and I'll try and hold my temper in with Rob, though he's no account enough to knock the patience out o' a saint."

"How would it do to change about and send George into the mill and keep Rob up at the house? He is very good about milking and such things. George is young, but he is strong and active."

"Jest exercise your own jedgment, Mr. Selden, and I'm pleased. I reckon there's somethin' about the right studyin' o' books that helps," he said, rising and moving off in the direction of the hall, before the door of which several persons had assembled. "Good mawnin'. Mr. Selden, good mawnin', sir."

Mr. Selden raised his hat gravely, and went to join Dick, who was walking back from the creek alone, his companion having been obliged to forsake him for some thirty travellers and their needs.

"I'm happy," said Dick, looking up in Mr. Selden's face much as he had when a boy, "happy. These streams offer a premium for living in the woods."

"You like Boulder?" smiling indulgently.

"I like them all; like everything; think that landlord's immense."

"Shall you care to go in and try some spirits? I never take anything myself, but if you wish, why—" Mr. Selden hesitated as though scarce knowing how to conclude.

Dick had thought of this several times, but now he suddenly made up his mind to keep to his temperance resolve, and so expressed himself to Mr. Selden, who made no remarks.

"And I shall not take anything up to Phil, either," said Dick; "he will get on just as well without it."

"I fancy so, although I brought a flask, and if you think—" "No, I do not; I think just the reverse," interrupted Dick, decidedly.

"Very well then, we may turn our horses' heads homeward. Come, Jack," giving him a coin, "lead them out."

Dick was heartily glad, notwithstanding his delight in the landlord, to get away from the atmosphere of the hotel, and into the forest shadows again.

"Mr. Selden," he asked, in his sudden way, after having looked down at the water of the stream for some minutes, "how many kinds of trout are there in California?"

"I have no more idea, Richard, than I have of the number of needles on that fir tree. Why?"

"I was just wondering whether anybody could say. Sometimes I think there is only one kind; again I fancy there are two, and nobody can seem to tell me anything about it."

"You must follow the plan I do with my lichens. Preserve, analyze, and send specimens to high authorities. I am sure there are even more than two kinds of trout in California."

"I was too, at one time. Making comparisons is what has left me in doubt. To my mind now, it is simply a question of food. If food can totally change the size and appearance of a trout, then we have only one kind; if not then we may have half a dozen. Whoa, Reuben."

But Reuben had made up his mind, or whatever does duty in a horse's head for that arbitrary belonging of man, that it was time to show his speed, and Jerry not objecting even though it might be up hill they went on at too fast a pace for further conversation on the part of the riders, who found Erl on the verandah to welcome them, and Rob near by to render his services.

"Do tell me, Miss Selden," said Dick taking a seat at her side, "what has become of my friend?"

"He is doing very well on the lounge in the sitting room."

"Dear me! How I wish I could have joined you! Do you think I can see him now?"

Dick went in and found Philip, not on the lounge, but smoking in an easy chair.

"Well, old man," he said affectionately, "how are you coming on?"

"Very nicely. What did you find over there?"

"A letter for you," drawing it from his pocket and placing it in Philip's hand.

Philip looked only half pleased as he broke the seal, but his expression grew brighter when he began reading, and he finally handed it to Dick with a laugh.

Dick held it at arm's length and scowled for a moment, before he gathered courage and read:

CHERRY WOLD, May 4, 1883.

"So, my dear Brother, you have taken yourself to the mountains, and left the Santa Clara hearthstone deserted. But why did you not advise us, that we might have been spared our journey hither, and thus not fatigued dainty, little, brown Cummings who has elected to accompany us this summer? Bell goes with a party to Santa Cruz, Clarice joins auntie at San Raphael, but mamma and I have decided to come to Boulder Creek some day next week. Cummings-nom Brownie) says the hotel there is good, and that pretty girls abound! ! ! Mamma does not really desire to come, she is moved by a sense of duty, but I, dear old Brotherie, pine to be with you, and if Natalie can tear herself from scales and chords for a few days, we may bring her.

How thoughtful of you to leave your address with Mrs. Crabb! It is in Mr. Foote's writing, so I lay all your misdemeanors at his door.

Wait until you view our Brownie's new sage-green bathing coat. Ah! ! ! Lovingly,

RACHEL.

"What an inundation!" exclaimed Dick, crumpling the letter in his hand and without saying "by your leave" to Philip, tossing it in among the coals of the fireplace. "I hope Cummings loads up with flies, I'll borrow every one just to torment him. He fishes with monstrosities, anyhow. It passes my comprehension how intelligent women like your sisters can abide such a dodo as he is."

"We're in for something, that's sure enough!" muttered Philip half under his breath, as the entrance of Erl and her father cut short any further comments.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 7, 1889. PETRONELLA.

Tarpon Fishing.

The biggest game fish, unless it be the mahseer of Indian waters, is the tarpon, which is taken on the coast of Florida and its larger rivers, near their estuaries.

The sport of taking tarpon is a comparatively recent one, and it is not many years ago that the man who had caught a tarpon was as big a fellow among the angling fraternity as the tarpon is among fishes, says the N. Y. Times. Nowadays the tarpon anglers are so abundant that reputation depends simply upon the size of the fish taken. There is considerable discussion as to who is entitled to the honor of having landed the biggest tarpon. Florida is a good way distant, and there is ample opportunity for the fish to increase in size as the news works northward.

John G. Heckscher is believed to have secured the largest with rod and reel, his fish having been a veritable silver king of 184 pounds, and landed after a two hours' struggle, in which Mr. Heckscher became very tired. Senator Matt Quay, before coming North to wrestle with politics, claimed to have caught one weighing 187 pounds. It flopped Mr Heckscher's, of course, but there arose a discussion over the fish as to whether Mr. Quay caught it himself, or his boatman caught it for him, or whether he merely saw one in the water that looked as if it weighed that much. It was finally settled by anglers that the Senator really caught a tarpon, but whether it weighed 187 or only 87 pounds made no difference, as he secured it with a hand line, and without a rod. It was also intimated that he used an immense shark hook, with a telegraph cable attached, and wound him in by means of a windlass until his boatman could beat the fish into submission with a club. The laurels, therefore, were bestowed upon Mr. Heckscher, who has all summer received congratulations in a modest manner. He has been admonished, however, to look out for Matt Quay this winter.

The tarpon fishing does not start in much before February though some are taken earlier. February and March are the best months. There are quite a number of old fishermen going down this winter to have a bout with the big fish. The yellow fever hanging on so late in the fall, however, has caused many to change their plans about Florida tarpon fishing. Of course there is no danger from fever in the winter, but the talk of it has made a difference among the fishermen.

The fishing tackle dealers have been improving on the tarpon outfit, till this year they offer a very pretty equipment. The old bass rods, it was found, would not do. The tarpon anglers brought them back in the spring in pieces, and three or four were often shattered by one fisherman. The proper tarpon rod is a short one of about seven feet, made in two pieces. The butt is a foot and a half long, of hard rubber, and the remaining joint is of noib wood. The noib wood comes from Africa, and is of similar grain to the bethabara and greenheart wood, which belongs to the same family as our hickory. The rod is made with guides on both sides, so that the strain will not be always in one direction. The rod is not as heavy as it looks, but is pretty stiff for all that, a necessary qualification in dealing with tarpon. You can buy a nice rod for $35. The reel is of course large and able to wind up 300 or more yards of line, for the big fish when hooked sometimes makes very long excursions, and it does not do to attempt to check him too soon. The reels are about four inches in diameter, either of rubber or German silver. They are beautifully made, the mechanism being the best tempered steel and very carefully adjusted. A very highly polished and well-finished reel costs $50, but there are cheaper ones.

The tarpon line is specially manufactured of linen, and is made very strong. At first they used a small chain or piano wire for a leader, but it was found that the king herring would snap these very easily, and cut through them. So nowadays they use a sort of cotton material or thick cord. When the tooth of a tarpon strikes it, it mashes and softens, and is pulpy, but the fish cannot cut through it. Thick twisted gut, which will become soft in the water, is also sometimes used. This completes the outfit, except a net or gaff for the boatman, and a pair of thumbstalls.

The tarpon hugs the bottom pretty close, so when the strong steel hook is baited with a piece of mullet it is dropped to the bottom. The fish is a bit wary, and when he suspects the bait is cautious. He is apt to take it up gingerly and travel a few feet. Then he will drop it. He is fond of mullet, however, and if his inspection does not alarm him, he will take the food up again and rather slowly swallow it. So it behooves the angler not to hurry the fish. Wait till he has swallowed it and started off on a long run. When the line is tightened on the fish he will be hooked. Some anglers say they can tell by the draw of the fish whether it is a tarpon or a shark, but many are often disappointed to find their supposed tarpon nothing but a measly shark.

The sharks are a great nuisance. It is a singular thing that a shark will cut through the cotton leader, while a tarpon cannot, but the chain or piano wire holds a shark fast. It is owing to their different kind of teeth. If a shark is on the line, the best plan is to let him work off by himself.

The tarpon has a long, spiny projection at the dorsal fin, which is often seen scooting along the top of the water, while the fish is almost out of sight beneath. The fish is a beauty to look upon. The scales are regular and bright in color. When the tarpon is taken out of the water, he looks as though he was silver-plated. Once in a while one wanders northward, and they have even been taken in nets off Long Island. It is expected that the size record will be broken this winter.

The Angler's Society of San Francisco seems to have lapsed since its President, Mr. Dan. O'Connell, ceased to labor, but not to live, if the stories of capons, sack and Aristocratica's that come up from his hermitage near San Mateo are verities. Why can not the jovial president gather his friends and give a casting tournament on the lake near the Alms House? The place is suitable, and the genial Superintendent, Mr. Keating, might easily be interested and could contribute to the pleasure of the anglers most effectually.

THE KENNEL.

Dog owners are requested to send for publication the earliest possible notices of whelps, sales, names claimed, presentations and deaths in their kennels, in all instances writing plainly names of sire and dam and of grandparents, colors, dates and breed.

Names Claimed.

Sales.

Mr. L.L.Campbell has sold Irish red setters by Pat O'More—Belle C.

To Mr. Charles Ahlborn, San Francisco, a dog.

Deaths.

Mr. J. M. Bassford Jr.'s pointer bitch Esther, by Vandevort's Don—Beautiful Queen, died on December 27th. Cause, enteritis.

Also two pointer puppies by Lemmie B.—Esther.

A Bakersfield correspondent, who has visited the trainers who are there preparing for the field trials, which begin on Monday next, sends us the following notes:

"Of the half-dozen men who have dogs here, getting them ready to run in the trials, I believe I have seen all. Judge Post, of Sacramento, is at Centennial Ranch, a few miles from town. He has been having very bad luck. Loadstone, of his string, has been laid up with an abcess on the pad of a fore-foot, and at this writing, January 4th, is not able to go on it. Judge Post has given up all hopes of starting him in the trials, but as the dog is in very good condition and is a cracker, I hope he will be entered.

Another of Mr. Post's (Enid) has gone lame in a shoulder, and stiffens after running half an hour. She has been in the hospital for ten days, but may pull out and start. Judge Post's Derby entry, Helen, is still a little shy of the gun.

Mr. Geo. T. Allender is at the ranch of Mr. Charles Kerr, and is well fixed. His dogs look well and fit to race. I think he is a little sweet on Mr. Jas. E. Watson's pointer Old Black Joe for the Derby and on Mr. L. J. Rose Jr.'s Point for the aged event. Mr. Wm. Schreiber's Nestor is, to my notion, about as good as any of the dogs, and Laddie, owned by the same gentleman, is a cleanly built, tinely-conditioned and very keen dog. Mr. Allender, also, has a very handsome pointer bitch belonging to Mr. Linville, of your city, that is likely to surprise those who pin everything to a burst of speed. His Roberta shows fine nose and a world of bird sense.

Another of the professional trainers, Mr. DeMott, is about fifteen miles from here, at Mountain View Dairy. He has had infernally hard luck in losing five or six of his best dogs, but has some very good ones left, notably two pointers, Lemmie B. and Luck, belonging to Mr. Joe Bassford. Both have been chasing rabbits freely, but a few days ago they tired of the fun, and have settled down to good work.

Mr. Pinder's pointer, Scout Croxteth, is, to my notion, about as good a dog as I have seen. He was gun shy for awhile, but is now as keen as possible; has good nose and gets over a lot of ground. If he does not win he must surely get second or third, unless there are plenty of world beaters in the trials."

The premium list of the thirteenth bench show of the Westminster Kennel Club, N. Y., is at hand. One hundred and sixty classes are listed, fifty species or breeds being mentioned. The Westminster is a grand institution, nobly officered, and with a membership including many of the leading fanciers of the country. The club proper is a pointer club, but the bench show is only a natural outgrowth of the public spirit of the members. The coming show will be a great one, and we hope that some of the local cracks may appear in it. California can hold its own in setters, pointers and greyhounds.

Mr. Jas. E. Watson, the tireless and effective secretary of the club, is covering the country with notices of the second annual bench show of the Pacific Kennel Club, which will be held from May 22nd to May 25th next, inclusive. The show will be governed by American Kennel Club rules, and premium lists may be obtained from the secretary, box 1838, San Francisco.

A marvellous record of winnings for 1888 is that of the Memphis and Avent Kennels. Three gentlemen, Col. Arthur Merriman, Mr. W. B. Gates and Mr. J. M. Avent own the kennel, and the dogs are trained and handled by Mr. Avent. We have often mentioned the thoroughness of the owners as students of blood lines and cool judges of form and quality in young dogs, as well as the personal qualities which gain for them the regard of all who come to know them. The kennel record for 1888 is the best ever made in any country, whether the number of wins, the size of the stakes, the quality of the competitors or the merit of the handlers is considered, and it may fairly be said that the Memphis and Avent Kennel, with Roderigo at its head, is an easy first in English setter dogdom.

In the Eastern Trials at High Point, N. C., Orlando won the Derby and Cecil won third. In the All Age Stake Ollie S. won first. In the Champion Stake Jean Valjean won. In the American Trials, at West Point, Miss., Orlando won the Derby, Betty S. won second, and Roi d'Or won third. Between the three they won the entire stake. In the All Aged Stake Ollie S. won first, and Cassio divided third. Orlando, Bettie S., Cecil and Roi d'Or are the offspring of Roderigo. The kennel had no entries in the Southern Trials, but Toledo Blade, a son of Roderigo out of Lillian, won second in the All Aged. His litter brother, Joey B., won the Eastern Derby last season and also second in the American Derby. From the above it will be seen that the dogs of the kennel this season won first in every stake in both the Eastern Trials at High Point, N. C., and at the American Trials at West Point, Miss.

Hon. Judge Sullivan, of the Superior Court of San Francisco, recently laid it down as the law that the poundkeeper could not legally take dogs while they were under the "sight and control" of their owners. This interpretation of the law and statutes differs with that heretofore made by several prominent attorneys, but seems to carry the weight of equity and we hope may be determined to be the rule of the Court of last resort. Judge Sullivan holds that dogs need not necessarily be upon chain, or within yards or houses to be under "control," but that an owner may air his pets in safety so long as he is present to prevent their becoming dangerous or nuisances. Of course such construction goes far toward reducing the office of poundkeeper to what it should be, beneficially a public function, instead of a licensed predatory institution, but the abuses practiced by the dog-catchers have been infamous, and needed summary correction.

Good News.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—The committee of the American Kennel Club, at a meeting held December 28, 1888, decided upon the following matters, and beg to forward you the result of their action for publication for the information of your readers:

1st. The American Kennel Club Stud Book, after the completion of the present volume, will be issued annually; will contain a full index, and will be published bound in cloth.

2d. Numbers will be assigned upon the receipt of each entry, and will be published monthly in the American Kennel Gazette.

3d. Registry in the Stud Book can be made only under the following conditions: First: Where sire and dam are already registered, or are directly descended from dogs already registered in said book. Second: Where dogs possess an authenticated pedigree extending back three generations. Third: Where dogs (not eligible under the provisions as above required) have won not less than two first prizes in the regular classes at any show recognized by the American Kennel Club.

4th. All entries for the Stud Book will be published in the issue of the American Kennel Gazette, following the receipt of said entry to enable inspection, and the correction of any errors that may appear.

5th. The fee for entry in the Stud Book will remain as heretofore. Fifty cents for each dog entered.

6th. All dogs shown, at any show held by a member of the American Kennel Club, and not already registered in the Stud Book, must be registered in the American Kennel Gazette. The fee for such entries must be twenty-five cents.

7th. The American Kennel Gazette will be published on the last Thursday of each and every month.

A. P. VREDENBURGH, Secretary.

NEW YORK, December 29, 1888.

The Collie.

Probably the name collie, or more properly speaking, colley, is deprived from the term colly or black, that originally being the color. Their use has always been as a shepherd's or cattlekeeper's dog, and it is from the lonely intimacy of solitary shepherds that the dog has obtained his knowledge of, and affection for, man and his ways. Away on the mountains, miles from every one else, the shepherd, with no one to talk to but his dog, has evolved that almost human sagacity which is so great a feature of the collie. Steadfast, faithful, thoughtful he has become, and were he endowed with the power of human speech, he would equal, nay, excel, many members of the human family. Though actual speech may be denied, there is nearly always between the shepherd and his dog an ability to communicate instructions on the one hand, and to understand, even to anticipate them, on the other, so that speech is needless. These dumb signals are all that are required. In days and districts where different breeds were scarcely known, one kind of dog was kept to do all kinds of work, and to this we owe the versatility of the sheep dog, which may be trained to meet all demands upon him—to be a tender of sheep or a hunter of deer, a watch or a retriever, a participant in the hunt of otter, of fox or of badger—ready, in fact, for anything on land or water. Such adaptability is wonderful, and indicates keen intelligence and quick powers of instinct. The real well-bred—bred from a working strain—will kill a rat or a weasel; and up to a recent time in the Hebrides, this dog was trained to hunt seals. A passage in Adamnanus's life of St. Columba would seem to show that thirteen centuries ago the monks of Iona employed the collie in this work.

To watch a sheep dog at work is a most interesting sight, especially in the lake country of England or the Highlands of Scotland. The careful way in which he will gather in all the sheep, even though widely scattered, the gentle yet firm control he has of them, and the readiness with which sign from, or word uttered by his master is obeyed, is remarkable. It is no uncommon thing for dogs to be left alone with a flock for days, or to gather a flock from a whole mountain side, not one to be missing. Shepherds can tell many tales of the sagacity of collies. They will, during the dipping season, guard the undipped sheep, and separate one by one as rapidly as they are required until the whole have passed through the tub. And a recent writer tells how one of these dogs will gather into a certain hollow, only indicated by a slight wave of his master's hand, all the sheep scattered over the hills and valleys for miles aronud. In one case when the hirsel or upwards of twelve hundred sheep were counted, four only were missing, and the good dog on being directed to go instantly and find them, darted off and was over the ridge in a few minutes. Within half an hour his bark was heard from the top of a steep ridge to the left, and he was seen bringing the four to complete the tale.

Of the faithfulness of the collie much can be said. The Ettrick Shepherd tells how at one time he had several hundred lambs which he was taking to the fold. They scampered off over the hills in three separate divisions and in opposite directions, defying all efforts to find them. Night came and search had to be given up. But the dog remained at his task, and in the morning he was found in a gorge standing watch over all the lambs, which he had gathered during the night. And the story of the drover's collie, which losing his master in crossing by a river ferry in the north of England, for nearly two years regularly went backward and forward on the ferry, seeking in vain for the lost shepherd, refusing all the blandishments of others, merely accepting the food given him, is but one proof more of the collie's faithfulness. These could be multiplied indefinitely. Every shepherd could recount tales equally wonderful, and the exception would be to find among the true shepherds' dogs—not the show specimens which may not be quite pure as some have suggested—those which would have failed to do what these have done. Of course, some dogs are endowed with more sagacity than others, but the more appears to be predominant.

Occidental Coursing Club.

The regular meeting of the club was held at 539 California Street on Tuesday evening last, President S. O. Gregory in the chair and Messrs. Abbot, Kittle, Boyd, Deane, Dickson and Carroll present. Messrs. Jas. Gallagher, John Dugan and H. L. Flint were elected to membership.

As officers of the day for the club coursing meeting, to be given on February 22d, at Newark, the following were chosen: J. R. Dickson, Judge; H. Boyd, Flag Steward; Col. S. O. Gregory, Slip Steward; J. F. Carroll, Field Steward; Jas. Wren, Slipper.

At the Occidental Coursing Club meeting the other evening, the Treasurer, Mr. S. L. Abbot, Jr., had the callousness to claim a share in the preparation of the club circular printed elsewhere, and even expressed pride about the pungency and abruptness of that famous document. The circular is effective in bringing tardy members to time, and the treasury begins to groan with the weight of the eight dollars now in it.

Pacific Kennel Club.

The monthly meeting of the Pacific Kennel Club was held on Wednesday evening last in Parlor A, Palace Hotel, President R. E. Wilson in the chair. The minutes having been heard and approved, the first general business transacted was to empower the executive committee to select a judge or judges for the coming bench show, such selections to be subject to approval by the club. The feasibility of combining an exhibition of poultry with the dog show was discussed, and it was decided to invite the breeders of fine domestic fowls to place specimens from their yards on show. Mr. William Schreiber suggested that the premium list be the same as at the last show, but the club decided that a revision would be better, and Messrs. Wm. Schreiber, Jas. E. Watson and J, F Carroll were appointed a committee to prepare a new premium list. The matter of raising a guarantee fund was canvassed, the general sentiment being in favor of such a fund, and President Wilson thought it might be raised without difficulty. Messrs. Clarence Haight, H. W. M. Sandbach, Jas. E. Watson and the president were appointed a committee to secure such a fund. An opportunity was given those present to place their names upon a guarantee fund subscription, and the sum of $300 was at once secured. Secretary Watson reported that he had received Mr. C. H. Mason's terms for judging the show if selected. That gentleman would come for $700 The secretary had also written to Mr. William Graham, of Belfast, Ireland, but had not yet received a reply

The secretary stated that President Wilson and Mr F. C. Zimmerman had each offered special prizes for the coming show of the value of $50.

The club, after considerable general chat about doggy matters, adjourned.

TRAP.

Of Int rest to Owners of Shooting Rights.

A dozen gentlemen who own large tracts of land in various parts of California, gathered at the office of Mr. W. W. Haskell, 242 Montgomery street, on last Tuesday evening, the object, as stated by Mr. Charles Josselyn, who was elected Chairman, being to discuss possible changes in the laws relative to trespass, so as to enable land owners to enjoy their possessions and all the rights and easements properly appertaining thereto, without having great expenditures for fences or guards entailed. Mr. Josselyn remarked that in his own case he was disposed to be very generous to those who wished to enter upon his property either as sight seers, or to shoot or fish, but he felt it an injustice to be compelled to supplement natural boundaries which were sufficient both to indicate his lines, and to confine his stock, by expensive fences the sole purpose of which would be to enable him to prevent trespass. Mr. Josselyn called upon Mr. Ramon E. Wilson, a prominent member of the Bar, to state his opinion relative to the subject matter. Mr. Wilson stated that he also was interested in lands which seemed particularly to attract hunters, and had found the present trespass law onerous in that if he desired to regulate the shooting upon his premises and to prevent it entirely at certain periods, he was compelled to expend a large sum of money solely to erect what could not be mistaken for a fence by any would be poacher. Mr. Wilson's land was also perfectly guarded and protected by natural boundaries which sufficed for all purposes except the one thing of being what were ordinarily understood to be "enclosures.' He had given much thought to the matter, and suggested that a solution might be found by so amending the present law as to make prohibitory posting of land a sufficient warning to those who desired to go upon it to shoot or fish, or for other purposes. The law in New York was of that sort and had served a good purpose. Mr. Wilson said that in many points he sympathized with those who were fond of field sports, and he was willing to make any reasonable concession to sportsmen, but he felt with the Chairman that owners should be so protected in their holdings as to enable them to control all the easements following ownership, and he did feel it a hardship to be compelled to suffer periodical raids from poachers, simply because his lands were enclosed on one side by a river, and not by a fence of wire, stone or other material. He had expended on one piece of property some $500 to erect a fence about one side of it, the other sides being bounded by a river, but the poachers visited him precisely as though his land was unin closed; and as the statute now stood, he was without a remedy. He thought that placing notices on land, in any required number, say one on every ten, or twenty, or a hundred acres, should throw the burden of proof upon trespassers found within the proscribed limits, and should subject them to penalties if guilty.

Chairman Josselyn stated that he had been told by distinguished legal friends that they thought a navigable stream constituted a boundary, within the purview of the code, but in the absence of any precise rule by the Superior Court, they could not be positive.

Mr. Wilson cited a case in which a cliff had been decided to be such a boundary as sufficed to "enclose" land.

Doctor S. E. Knowles held interests in several tracts of land, and while himself very fond of shooting, yet he could not but desire some further and more adequate protection than that afforded by the present law, and he thought the suggestion of Mr. Wilson about amending the law now in force, by adding a section making posting sufficient to protect, an excellent one. He thought it easier to amend an existing law than to pass an entirely new one. Mr. Wilson, in reply to Doctor Knowles, thought that the clerical labor incident to amending was quite as great as that of formulating a new law, and he preferred to draft a section as a substitute for that now in force. He also thought that the land owners present could readily interest sportsmen, particularly the deer and quail hunters, and get their co-operation.

Mr. Edwin Goodall thought that posting would be an inexpensive and good way to warn off poachers, but feared that unless the notices were affixed to large trees or like objects, they would be knocked down and destroyed by cattle. Mr. Goodall moved the appointment of a committee to draft and present a bill to the present Legislature, embodying the views of the land owners present, and the views of others who might desire to co-operate with the committee; and the motion prevailed.

Messrs. C. W. Kellogg, W. A. Beck, H. A. Babcock, E. Goodall, Mr. Bassett, and W. P. Willard were appointed by the Chairman, and, upon motion, the Chairman was requested to act with the committee. Mr. Wilson was requested to draft a bill to be submitted to the committee at an early day, and the Chairman expressed the hope that the bill would be presented immediately. Considerable general discussion was participated in by Messrs. John M. Adams, Mr. W. W. Haskell, Doctor H. C. Davis, Mr. Ben Stickney, Mr. J. B. Lincoln, Mr. W. S. Kittle and others, the consensus of opinion seeming to be that land owners all over the State should combine in an effort to so change the trespass law as to insure to them full enjoyment of their property by posting notices forbidding entrance upon it for the purposes of shooting, fishing or camping. The meeting then adjourned, subject to the call of Chairman Josselyn.

CANOEING.

Oakland Canoe Club.

The annual meeting and banquet of the Club will be held on the evening of Saturday, the 19th, and the race for the Maynisch Badge on the following day. There will probably be quite a keen competition for the trophy this time, though Frolic, the present holder, should have no difficulty in retaining it. The Mystic, however, means business, and is talking of putting in a plate board in place of the radix now fitted, and which would probably improve her sailing somewhat. She ran Frolic quite close last Sunday, and at one time looked like winning. It is much to be hoped that there will be a decent breeze, so that all can have a show, and the best boat win. Bonita and Dart have both been rubbed down and revarnished and look very smart, they will probably be launched next Sunday. Mab is designing a new sail something like Frolic's small one She tried to hoist this one last Sunday but the mast was too light for the weight. Conch ta is also going to try more sail area. She has never been properly tested, and is fast under a very small rig, so may yet astonish the fleet.

Illustrious.

The very excellent stallion Illustrious will stand for the season at Santa Rosa. Illustrious is a dark bay with black points, foaled 1885. He is by Happy Medium, sire of Maxey Cobb, 2:13½; Norman Medium, 2:20; and thirty-nine with records below 2:30. His first dam was Abdalletta by Strader's Cassius M. Clay Jr, sire of Harry Clay, 2:23¾; Durango, 2:13¾; and sire of the dams of Minnehaha, (dam of Beautiful Bells) Happy Thought, 2:22½; Mambrino Boy, 2:26½, J. B. Richardson, 2:26½, and many others. It is needless to enumerate the other strains of blood flowing in Illustrious, as his pedigree is well known. An announcement in next week's BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN will give terms, etc , for the benefit of those who desire to patronize Mr. Stone's horse.

Track Building in California.

Chas. Marvin writes: "I prefer a mile track in the shape of an egg, with the small end toward the barn, so that colts are driven to and from the place of entrance. The grade on a quarter mile turn should be one inch in twelve, the track to be forty feet wide on the turn and sixty feet wide on the stretches.

Our track has a natural drainage; one that would require artificial draining should in my mind, be so constructed in grade, that a ditch following on the inside of rail all the way around to a place of outlet would receive the various drain ditches; one track I have now in mind, the Old St. Joseph Track, St. Joe, Miss., was drained in this way, the water being conducted to the Missouri river.

Our track, and I think most, if not all, other California tracks fail to get water enough, the climate dries them out so thoroughly that they lose all spring unless thoroughly and frequently wet during the summer. Tracks require a daily harrowing so that a cushion remains on top to take off the jar. I prefer a soil that would not require harrowing or work, on which to work young horses. Heavy soil is, I consider, a detriment towards the ready advancement or thorough working of a colt.

We have a soil composed of gravelly loam; have materially improved the track-bed by yearly plowing up, covering with manure, which is than plowed in, and the whole sowed with rye, which, when ripe, is plowed under, and track then put in shape for use.

Have not used or even seen the kite-shaped track, but would think it first-class for a stock farm; might suggest that the entrance face the barns, at the small end.

With a kite-shaped track would not want the upper turn more than three-eighths of a mile, and perhaps a fraction less.

My observation is that a horse used or worked on a short track as a rule, becomes discouraged at the long stretches, and his work is temporarily affected. I do not favor a short track, for no doubt it cramps their movements. I have worked horses that could go faster on the extreme outside portion of the track than next to the pole, on a half-mile track."

Mr. C. T. Boots, of Milpitas, prefers the mile track of quarter turns and quarter stretches, the grade on the turns being one foot in ten. This is for runners. He had a track which being built on an old marsh, had a soil of mingled salt and clay, which although not a fast one, was very safe and required no care but harrowing.

The Eureka track is something of this character, so Secretary Cohn informs us, but it was very much improved by putting first a layer of sawdust one foot deep, and above that a foot of loam. Mr. Wm Corbett advises a mile track by all means, for the best development of the horses, as short tracks are of such sharp turns that the animals are more liable to injury.

O. A. Hickok writes as follows: A mile track, with quarter stretches and quarter turns, is the best. Grades on the turns one half inch to the foot; width from seventy to eighty feet.

A track should be drained from the inside ditch, should be laid up one half an inch to the foot on turns, one quarter of an inch on straight sides, which will allow the matter to run off in the ditch.

The best soil for a track is a natural loam, but if the soil is sandy it must be covered with clay five to six inches deep after being rolled down. Tracks should be well watered every night, and harrowed with a fine harrow every morning.

I cannot speak positively as to the final effect that half-mile tracks have on trotters, but I know that horses that have been trotting on mile tracks cannot make, at a high rate of speed, the short turns on those half that length. I have never seen the kite-shaped track, but don't think I should like it. Can name two tracks I have trotted over, Rochester and Springfield or Hampden Park. They are what I call egg shaped. No horse I have ever driven on them can trot the sharp end as well as they can the other.

Los Angeles.

Will you please let me know through your columns if two horses having the same sire but not the same dam are half brothers?

Answer.—In strict fact they are half brothers, but the accepted usage in this respect is to use the terms of half brothers or half sisters only for animals from the same dam.

Inquirer.

I have been informed that from you I could obtain the history of the stock to which the horse Old General McClellan belonged to. If so will you please let me know your price for it, as I am somewhat interested in that stock?

Answer.—We make no charge for answering questions. Do you mean the Stockton or the Petaluma General McClellan?

Fresno, Cal.

A and B have made a bet; A lets the fastest mile ever made by Stamboul in a trotting race was made on the Los Angeles track. Time, 2:15. Who wins the bet?

Answer.—If the understanding is that "race" means a race "with other horses," A wins. Stamboul's 2:14¾ was made in a race against time, at Bay District Track, S. F. His 2:15 was at Los Angeles, as you say.

Topeka, Kansas.

Can you give me the P. O. address or the location of G. Valensin's Horse Ranch. The Horseman's Christmas Number had quite a lengthy statement of this gentleman's ranch and his horse Sidney, but forgot to give address?

Answer.—G. Valensin, Pleasanton, Cal.

(1) Where can I get a reliable book of trotting pedigrees? (2) Please state where and how to get standard horses registered?

Answer.—(1) Wallace's American Trotting Register is what you want. It is now in 7 Vols. (2) Write to J. H. Wallace, 280 Broadway, New York, for blanks.

Bakersfield, Cal.

I have written twice to the city for the Turf Guide for '88, and no one can find it. Let me know if you can send me one, and I will remit your price.

Answer.—Goodwin's Official Turf Guide is published at 241 Broadway, New York, N. Y. The Annual for 1888 will probably be issued about the middle of January.

Inquirer.

Please give in column of "Answers" the color of Henry of Navarre's uniform (before he was King Henry 4th)?

Answer.—We do not know. The Herald's College of London, England, is probably the only place where you could obtain authentic information.

Please give me the pedigree, and record, if any, of Oliver Cromwell in the next issue of your paper.

Answer.—Oliver Cromwell, br c, foaled 1867, by Lodi, dam Annette by Lexington; 2d dam by Gray Eagle, 3d dam Mary Morris by Medoc. Lodi by imp. Yorkshire, dam Topaz by imp. Glencoe. As far as the records show, Oliver Cromwell started in eight races altogether, four in 1870, and four in 1871. He only won two races, both of which were as a three-year-old. The first victory was at Stockton, May 10, 1870, and was rather a remarkable event. A number of gentlemen entered their youngsters in a colt stake of mile heats, and then offered to run the race on the tracks of the association that would give the most added money. The Slough City was selected, the directors offering, some say $1 200, while others think the amount was $2,000. Mr. C. N. Chase of San Francisco was appointed to collect the stakes and deposit it in bank, subject to the order of the winner, with the understanding that the money should draw interest, all of which was to go with the main stake. Shortly before the contest took place a meeting of those interested was held and it was reported that as the sums collected only came in by driblets, no bank would pay interest, and a motion to do away with the clause in the contract relating to the interest was made, but strenuously objected to by John Hall, owner of Alice May, a pronounced favorite. He said the contract read that interest should be be paid and he wanted his pound of flesh. On the night before the race Mr. Chase was at a hotel in Stockton to receive the balance of the stake money, all the owners being present except Mr. Geo. Treat who owned Oliver Cromwell. The horse was at the race track but had a severe attack of distemper, and the trainer Henry Walsh informed Mr Chase that the horse was so bad he could not start and would have to forfeit. The stakeholder however, paid in the necessary $50, so Oliver Cromwell was eligible to go next day. In the morning Mr. Treat arrived and went straight to the stable where he was met by Mr. Chase who informed him what he had done. After carefully looking the horse over, Treat decided to start him, Mr. Walsh getting him into something like decent shape. As stated before Alice May was the favorite, the Woodburn filly being considered almost invincible. Nell Flaherty was the second choice, with the others strung out, Cromwell selling last among the field of ten, for three and four dollars in pools of between four and five hundred. Emma Barnes, a Norfolk filly, won the first heat in 1:48 3-5, the favorite, and Pill Box, another Norfolk, being distanced. The spectators were in high glee at the downfall of Hall's chances, his actions in reference to the interest money being severely criticised by those who knew the circumstances of the case. The second heat was won by Oliver Cromwell in 1:50¼, he distancing Carrie Miller by Veto, and Gilroy Belle by Lodi. The third and last heat was also won by Cromwell, time 1:53. In this heat the celebrated Nell Flaherty by Rifleman, and Phil Sheridan by Norfolk was also distanced. Below we give the summary of the race, feeling if will interest many of our readers.

NOONDAY.

No Record, Foaled 1884.

Standard No. 10,000.

THIS CELEBRATED TROTTING-BRED STALLION will be limited to 10 mares the ensuing season at Oakland Trotting Park, Oakland, Cal., commencing February 1st and ending July 1st, at $100 the season, with the usual privilege of returning the mare next season if not proving in foal. The names of his patrons will be entered on his book in order of their application. He will be limited strictly to forty mares. Pasturage at five dollars per month, hay and grain extra.

NOONDAY, sired by Wedgewood (692), record, the fourth heat, 2:19, (sire of Favonia, record, fourth heat, 2:13, and Nugget, record 2:26, he the sire of Nettie Lee 4, four-year-old record 2:23½), and five others better than 2:26.

First dam Noontide, record 2:20¾, by Harold (113), sire of Maud S., record 2:08¾, Mattie Graham, 2:21¾, and 17 others in 2:30.

First dam (the dam of Woodford Mambrino, 2:21), by Woodford (thoroughbred son of Kosciusko), he by Sir Archy.

NOONDAY is well formed, evenly balanced and handsome; his color is dark seal brown, small star, right hind foot white, 15 1-4 inches high, weight 975 lbs., strong back and good gaited, short and rapid, and will make a fast and game campaigner.

Breeders will please remember that this horse is not owned by me. I have only leased him for two years for the benefit of the State and breeders on account of the speedy lines and blood that this State is in need of, and no stallion now in public service can show a pedigree with such fast records as enrich the blood of NOONDAY.

I will also handle and train a few horses for gentlemen at fair terms. Address

Thoroughbred Stallion

RATHBONE.

RATHBONE IS A VERY HANDSOME SHADE of brown, the only white a small star in forehead. He is of almost unexceptionable form, 15 hands 3 inches in height, of immense power and substance, and also of the highest quality.

He was never in "order" to run, and yet he has shown well, better by far than could have been expected under the circumstances.

March 11, 1886, on the Bay District course, carrying 5 pounds over-weight (115 lbs.) he defeated, in a stake for two-year-olds, Voltigeur, C. H. Todd, Notidle and Leap Year, the half mile being run in 49¾ seconds. He has shown quarters in 23 seconds, and is so stoutly bred that he could hardly fail to go a distance at a high rate of speed.

His blood lines could not be improved. His sire, Young Prince, is the only stallion that I can recall imported from England to the United States with near strains of Stockwell and King Tom blood, these noted horses being the paternal and maternal grandsires of Young Prince. The family of his dam, Lady Amanda, ranks high among the noted clans of America. Malcolm, Regent, Ontario, McWhirter, Lady Middleton, etc. The following is a tabulated pedigree:

RATHBONE.

- Young Prince (imported.)
  - Knowsley.....
    - Stockwell.
    - Orlando mare.
  - Queen of Spain...
    - King Tom.
    - Ma Mie.
- Lady Amanda..
  - Hurrah .....(imported.)
    - Newminster.
    - Jovial.
  - Lady Lancaster..
    - Monarch. (imported.)
    - Lady Canton.

Lady Canton, by imported Tranby, and running from there through the noted race-mare Mary Randolph, by Gohanna, to Lord Egremeret's Highflyer mare.

Stockwell, King Tom, Newminster and Monarch, the best sons of The Baron, Rataplan, Touchstone and Emilius, and the dams of the same remove, by Orlando, Jerry (a St. Leger winner), Bay Middleton and imported Tranby, present such a combination of ultra fashionable blood as is rarely equalled. Young Prince was bred by James Smith, England; foaled 1870. See English Stud Book, Vol. XIII., page 363.

With proper mares there is no question that RATHBONE will get race-horses, with a certainty of getting, from any good mares, valuable horses for harness and saddle, with a fair show of a fast trotter, as RATHBONE is a capital road-horse and shows a good gait without any trotting practice further than occasional drives on the road. He is one of the "best disposed" horses imaginable without trick or vice of any kind.

In order to place his services within the reach of those who feel that they cannot pay the high price demanded for fast trotting sires, his services are put at the exceedingly low price of $25 the season.

ANTEVOLO,

THIS CELEBRATED TROTTING STALLION WILL make the ensuing season from February 15th to June 15th, 1889, at 2,111 Adeline Street, Oakland.

Terms.

One hundred dollars the season for mares engaged before May 1st, and one hundred and fifty dollars the season after that date. The object of this is to shorten the time in the stud so as to give a better opportunity for training before the Fall Circuit commences. Last year it was the first of August before he was through, and consequently he could not be got into condition in time even for the State Fair. In this connection it will be well to state that there is no deviation from the price, and emphatically no free list. The terms are certainly low for a horse of the class of Antevolo, and there were several applications where the applicants expected an increase of price.

Form and Color.

It is rare to find a horse of such high form, and I am not alone in considering him as being as nearly perfect a type of equine form as was ever seen in a trotting-bred stallion. He is sixteen hands and half an inch in height, 69 inches from point of shoulder to point of buttock, and weighs, in ordinary condition, 1,350 pounds. He is very muscular, limbs as good as the most critical could desire, and as highly finished as a great majority of thoroughbreds. In color he is a rich seal brown, with lighter shading in flanks and muzzle black legs, mane and tail, small star in forehead and off fore pastern white.

Performances.

He has been eminently of the improving kind. As a yearling he trotted in 3: 2; two-year-old in 2:41; three years old in 2:29¾; four years old in 2:19½, the fastest record for a stallion of that age up to that time, and in his five-year old form he trotted in from 2:16¾ to 2:17 in all of the four heats of the big trot which Harry Wilkes won. As he only made one break in this race, notwithstanding the great speed of the contestants he must be credited as remarkably "steady," almost phenomenally so for a horse of his age. Had it not been for an accident which temporarily disabled him, it can be stated with confidence that he would have trotted in 2:15 or better while he still ranked as a five-year old.

In 1887 an injury to his left hind leg, first hurt when a two-year old, incapacitated him from trotting. That injury was below the ankle, and last year when apparently entirely recovered from that, and when he gave promise of doing better than ever before, owing to the track being harrowed very deeply he sprained the suspensory ligament, so that it was slightly bowed about midway between ankle and hock. This was on the 21st of August, and he was walked and jogged, at times being quite lame, until September 19th, when after short brushes, he war, on the 22nd given two easy heats in 2:28 and 2:25, "worked out" twice a week, giving two heats at each working in time ranging from 2:17 to 2:23. On the 6th of October I gave him three heats in 2:28, 2:19, 2:17 (several watches made it 2:16¾) the last half 1:07½, and going so easily that I felt sure he could trot several seconds faster.

Although I worked him carefully, it was obligatory that he should have some fast work to trot on the 20th, and on the following Saturday I gave him three heats, in 2:24, 2:18, 2:14¾, and the next Tuesday 2:26, 2:19, 2:22. He did not show as well in that as before, and though he made a good showing in the National, a wonderful exhibition after the drawbacks, and also his first race for nearly two years, he was evidently "not at himself." I have so much confidence in his speed and endurance that I will name him again in the National if it is gotten up, and will match any stallion heats of two miles for one or two thousand dollars a side to trot in October or November next, and take the chances of his leg standing.

Progeny.

He has only four colts, which were foaled in 1886. Dr. Lilienerantz has two fillies on his ranch at Aptos, D. T. Sexton of San Francisco has a filly, and C. R. Lewis a colt. It was the intention to train the colt, but having hurt his fore leg when a yearling he had to be thrown out. He is quite promising, and though Sunol and other cracks remain in, third payment was made on him in the Stanford Stakes and Occident Stakes. There are quite a number of foals of 1887, several of which have been broken lately, and every one gives good promise of trotting fast. There are also a number of foals of 1888, and, in my estimation, for form, size, and beauty they cannot be excelled by the get of any trotting stallion. That others share in this opinion is evident from the following quotation; "R. E. Bybee says J. B. Haggin has got a last spring colt by Antevolo, son of Electioneer, dam Mabel, sister of Beautiful Bells, that is as much superior to other colts as the Jersey Lily is to a Umatilla reservation squaw."—RURAL SPIRIT, Portland, Oregon.

Nearly everyone who owns an Antevolo colt thinks that he has the best, which is a token of their uniformity.

Pedigree.

The most exacting critic, if moderately intelligent, cannot find fault with his blood lines. His sire Electioneer is, beyond question, the greatest trotting sire of any age when all things are considered. His dam Columbine is the only mare which has two entire sons which have beaten 2:20, 2:18¾, by a six year-old, 2:19½ by a four-year-old. Antevolo stands in the same relation to the thoroughbred as Maud S., Jay-Eye-See, Sunol, Nutwood and many others of first celebrity. In Stud Book form the pedigree is as follows:

First dam Columbine by A. W. Richmond.
Second dam Columbia by imp Bonnie Scotland.
Third dam Young Fashion by imp Monarch.
Fourth dam Fashion by imp Trustee.
Sixth dam Reality by Sir Archy.
Seventh dam by imp Medley.
Eighth dam by imp Centinel.
Ninth dam by Mark Anthony.
Tenth dam by imp Janus.
Eleventh dam by imp Monkey.
Twelfth dam by imp Silvereye.

Pasture at $5 per month on the Oakland Trotting Park. Mr. Hinchma having resolved to pasture the field inside the track this season. It cannot be excelled, the herbage being alfilerilla, wild oats and burr clover, a living stream of clear water running crosst efield, and being enclosed by an inner fence. The gates of the race track shut at night; the animals are as safe within the enclosure as it is possible to have them in a field. In fifteen years which I have known it, there has not been a serious injury to mare or colt.

Two Nutwood Stallions

One is Bay, dam by G. M. Patchen. He is nine years old, never been trained, shows lots of speed, has taken several premiums at our County Fairs as a Roadster Stallion. His name is BAYWOOD black legs, mane and tail, and free driver. Weighs 1,200 pounds; 16 hands high, and is a sound horse.

FLEETWOOD is eight years old, dam by Young America, is sorrel, looks like his sire, fine style and lots of action; close to 16 hands, and weighs 1,100 pounds. In perfect health; good mane and tail. All they want is work to make them trot better than 20, as they are bred right for speed and staying qualities and has had the best of care up to the present time.

To his most sacred Majesty, Charles the Second, by the Grace of God, King of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, Defender of Faith, etc.

May it please your Majesty,

My first book of horse-manship, printed in French, had the honor of your patronage; and I presume again, to dedicate this second, in English, to your Majesty; who being not only the greatest monarch in Christeandom, but a king that loves justice and truth, can best judge of books, which contain, I daresay, the perfect and only truth of horse-manship. My duty, and particular affection to your person are sufficient motives to me, to consecrate, not books only, but myself, and mine, and all that belongs to us, to your Majesties service. But besides that, your favors to me are so many, and so great, that what I am, and have, ought justly to be sacrificed to your will and pleasure, as yours; wherein I joy more, than if it was mine. Your wisdom, sir, valor, and conduct, makes all your neighbors confess, that your Majesty is the most glorious king that ever reigned; and that God will prosper you, in all your great actions, and give your Majesty an happy and long reign, to the joy and comfort of all your loyal subjects, is both heartily wished and fervently prayed for, by

Your Majesties most obedient creature,
WILLIAM NEWCASTLE.

TO THE READERS.

Having passed the greatest part of my long exile at Antwerp, one of the finest cities in the world, whose inhabitants are deservedly famous; for their extraordinary civilities to strangers, of which I must acknowledge to have received a great many from them: I did, during that time, publish, in French, a book of horse-manship; and having again, since my return to my native country, had much leisure in my solitary country life, to recollect my thoughts, and try new experiments about that art. I now, for the more particular satisfaction of my country-men, print this second book, in English; which being neither a translation of the first, nor an absolutely necessary addition to it, may be of use by itself without the other, as the other hath been hitherto, and is still, without this: but both together will questionless do best.

I cannot mention Antwerp, upon the score of my book, but I must also take notice of the honour I have received there, from many noble great persons, who did me the favour to see my Mannage; and of the things they was pleased to say, upon occasion of what they saw there; which will be in lieu of encomiums in the behalf of horses, and of horse-manship, very proper in this place.

When I had the honour to wait on Don John, of Austria, at Antwerp, brought to him by my Lord of Bristol, his Highness was pleased to use me extreme civilly; and to ask both then, and at several other times, for my book of horse-manship, before it was printed; and to receive it with great satisfaction, when I presented his Highness with one: But he did not see my horses, which, in above 20 coaches, all the Spaniards of his court, went to my Mannage to see; with many noble-men of Flanders, as the Duke of Ascot, and others, before whom I rid myself, three horses, and my Esquier, five. Being return'd to Don John, he ask'd them, whether my horses was as rare, as their reputation was great: to which they answer'd, that my horses was such, that they wanted nothing of reasonable creatures, but speaking. And the Marquess of Seralvo, master of the horses to his Highness, and Governor of the castle of Antwerp, told his Highness, that he had asked me, what horses I lik'd best: and that I had answer'd, there were good and bad of all nations; but that the Barbs were the gentlemen of horse-kind, and Spanish-horses the princes. Which answer did infinitely please the Spaniards; and it is very true, that horses are so as I said.

The Marquess of Carasena was so civilly earnest to see me ride, that he was pleas'd to say, it would be a great satisfaction to him to see, me on horse-back, though the horse should but walk. And seeing that no excuses would serve (though I did use many), I was contented to satisfy his so obliging a curiosity; and told him, I would obey his commands, though I thought I should hardly be able to sit in the saddle. Two days after he came to my Mannage, and I rid first a Spanish-horse, called Le Superbe, of a light-bay. A beautiful horse: though hard to be rid, yet when he was hit right, he was the readiest horse in the world. He went in corvets forward, backward, sideways, on both hands; made the cross perfectly upon his voltoes: and did change upon his voltoes so just, without breaking time, that no musician could keep time better; and went Terra a Terra perfectly. The second horse I rid, was another Spanish-horse, call'd Le Genty, and was rightly named so, for he was the finest shap'd horse that ever I saw, and the neatest; A brown-bay, with a white star in his forehead; No horse ever went Terra a Terra like him, so just, and so easy; And for the piroyte in his length, so just, and so swift, that the standers by could hardly see the riders face when he went. And truly when he had done, I was so dizzy, that I could hardly sit in the saddle: He went also so exactly in corvets forwards, as no horse can go better, and yet he had no great strength. Whence it appears, that a horse of agility, lightness, spirit, well-tempered, and of a good disposition, is much better than a horse that hath only strength; And that a most mighty and great Dutch-brewer's horse, wanting spirit and agility, can never go well in the Mannage.

The third and last horse I rid then, was a Barb, that went a Metz-Ayre, very high, both forward, and upon his voltoes, and Terra a Terra. And when I had done riding, the Marquess of Carasena seem'd to be very satisfied; and some Spaniards that were with him, cross'd themselves, and cried, Miraculo.

Many French gentlemen, and persons of the greatest quality of that nation, did me the favour to see my horses; and the Prince of Conde himself, with several noble-men, and officers, was pleased to take the pains to go twice to my Mannage. And though the French think, that all the horse-manship in the world is in France; yet one of them, and he a very great man in his country, was heard say, directing his speech to me: "Par Dieu (Monsieur), il est bien hardi qui monte devant vous." And another said, at another time: "Il y'a plus de segnieur connne vous en Angleterre."

Among many great persons, of which the vast country of Germany affords abundance, who, for the most part, delight to travel; The Landgrave of Hesse, did not only do me the honour to visit me, and see my horses, but, being return'd to his country, was pleased to show, by a very kind letter, that he had not forgotten me, nor the love he had observed I have for horses; Being pleased to promise, he would send me two of his own breed: But soon after, he was killed in the wars the King of Swede made with the King of Poland.

As poor as I was in those days, I made shift to buy at several times, four Barbs, five Spanish-horses, and many Dutch-horses, all the most excellent horses that could be, and among them a grey leaping-horse, the most beautiful that ever I saw, and who went exceeding high and just in leaps, without any help at all; as also upon the ground: and Terra a Terrra, beyond all other horses; and he did look as if he had been above the rate of horse-kind.

The Duke of Guise hearing of him, two gentlemen, a French-rider, and an English-man wrote to me, that if I would part with him, the Duke of Guise would give me 600 Pistols for him, but he was dead three days before I receiv'd their letter; and had he lived, I would not have taken any money for him; for he was above price, and besides, I was then to great a beggar, to think to be made rich by the sale of a horse; I have bestow'd many thousands of pounds in horses, and have given many; but never was a good horse-courser: Selling being none of my proffession.

The King himself, who is an excellent judge both of men, and business, of things of use, and of recreation: of necessity, and of ornament: did like that horse very well: And having had the honour, when I was his governor, to be the first that sat him on horse-back, and did instruct him in the art of horse manship; It is a great satisfaction to me, to make mention here of the joy I had then, to see, that his majesty made my horses go better, than any Italian, or French-riders (who had often rid them) could do; and to hear him say, that there are very few that know horses; which was knowingly said, and wisely judg'd of his majasty: It being very certain, that all men undertake to ride them, but very few know them, or can tell what they are good for.

It would fill a volume, to repeat all the commendations that were given to horses, and horse-manship, by several worthy gentlemen, of all nations, high and Low-Dutch, Italians, English, French, Spaniards, Polacks and Swedes, in my own private riding-house, at Antwerp; which, though very large, was often so full, that my Esquier, Capt. Mazin, had hardly room to ride: But these few already spoken of, will serve very well instead of all: and after I have given an account, that I have divided this whole book in four parts, and every part in many sections, and paragraphs, wherein I never intended to observe any exact method, I beseech my readers, to take in good part, that I have however set down, as clearly as I could, without the help of any other logic, but what nature hath taught me, all the observations about horses, and horse-manship; which I have made, by a long, and chargeable, though I must needs say, very pleasant, and satisfactory, experience; and so

THE FIRST PART.

Of the several authors that have written of horse-manship, both Italians, French, and English.

This noble art was first begun and invented in Italy, and all the French and other nations went thither to learn.

The feat of horsemanship being at Naples; the first that ever writ of it being Frederick Grison a Neapolitan: and truly he writ like horse-man and a great master in the art for those times.

Henry the eighth sent for two Italians that were his scholars, to come to him into England: and of one of them came all our Alexanders; and their scholars filled the Kingdom with horse-men. Sir Phillip Sidney brought an Italian Rider, one signior Romano, to teach his nephew William Lord Herbert, afterward Earl of Pembrook; and the same Sir Phillip Sidney brought also over an other Italian rider, called signior Prospero. The old Earl of Leicester, sent for an excellent rider out of Italy, called signior Claudio Curtio, who writ a book of horse-manship, and is quoted by several Italian writers; but I think that much of his book is stolen out of Grison. Laurentius Cussius is another author, none of the best, with horrible bits. Then there is Cesar Fieske, who hath writ a book much out of Grison too, where he meddles with music. Then there is another book of horse-manship called Gloria del Cavallo, with long discourses and much out of Grison. There is another book of Italian horsemanship called Cavallo Frenato de Pietro Antonio, a Neopolitan; much stolen out of Grison: but his book consists most of bits to little purpose; though they seem to be great curiosities. But the most famous man that ever was in Italy, was at Naples, a Neapolitan, called Signior Pignatel, but he never writ.

Monsieur La Broue rid under him five years: Monsieur De Pluvinel nine years: and Monsieur St. Anthoine many years. The liberty, which is the best for bits, at this day, we call A La Pignatel.

These three aforemeationed French-men that rid under signior Pignatel, filled France with French horse-men; which before were filled with Italians.

General Topics.

In the General Topics column of last week there was a paragraph in relation to a dispute between the owner of Dexter, A. Fawcett, and his driver, Budd Doble, which was decided by arbitration. Had Doble been contumacious he could have prevented the delivery of the horse to Robert Bonner at the time specified, and the sale in all probability would not have been consummated. There are good reasons to think if that had been the case, and that he had remained in training, especially the training which actual races ensure, there is scarcely a doubt that he would have lowered his record by several seconds. There are sound and rational grounds for this belief. In the first place he was an "improving horse;" in the second he had an improving trainer, who was also perfecting himself in the art of driving. With Dexter it may be said that Doble commenced his career. Previous to that he had either been under the directions of his father or others of the older trainers. He had the care of Lucy previous to engaging with Trussel and Fawcett, and it is not unlikely that he had more to do with horses than I am acquainted with. At all events that brought him prominently before the public, when his sound sense and genteel deportment made him a general favorite. Unquestionably there could not be a better school for a young trainer, and Budd was just the "right sort" to profit by his opportunities. Above all he had the proper disposition to handle a horse, possessing the peculiarities of the king of the tracks. He had a light hand, conciliating method, which in a great measure overcame the irascibility of temper which former trainers had augmented by coercion, if not abuse. Without wishing to detract from the fame of Hiram Woodruff, had Dexter remained in his hands it is very doubtful if the rate of speed which he showed under Doble's tutorship would have followed the "field marshals" tactics. He exerted too much strength, and in place of the light hands of Budd, there would have been a tension on the bit such as few could exert.

Late in the fall of 1871, after the big Chicago fire, I took a few horses to New York, which were stabled at the Fleetwood track. The sun was nearly below the horizon when Mr. Bonner drove Dexter into the yard. He was placed in one of the deep boxes which gave room enough for horse and wagon, blankets were carefully adjusted, and the doors closed. Mark (Toppy) Maguire came a short time before the arrival of Mr. Bonner. He had a substantial-looking horse hitched to a substantial wagon, when an argument arose how fast he could drive him around the track, "go as you please." After the owner tried his skill there was a wager of a bottle of wine that John Murphy could drive him faster, and when that was decided by the victory of Murphy, another was made that Maguire could not drive him as fast as he did before. By that time it was nearly dark, a kind of dense twilight, with a few pale, twinkling stars; scarcely as much light as there would be when the sky was fully ablaze with the far distant sun. Mark made a long score and came to the wire as fast as his tired horse could make the pace; not very fast, however, and very fortunate that the horse had been so thoroughly pumped out that even an ordinary road clip was all that he could accomplish. The sharp first turn, which at that time was close to the starting point, was too closely made in an effort to save all the ground possible, when the hub went crashing into the fence, and the driver was hurled nearly to the outside of the track. Little damage was done. Toppy swore that he struck on his feet and took a hop, step and jump to the place we found him, and that he had never "left his legs," although when the bar-room was entered, the light showed a streak, or rather a broad stripe of clay marked from shoulders to feet. That there was no serious injury was evident, and Murphy, appealing to me for a decision, both were mulcted, Mark for not making the circuit after the word was given, and Murphy for endangering the life of his competitor by bantering him into the wager.

There was the usual amount of "horse talk," and the hours flew by much in the same manner as Burns describes when Tam o' Shanter was wiled into his late ride. Eight o'clock, nine o'clock, and something after before Mr. Bonner rose to go away, and addressing his conversation to me said, "You are doubtless surprised, Mr. S., at my staying so late, but I have spent a pleasant evening, and I had a reason for postponing my departure. You will remember that when I purchased Dexter that Commodore Vanderbilt claimed that he had been offered to him for a great deal less than I paid, and that he would not have him at any price. That he was totally unfit for a gentleman to drive, and that a man's life was in jeopardy whenever he sat behind him. Now this is election day, and there will be bonfires, hurrahing, and crowds of people in the street, all kinds of uncouth noises and sights, which would be apt to disturb the equanimity of any horse, and I shall drive Dexter through all this din and confusion with as much or more confidence than I would with any horse in my stable." There was a time when it was not safe to jog Dexter on the road, and until Mr. Bonner got him it would have been thought very risky to attempt it when there were any unusual sounds or sights to disturb his equanimity. We walked to the entrance gate and the top of the hill, and there was starlight enough to see him as he jogged across the bridge, and made the turn homeward. I had some misgivings about the result, as a more trying task could hardly be given a horse which was at all nervous, and part of my business in town the next day was to learn the termination of the venture. Mr. Bonner assured me that he had not the least difficulty, that he took up his rapid, easy, road gait, and with ears pricked and a gentle pressure on the bit passed bonfires, rockets and roman candles, landing him safely at his stable on 56th Street without causing a tremor of the nerves. There are few men who would have undertaken that drive with horses which were regarded as at all spirited, and a nervous man would, in all probability, not have accomplished it in safety.

The "old commodore" was mistaken when he asserted that he could have purchased him for less than Mr. Bonner gave. It may have been that there were times, when Dexter was owned by Geo. B. Alley, that he could have been bought for a comparatively small sum, but after Trussell and Fawcett became the owners, especially after Fawcett was the sole proprietor, and that it was demonstrated that he was sure to return a net profit of from fifteen to twenty thousand dollars a year, the price obtained was far within his actual value, provided the owner was willing to accept the risk of death or being disabled from trotting. The agent who negotiated the sale had to exert all of his eloquence to overcome the objections advanced to parting with him, and had it not been that Fawcett came to the conclusion that he could buy one which was likely to prove just as fast for about one-third of the sum, all of C——'s eloquence and arguments would have been of little avail. Fawcett was comparatively a new beginner in trotting affairs. He had made a good deal of money in live stock, and a good deal more investing in Chicago property, and also in Baltimore, where he resided. He thought that it was not a deal of trouble to pick up a horse which would beat 2:20 under his management, and he selected Bashaw Jr. as the one which was absolutely sure to do the trick. The reported price was $12,000, and time and time again he told me that he would not give him for Dexter, that he was sure he would be equally as fast, and then he had the advantage of being a stallion. A great many people have been imbued with something of the same ideas, but when the task is to beat the "best of the day," it is a hard "stent" to get through with. That Bashaw Jr, was a good horse is beyond question; he was a game horse, too, and could go heats of two miles so as to puzzle the best horses of the West to beat him, but the task of making 2:17¼ was far beyond his reach. Hereafter I will have a good deal to write about the old horses, especially those which took part in the races which took place in the valley of the Mississippi, and on the Chicago and other western tracks.

The last time I saw Dexter he was not on his good behavior. That was also at the Fleetwood track. Mr Bonner had driven him there, and his mare, the trotter Pocahontas, was either in Murphy's stable or was also driven from the city by one of Mr. Bonner's men. If my memory be correct she was stabled at the track, the intention being to give her a trial under saddle with Murphy up, and a grand showing resulted. After the usual jogging and scoring she was sent off, and going with apparent ease made the mile in 2:18. The usual time was given between the heats, and she started away with wonderful speed. I have forgotten the time of the half-miles, though I distinctly remember that she reached the half two seconds faster than in the prior heat, but when making the reverse curve she broke. One of these tangling, awkward breaks which makes one nervous to witness, and in which she must have lost a whole handful of seconds. After recovering she trotted very fast, coming home at a "terrific flight of speed," as racing reports have it, making the mile in 2:20. Murphy had ridden Dexter a mile in 2:18 1-5, and that when his best harness-record was 2:22½, and now that his mark was 2:17¼, it appeared logically reasonable that the same rider should get him a good deal below his old mark. He looked as well as a horse could, and although his exercise had not been exactly right for saddle work, after Pocahontas had done so well, he should go one mile satisfactorily. He jogged pleasantly, there was not the least evidence of soreness, but when Murphy endeavored to "set him going" he would break before covering one hundred yards, and after the contretemps, singlefoot track gallop, anything except to trot, bits were changed, the saddle placed further back and further forward, checked high and checked low, the martingale taken up and let out, it was no use, and the job was given up as being a bad one on that date. I am not aware whether Mr. Bonner gave him another saddle trial or not, although it is not likely he did, as I would, in all probability, have heard about it. He did mention that perhaps he would send him to Murphy in order to learn whether or not it was the want of practice which caused the trouble.

Fifth or quarter seconds. Why not fifth and quarter seconds? One of the most nonsensical whimsies ever heard of was the abrogation of fifths of a second and insisting on quarters being the fractions adopted when the time of races was to be measured. It came about from George Wilkes taking ground against records which were given in fifths, and rather autocratically took upon himself the rectification as he termed it, and when a report came to his paper with the fractions in fifths, they were changed to quarters, halves and three-quarters. This was in the fifties, and as watches which marked fifths of a second were comparatively rare at that time, it did not make the difference it does at the present epoch of good chronometors. Watchmakers agree that better movements can be made when the graduation is fifths, and that superior timekeepers result from such a construction. In astromony and gunnery decimals facilitate calculations, and for these uses time-measures are made which record with accuracy tenths of a second, and with contrivances which will make a still more minute division. The proper plan would be that when fifth second watches are employed, the time should be given in fifths. If only two watches were used, and one marked two-fifths, and the other three-fifths, it would be proper to call it a half, but as the prevailing custom is to have three timers, that is not likely to arise. It is a rare occurrence when three good timers are more than two-fifths of a second apart, and in that case the medium would be the time announced. Thus we will suppose that A's watch stopped at one-fifth, B's at two-fifths, and C's at three-fifths, then two-fifths would be proper. There is more difference between a fifth and a quarter than many people imagine. A horse which trots a mile in 2:20 1-5 would beat a competitor which made 2:20¼ nearly two feet, one foot and a decimal of .885. Were this to be called a dead heat in practice, to comport with making the fractions equal, there would be a great row. If correct to give the heat to a horse which wins by the best part of a neck the race, why not credit him with the fastest record when time made is the criterion?

"Time" is the essence of trotting, and in this country and Australia has nearly as much weight in racing. I have thought that the consideration given to minute fractions of seconds was a drawback to sport, but it has become so intimately interwoven with the sports of the track that it will be impossible to overcome the hold it has obtained on the patrons of turf and track. No matter how close the contest, the cheers are suppressed when slower time than what was anticipated is marked on the board. Those who may be called track devotees take small interest in a race which they are not in a situation to "time" for themselves, and positions which will give the best opportunity of being correct are eagerly sought. No better illustration of the propensity can be obtained than what is presented at the Oakland Trotting Park during the pendency of an important race. The stand for judges and timers is on the outside of the track. That this is the proper place I have argued for many years, and the best-appointed race courses have adopted it, though there is a violent prejudice against what is termed an "unwarranted innovation" in this part of the country. The Oakland stand has two stories, the upper for judges and clerk, the lower supposed to be for the use of the timers. The building is a square of twelve feet, and the under story is low, with stairs to ascend to the upper department. When a race is in progress the lower part is so densely packed that it is a work of pushing and wedging to get through, and of those who are so compacted in the small space only a few can see a portion of the race, but the start and finish can be fairly known. The timers sit on the ledge formed by a plank fastened horizontally on the top of the railing, with their feet hanging over, and on each side of the trio others are crowded between the corner posts. A more uncomfortable position could not be chosen, though when it is the most crowded there are further delegations anxious to get in. Ineffectual efforts have been made to keep it free from the inroad; but when a gatekeeper was chosen who had firmness enough to do his duty, that would be counteracted by orders from higher officials.

Of all the race courses and tracks I have ever known Dexter Park, Chicago, had the best police regulations. Being within the city limits, it came legitimately under the surveillance of the police, and at every meeting or important race the chief of that department would detail whatever force was requested. In the many years I was connected with the tracks of Chicago I never knew of a fight or disturbance of any kind, never heard of a pocket being picked, or even boisterous behavior during the races. Dexter Park had two tracks, the judges stand being between the two, filling the whole space between them at that point. The stand obstructed the view of horses coming down the stretch, and one man was seriously injured by a horse which struck him as he stepped on the outer track. A policeman was stationed at the point with strict orders not to let any one pass during a race, or while the horses were exercising, and not at any time while a race was in progress, unless officers of the association, judges and timers, who would be designated by badges. "Jack" Nelson was assistant superintendent, and as he was partial to witnessing races he managed to be on hand whenever the racing was likely to be of interest, and, of course, took command of the force. One very important day he stationed a man at the point mentioned with the usual instructions, showed him the badges to be worn, and again cautioned him to be strict in the observance of his duty, I was extremely busy, and was on the inside when the officer was placed at his post. Rushing through the narrow alley way with the intention of crossing the track, I was soon aware of the obstacle, as he pushed me back with so much vigor that I had some trouble to keep on my feet. "I am superintendent," I remarked, "and secretary of the club." "No matter," he replied, "if you were captain, major and all hands, when Captain Nelson gives me my orders I shall be governed by them." A policeman crossed from the other side who endorsed my statement, but that had no effect, when luckily Nelson came, and he, calling the man by name, said, "I thought all of you men knew Mr. S.," when I stopped him with the information that he was just the man I wanted to guard that pass, and would see that I was not without the insignia of my rank thereafter.

When Mr. McVicker opened the theater which took his name, one of the attractions of the first night was a prize of $500 for a conundrum which a committee of well known citizens were to award. Standing room was at a premium, as the novelty of the affair was an additional incentive to attend. The successful author was Jack Nelson, and the quibble which "drew down" the $500 was "Why is an elephant like a brick?" There was a long pause after the proposition was announced, and the most fertile imagination could not arrive at anything which had a semblance to a correct solution. "Because neither can climb a tree," came in resonant tones from the stage. An instant thereafter there was such a peal of laughter, or rather, such a hurricane of laughter and applause, that the pendants on the chandeliers rattled like those which adorn the lights on a high-pressure Mississippi steamboat when under a full head of steam. All Chicago joined in the merriment when the morning papers gave an account of the affair, the outrageous absurdity of the simile, the forced point of resemblance, being so utterly ridiculous, that the risible organs of all Chicago were affected thereby. If the old adage of "laugh and grow fat" has any force, tons and tons of adipose tissue were added to the avoirdupois of Chicagoians by Jack's wit. When in charge of the police force on the track, his presence was enough to secure proper decorum among those who would have been troublesome to almost any other member of the department. He was a general favorite among the frequenters of the track, and those who did not know him soon learned that the quick, easy-mannered man was not to be trifled with. At the first meeting held on Dexter Park, there was a large delegation from New York, and among them some tough customers, at the head of which was Florence Scannell and Louis Bareil. The last named lived in San Francisco before the war, and I think was the man who carried the body of Col. Baker from the battle-field. Scannell was a noted fighter, had killed his man, and I believe came to his end from the ball of a pistol.

There were so many races on the programme, and also premiums for exhibition of horses, that the forenoon had to be utilized, and two of the least important races were trotted before noon. Two very good "green horses" made their first appearance in the slower classes, and were to come together in another. It was set for the forenoon, and when one of the drivers came to me with a request that it should be transferred to the afternoon, on the plea that he wanted to bet a good deal of money, I felt assured that rascality was intended. That year, 1867, I was living in Iowa, but at the request of the proprietors had gone to Chicago a few weeks previous to the meeting to assist in the management. The driver was told that the programme would be carried out to the letter, and that there was enough betting in the morning to cover twenty times as much money as he could command. After two heats were trotted it was evident that my suspicions were well founded. The driver who wanted the race put off till the afternoon won the first heat and lost the second. Another driver was substituted, and it was still more palpable that he lost the heat purposely. The New Yorkers had supported the one which was fixed to win from the start, and the betting gave additional testimony to corroborate the action of the drivers. The judges could not be made to see what was plain to everyone else, and the only recourse was for the president of the association to order them to vacate the stand, and declare the race off. The lower story of the judges' stand was inclosed, and the door had a substantial lock. Nearly every one left in order to get lunch at the Transit House, which was scarcely more than two hundred yards from the entrance gate. Mr. Fawcett, heretofore mentioned as the owner of Dexter, remained, having breakfasted late, and Jack Nelson, with two or three policemen, also staid, while their companions took their meal. Soon after the president and party left, the horses were again got out, the door of the stand was broken open, and the judges called the horses up, taking the precaution, however, of not ringing the bell. Fawcett saw the movement, and telling Nelson what they were trying to do, they marched in "double quick" to the scene of action. There were at least a score of hard cases determined to carry the thing through, and support the judges in their assumed authority. Jack sent Fawcett with the two policemen to order the judges out, and he took the station where the narrow alleyway led to the track. The crowd made a rush and he motioned them back, and the look of quiet determination was a sufficient token that if a man attempted to force a passage he would get the worst of it. No attempt was made. Fawcett gave the judges to understand that if they did not walk "down and out" gracefully they would be hurled over the railing, and the cool, resolute man who barred the way held the mob in check. It is only justice to Chicago to state that the judges were not even residents of Illinois. A man from Ohio had presided that far; during the meeting I selected a Dr. C——, from St. Louis, and when looking for the third I saw that the vacancy was filled by a man who was totally unfit for the position. Geo. B. Mansur was superintendent of the track, and I supposed that he had appointed the obnoxious individual, as he was not so well acquainted with him and his tricks as I was, but before I could reach Mansur to have him removed the horses were ready to start. When the trouble arose we learned that he had not been chosen by anyone, having coolly taken his place with the others in order to carry out the scheme. Of all the nefarious projects I have known in more than thirty years' experience, this was the boldest attempt to rob. The parties engaged in it did not deny the fraud, but claimed that none others than the judges had power to declare the race off, and my next visit to New York, having gone to the Fashion track to see some of the horses, I was surrounded by the "gang" full of denunciations of Chicago, though civil enough to me, notwithstanding they were well aware that I was the prime mover in the affair. This was before the organization of the National Trotting Association, and a potent argument in favor thereof.

Governor Waterman has appointed Wm. Boots, Esq., and Hon. D. J. Murphy directors of Agricultural District No. 5, consisting of Santa Clara and San Mateo counties.

Another Endorsement of Tips.

The following letter is another strong argument for the use of tips, and coming from a man who is a practical driver and trainer, it should be given additional weight. There are differences between the diagram sent and the kind we use. The drawing shows that the colt has a good sized foot, and a weight of five ounces, though heavier than an average of ours, is not a great deal out of the way. The posterior part of the tip is cut on an angle, but the angle is the reverse of our plan, the outside of that being the longest. The first tips we had made were cut off square, and the reasons for the change were that in nearly every case where the tips were worn any length of time, one or both of the posterior nails would be broken. This came from the heels being unfettered, the continual dilatation and contraction at every step crystallizing the metal, and when that was carried to a certain point the nail broke. To overcome that tendency the tips were shortened, and by cutting the end on an angle so that the apex was on the inside of the tip, and the shoulder in the horn cut to fit. There is a sort of dovetail which is an efficient aid to the rear nails, and also tends to keep the tips in place while the nails are driven. Mr. Hall's diagram shows six nails, and these driven so as to leave quite a space between the last nail and back portion of the tip. As a rule we only use four nails, and have the holes punched so that the point of entrance will be the inside of the wall, the nail going through at an angle which will bring it out about three-quarters of an inch above the metal, in some instances a trifle higher. It is evident that if the nail is driven straight, and the point of entrance no further in than the inside of the wall, it is impossible to wound the sensitive portion of the foot, but if started from the centre of the wall and given the curve necessary to carry it out again then there is danger of pricking.

We direct the smith in our practice to make the foot surface of the tip level, the ground surface being concaved. It is of the utmost importance that the horn and metal be fitted with scrupulous nicety, so that there will be a perfect unison between them, and it is also important that the ends of the tip and the shoulders for them to rest against be accurately fitted. The toe of the tip and sides should correspond exactly with the edges of the horn, so that the least touch of the fine side of the rasp will bring the edge of the horn true with the outside of the tip. The job of setting tips properly is not an easy one, though any good smith should be able to do it satisfactorily after he had a little practice. There is not the least trouble in making quarter-boots which keep their place with tips or when the horse is barefooted, but scalping boots are harder to manage; still we have a method of fastening which gives reasonable security.

The requests in Mr. Hall's letter will be given attention.

EDITOR BBEEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—Enclosed please find diagram of the tips I use on my two-year-old trotting stallion Mohawk Jr., Second. They are my own invention. How near right are they? I had them made thin at the heels and about the one-sixteenth of an inch thicker at the toe than at the heel. Had them concaved on under side. Had the toe rasped down so the tips would be on a level with his heels. The tips weigh 5 ounces; I used 3-ounce toe weights with the tips. Used the Security weight. Our blacksmith gave me the laugh when I commenced using the tips. They said if I used them three months I would have to have bar shoes put on my colt. Now I will tell you the results. I had them put on Mohawk Jr. (two years old) the 1st of July. Gave him a trial the 3d of July. He trotted in 3:30. Used the tips and toe weights on him until the 3rd of October. Gave him a mile and repeat; first mile in 2:53, second mile in 2:51, last half in 1:21. I then let up on him and pulled his tips off and turned him in the lot on nice days. I said if he would show me three minutes during the fall I would let him up. If he had been worked 30 days longer I am confident he would have trotted in 2:40. It is not necessary to tell you our smiths have changed their minds. I tell you, Mr. Simpson, every intelligent shoer and trainer will soon admit that tips and toe weights are the thing. I have owned and driven Hall's Mohawk Jr., record 2:26, Belle Ogle, record 2:21½, sired by Hall's Mohawk Jr. Both Mohawk Jr. 2:26, and Belle Ogle, 2:21½, were very speedy when two years old, but could not (with shoes on) trot better than 3:20. Now, when I have my two-year-old stallion Mohawk Jr. Second, shod with tips, he can trot in 2:51 with less work than either Mohawk Jr., 2:26, or Belle Ogle, 2:21½. The tips, I am confident, made the gain of 29 seconds on Mohawk Jr. Second. I took great pride in showing his feet after I had the tips pulled off. His trog was as perfect as it possibly could be, had he run in the lot without tips. His heels are as tough as rawhide. He can trot over rough, frozen roads and not flinch or make the least impression on his heels. I noticed in the Western Sportsman that some one that used tips had to have them taken off and shoes drove in in order to use quarter boots. I invented a pad to keep the quarter boots up when I use tips, and it works to perfection. The quarter boots stay much better with the tips and pad than they do with shoes. Please send me a diagram of Antevolo's tips, and instructions how they should be made and put on.

I have just received a letter from J. I. Case asking me to let him have my leg and body wash for Jay-Eye-See's leg. I advised Mr. Case to use tips on Jay-Eye-See.

GEORGE S. HALL.

FREDERICKTOWN, Ohio, Jan. 4, 1889.

"I think it was Custance," writes the sporting correspondent of London Truth, "who, on being told that a very high price had been offered for some frightfully overrated horse, and that the owner had refused to sell, remarked with great felicity, 'Then they are at least two fools in the world.' I am reminded of this observation by reading that some commissioner from South America (who surely ought not to be at large) has offered $120 000 for Stuart, and that M. Pierre Donan has declined to part with his steed, even at that outrageous and entirely Bedlamitish price." These strong words are a trifle unnecessary. There is probably just as much truth in the $120,000 story for Stuart, as there was in the report of $85,000 being given for Ormonde—and that was exactly none at all.

Colt Stakes for 1889.

The Directors of the Fourth District Agricultural Association met at Petaluma last week, and decided to announce the opening of three trotting colt stakes. The following events were selected:

Yearling Stake, mile dash, $30 entrance, $10 to be paid March 1st, with nomination; $10 May 1st, and the final payment of $10 to be made on or before August 1st, 1889. The society to add $100 to the stake.

Two-year-old Stake, mile heats, best two in three, $50 entrance; $10 to be paid March 1st, when the nomination is to be made; $20 to be made May 1st, and $20 July 1st, 1889. The society to add $200.

In each of the above the money will be divided in three parts—50 per cent. to first colt, 30 per cent. to second, and 20 per cent. to third. Five entries and three starters will be required in each race.

In referring to these stakes the Petaluma Argus says: We hope to see these stakes well filled. There is plenty of good trotting blood in our county, but we can't have trotters unless we train for them. With our limited knowledge we could pick out twenty two-year-olds that have almost an even chance to-day in this stake. Don't be scared because you hear talk about some phenomenal colt. It may be that the one you fear will meet with an accident, or develop so much speed in his trials that the owner will keep him out for another year. And, besides this, the second and third money is worth striving for. But if you do not win any part of the premium, and your colt is a good one, the training will increase its value as much as you pay out. Messrs. Page and Hicock will not start Peep O' Day in any races while in his two-year-old form, so no one need stay out on his account. We heard the other day, and we hope that other owners will follow his example, that A. L. Whitney would give a special premium each to the colt and filly sired by his horse Dawn that stood best in the race. This is a capital idea, and it certainly ought to encourage entries. Sonoma county, and especially the Petaluma district, is famous for the production of fine horses. A vast sum of money comes in from this source, and we ought to keep up our reputation in this line.

Pick Them Out.

At last the Brooklyn Handicap and Suburban entries are known. Speculation has been rife among the winter bettors as to what horses would be entered for the two principle all-aged events, and on looking over the list no one can feel disappointed, for the true and tried of the turf are here in numbers. As a matter of fact the entries are not so many as last year, but they are so superior that without doubt, if the handicapper does his work conscientiously, there will be a larger field of starters this year than last. It will be noticed that there are very few of the selling plate order mentioned, owners of that class being more inclined to save entrance money for the ordinary purse events than to start where they are thoroughly out-classed.

The telegrams state that there may be further California entries, but from the names given below it would seem that all the principle horses are entered, and it is extremely doubtful if any others are received from this coast. What a race the Suburban would be with such cracks to face the starter as The Bard, Kingston, Hanover, Elkwood, Raceland, Belvidere, Terra Cotta, Eurus, Sir Dixon, Judge Murray, (Bertha B. colt), Richmond, Badge, Firenzi and Egmont, why it would be worth traveling across the continent to witness, and lucky the man who could guess the winner. With horses such as the above at the post, provided the weights are not excessive, 2:07 should be wiped out for all time, and unless the elements prevent it, such a result is more than likely to occur.

SUBURBAN ENTRIES FOR 1889.

A handicap sweepstake of $100 each; half forfeit, and only $25 if declared by February 20th, the association to add the amount necessary to make the value of the race $10,000; the second to receive $2,000 and the third $1,000 out of the money added; weights to be announced February 1st; winners after publication of weights of a race for $1,000, 4 pounds extra; of two of $1,000 or of one of $2,000, 8 pounds extra, of three of $1,000, or two of $2,000 or one of $5,000, 13 pounds extra; in the case of horses handicapped at 115 pounds or over, these penalties shall apply to the extent of one-half, and in the case of those handicapped at 122 pounds or over, to the extent of one-quarter only; one mile and a quarter.

Aged.—Richmond, Erebus.

Six-Year-Olds.—The Bard, Eurus, Eolian, Egmont, Elkwood, Inspector B., Quito.

Four-Year-Olds.—Badge, Bella B., Bendigo, Brian Boru, Barrister, Clay Stockton, Charlie Dreux, Defaulter, Darlington, Drumstick, Eolo, Falcon, Fitz James, George Oyster, Glen Echo, Gorgo (imp.), Galore (imp.), Gallifet, Hypocrite, Judge Murray, Larchmont, Montague, Monmouth, Marauder, Now or Never, Pocatello, Prose, Prince Royal, Prodigal. Raceland, Sir Dixon, San Simeon (imp.), Taragon, Tennyson, Torchlight, White, Yum Yum.

The Brooklyn Handicap has also an exceedingly fine entry list, some of the very best horses in the land being included. The earlier spring event could hardly be expected to have as large a number of entries as the great Cone Island fixture; still there are enough to warrant the most successful race ever held on the Brooklyn track.

BROOKLYN HANDICAP ENTRIES.

For three-year-olds and upward, $100 each, half forfeit or $25 if declared, the club to add an amount necessary to make the gross value of the stakes $10,000, of which the second horse shall receive $2,000, and the third horse $1,000; weights to be announced February 1, and declarations to be made by February 20; one mile and a quarter.

Aged.—Exile, Richmond, Swift.

Six-Year-Olds.—The Bard, Eurus, Inspector B., Elkwood, Quito, Egmont, The Bourbon.

Five-Year-Olds.—Belvidere, Hanover, Kingston, Terra Cotta, Jacobin, Niagara, Drumstick, Longdale, Insolence, Donnybrook, Wary, Connemara.

Four-Year-Olds.—Eolo, Marauder, Now or Never, Larchmont, Sir Dixon, Bella B., Peg Woffington, Prince Royal, Raceland, George Oyster, Wheeler T., Monmouth, Specialty, Defaulter, Torchlight, Glen Echo, Gorgo, San Simeon, Barrister, Clay Stockton, Bendigo, Eleve, Gallifet, Tennyson, Juggler, Falcon, Pocatello.

Monsieur La Broue, I believe, was the first that ever writ of horse-manship in the French language: and the first French-man that ever writ in that art: His book is very tedious, many words for little matter, and his first book is absolutely all stolen out of Grison: and his second book from Signior Pignatel's Lessons; but La Broue, to seem wiser than he was, and to make up a book, divides a circle into so many parts, to bring a horse to a whole circle, that it confounds a horse more, and is harder for him, than to work him upon a whole circle at first: And for La Broue's third book of bits, there is no great matter in it. As for Pluvinel no doubt but he was a good horse-man, but his invention of the Three Pillars, of which his book pretends to be an absolute method, is no more than an absolute routine: and hath spoiled more horses than ever anything did; for horses are not made to the hand and to the heel at all with them: nor will they go from the usual place where they are ridden, nor well there neither.

But my book is stolen out of no book, nor any man's practise but my own, and is as true as it is new: and if any man do not like it, it is a great sign he understands it not; for there is no way for dressing horses like it. If it be not good, I am sure it is the best that hath been writ yet. What will be writ hereafter I know not.

I must tell you that the Italian writers are tedious, and write more of marks, colours, temperatures, elements, moons, stars, winds, and bleedings, than of the art of riding; only to make up a book, though they wanted horse-manship.

There was one Signior Hannibal, a Neapolitan that came into England and served the Lord Walden.

Monsieur St. Anthoine, a Frenchman, was a very good horse-man, and sent over by Henry the Fourth of France, to teach Prince Henry: Monsieur La Coste was his page, and rid excellently well, especially leaping horses.

Monsieur Boycler rid under him too, and was an excellent horse-man; Monsieur Founteney, which was either his nephew or his natural son; for he gave him all when he died, was also a very good horse-man, but none of these ever writ anything of horse-manship.

And the best horse-man that ever I knew, is one of my own breeding, and rides by my method, which is Captain Mazine now Equerry to the King.

CORRESPONDENCE.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—I have been asked the breeding and age of the young colt that I bought lately for the Cook Stock Farm.

Prince Red, brown colt, small star, left hind foot white, foaled May 13, 1888; sired by Red Wilkes 1749; sire of Prince Wilkes, 2:14¾; Phil Thompson, 2:16¼; Wayne Wilkes, 2:18¼; Hinda Wilkes 2:20½; Repetition, three-year-old, 2:21, third heat, and fourteen others better than 2:30.

First dam, Mollie Stout, sister to Lady Stout, the first three-year-old to get a record of 2:29; by Mambrino Patchen, 58, sire of London, 2:20½; Katie Middleton, 2:23; Mambrino-Kate, 2:24, and twenty-five others better than 2:30, and sire of the dams of Guy Wilkes, 2:15¼; Baron Wilkes, 2:18; Astral, 2:18; Rosa Wilkes, 2:18¼; Elvira, 2:18½; Cleora, 2:18¾; Houri, 2:19¼, at three years old.

Second dam, Puss Prall, dam of Lady Stout, 2:29, and Mambrino Time, sire of Four Corners, 2:27½; Emmett, 2:29½, and the dams, Silverone, 2:19¾, Linnie, three-year-old, 2:25. Puss Prall, also the dam Jeb Stuart, sire of Kitty Patchen, record 2:21; by Mark Time, a son of Berthune, sire of Waxey, sire of Grafton, 2:22¼.

Third dam, Cora, by Daniel Webster, son of Lance, by American Eclipse, the sire of Gano, sire of the dams of Mambrino Patchen, Lady Thorne, 218¼, Kentucky Clay, sire of the dams of Atlantic, 2:21, Amy King, 2:22¼, Angelina, 2:28¼. Also the dam of Sultan (1513) 2:24, to decide a wager. The dam of Sultan, record 2:24, is Sultana. Sultana, sired by Delmonico (110), sire of Darby, 2:16½.

First dam, Celeste, by Mambrino Chief (11), sire of Lady Thorne, 2:18¼, and dams of Director, 2:17, Piedmont, 2:17¼, Voltaire, 2:20¼, Indianapolis, 2:21.

First dam, Harvey Adams' mare, by Hambletonian, (10).

Yours,

Judging Stallions and Colts.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—The BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN's suggestion that a "stallion and colt" show be inaugurated at Sacramento or Oakland, it seems to me has nothing novel about it, except that feature which requires each exhibitor to pay $250 for the privilege of making his entry; or, in other words, requiring him to bet $250 against the aggregate of other exhibitors' entrance money, that he has the "best stallion and—colts." It is doubtful in my mind if, outside of Palo Alto, San Mateo, Pleasanton and Sunny Slope studs, there would be any entries, unless the editor of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN should prove courageous enough to enter Antevolo's offspring of 1886, '87 and '88 against the older and more developed cracks of the farms named.

Such an exhibition as is proposed, or any other, for that matter, can never be made a success whilst our fair managers depend on "picked up" judges. No man who has heretofore gone around the circuit with his stock, would, in addition to risking the reputation of his stock, also wager his money on the dictum of three friends or acquaintances, that one or two of the directors might happen to grab as they passed through the main entrance to the grounds an hour or two before the several stallions and their colts were brought into the ring. One of the "sights" at the State Fair, for instance, is on Wednesday and Thursday mornings of the second week. Bright and early, and just inside the main entrance, you will find Carr hobnobbing with Cox, Chase with Hancock, Green with Singletary, and woe betide the acquaintance credited with knowing something about a horse, a cow or a pig! The more directors he knows, the worse off he is; Chase and Hancock want him on standard trotters, Green and Singletary must have him on draft horses until Carr steps up, gets him by the lapel, and whispers in his ear that he has had him and two other gentlemen fixed for judges on cows, and it won't take them any time or bother at all; and off that man goes. Just about this time up steps President Shippee to Cox with instructions to reserve that man for our sweepstakes committee on Poland Chinas; adding, "Say, Cox, be careful that Chase does not get him on Silver Spangled Hamburgs, he knows something about chickens, too!" It's a pretty kettle of fished up judges that exhibitors must submit their stock to at the State and local fairs! To require them to bet on the judgment of these hap-hazard appointees beats bucking at faro!

The State Fair officials last year did provide that horses and cattle should be judged by a standard scale of points, but when required by an exhibitor to live up to their own rules and regulations, they refused point blank to do so, on the grounds that they could not find any such scale, notwithstanding the fact that the year previous such a scale was used by their judges. When the exhibitor entered his protest before the Board as an entirety, he was asked if "provided that the judgment of the committee on awards was set aside, and a new committee was appointed to pass upon the stock, whether he would waive that rule of theirs which called for judgment by the scale of points;" he declined to acquiesce. The majority of the Board then decided that as the exhibitor declined to acquiesce to their request, they would let the first judgment stand. In other words, their action and language to the exhibitor was practically this: "We are wrong, but unless you will let us have our way, we shall not right that wrong." The exhibitor preferred to hold them to the rules and be wronged, rather than waive them and take the chances of being wronged a second time.

Would any man after this experience wish to bet $250 that he had the best stallion and five colts, and allow this majority of the Board of Directors of the State Fair to make the rules, appoint the awarding committee, and then ignore those rules and conditions under which exhibitors came there?

There is one other point the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN proposition requires for which I can see no valid reason; viz., the exhibition of the sire.

If a stallion has a "breeding" value, his colts will prove it. If we are judging "puddings" we seek for the proof in their eating qualities; we don't call for raw samples of the flour or raisins, nor a sight of the stove or of the cook! It is the proof pudding we are after! Electioneer is past his "show" age; he has no record—his pedigree is nothing wonderful—but his colts are the proofs that any sire might envy!

Geo. Wilkes is said to have been a pony built horse, yet Red Wilkes, his illustrious son, is described (or has been lately) as a large, coarse horse, whilst Guy Wilkes (2:15¼), another son, has a great chest and shoulder formation, which, a few years back, would have been pronounced incompatible with extreme speed. He also is a large horse, and I understand most of Geo. Wilkes' sons are above the average sized trotter. Now should the "ponyism" of the sire be taken into consideration in deciding the merits of the "family?"

No breeder, satisfied, of course, that the family was sound, and provided he could see and test the quality of five colts, would give near as much to see the sire as he would the dams of those colts. Five well-formed, sound and speedy colts necessarily bring credit upon the sire. If, however, they are out of speedy, well-bred mares, so much of the credit is detracted from the sire; if out of ordinary mares of unknown or commonplace breeding, so much greater is his credit. Then why not show the dams, as well as, or instead of, the sires? It would add but little to Electioneer's credit to produce trotters from such dams as Alma Mater, Emeline, Waterwitch, etc., etc., but who can deny his wonderful potency when throwing 2:30 trotters from such mares as Dame Winnie, Mamie C.; Lizzie Whips, etc., etc.?

It seems to your correspondent, therefore, (1) that beyond a certificate to prove that the sire has no ailment or constitutional disease that may be transmitted to his progeny, nothing further need be asked of the sire; (2) that if such contests as proposed are to be inaugurated, the manner of appointing judges should be left to the exhibitors, or at least taken out of the hands of the fair managers; and (3) that it be imperative that a scale of points (such as Wallace's, for instance) be used in determining the relative merits of the colts, whoever be the judges; (4) that if the judges are to be appointed by the fair managers, they should be selected and their names be published several weeks before any entries are made, so that intending exhibitors may use their discretion as to the said judges' integrity and competency before submitting their stock to and risking their money on their judgment.

Arranging the Circuit.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—It is a good omen for the trotting horse breeding interest and the lovers of the sport which calls forth the best efforts of that noble brute, the horse, that it is no longer possible to hold a circuit of fairs and race meetings in this State without having a clashing of dates. The State is rapidly growing in population and wealth, and 'tis evident that the interest in the trotting and running horse is not lagging far behind. As the counties fill up, and its villages become towns, each aspires to hold a fair and to boast of a regulation mile track; it will not be long before instead of one, we shall be obliged to have three or four circuits.

Our friend, Mr. L. J. Rose, is already objecting to the slighting of Los Angeles in the circuit, San Jose asks to have its place changed in the rotation, and 'twill not be long before Woodland yells for admission.

How are we all to be accommodated? Mr. Rose suggests that President Shippee call a meeting of all parties interested. This might prove an excellent plan, provided President Shippee pledged the State Fair to prove as obliging and mindful of the interests of the district associations as the law requires the district associations to be of those of the State Fair. For the State Fair to set its dates beyond recall before the meeting be called, and then expect the numerous district and county meetings to "fall in" as they list, or best may, is simply to render the purposes of the meeting futile. (If Mr. Rose will recall the spirit and the outcome of a similar meeting last year, when the State Fair crowded its dates into the first week of September, I think he will admit the point to be well taken.)

As a step towards arriving at a satisfactory conclusion, and taking it for granted that there are many horses from the Bay section that will not, under any circumstances, or for any-sized purses, go to San Diego and Los Angeles, and that the reverse proposition will apply to nearly as many horses coming from Los Angeles and San Diego to the Bay, I would suggest that the county and district associations proceed to organize themselves into three circuits: 1st, the Southern, comprising San Diego, Los Angeles, Fresno, Stockton, etc.; 2nd., The Bay, or Central, comprising Monterey, Santa Clara, Oakland, Petaluma, Santa Rosa, Napa, Yola, etc., and 3rd., the Northern, taking the towns and counties north and west of Sacaamento. Let each of these circuits arrange its dates without regard to the dates of meetings outside of its own circuit, but so timed that the last meeting of each circuit shall terminate on the same week, and in the vicinity of Sacramento, where the best horses and live stock of all three circuits can then meet to close the "Fair season" in a grand series of contests under the auspices of the State Fair. This would give us one series of meetings held at San Diego, Los Angeles, Fresno, Stockton, etc.; a second series at Salinas, San Jose, Oakland, Petaluma, Santa Rosa and Napa, and a third in the neighborhoods of Grass Valley, Chico, Marysville, etc., all of them terminating in time for the meeting at Sacramento.

It seems impracticable to arrive at any other satisfactory arrangement, and even this will be impossible unless the State Fair management acquiesces, and sets its dates back two or three weeks, say, to the last week in September, or the first week in October. The bringing together of the horses from these different circuits at Sacramento, would undoubtedly magnify the interest and importance of that meeting, and increase the already enormous profits of that institution two or three fold.

As soon as the fair season closed it is more than probable that a series of colt stakes and of contests between the newly classed horses could be gotten up and given at San Francisco, Oakland, Petaluma and Napa, to close the trotting season.

The arrangement herein proposed will, I admit, not suit some of our Los Angeles friends for either this or p ssibly the next year, they, however, will admit that the "bay" circuit must guard its interests as closely as Mr. Rose is inclined to look after those of Los Angeles. It is the horsemen in this neighborhood who have made the meetings at Oakland, Petaluma, Santa Rosa, Napa and Santa Clara a success, and if all horsemen in the South were as enthusiastic and liberal patrons as Messrs. Rose and Shippee there is no doubt there would soon be a circuit from San Diego through the interior valleys to Stockton which would equal if not eclipse our Bay circuit in the attractions offered. If it be no longer practicable to please all by holding one circuit the sooner the gentlemen named and others proceed to build up the southern circuit by encouraging and patronizing its infant associations, the earlier will they be independent of a circuit so far distant as is that around the Bay. It is not likely, of course, that there will be much rivalry for a time as regards the fastest horses—the longest purse with the fewest strings to it knocks the persimmons every time; the wealth and liberality of the Los Angeles, Oakland and Petaluma Association gives them the call every time, but we can see no reason why Santa Clara and San Joaquin should not place themselves on the same footing; they have the wealth, why not add the liberality in one instance and cut off "the strings" in the second?

I had almost overlooked Mr. Rose's suggestion that the circuit commence at San Diego and end in this neighborhood, for the reason that their seasons were earlier. I would suggest that as the rains never amount to much in that favored district until late in the year, whilst they are apt to deluge us here at any time after October 15th, it would be wiser to commence in the Bay districts and work down to Fresno, Los Angeles and San Diego after the State Fair. This, of course, is offered in case it should be decided not to inaugurate the three circuit system for the present.—Respectfully,

A BREEDER.

Mud Horses at the Bay District Track.

A very small attendance gathered at the Bay District Track on Saturday last, January 12th, the sky at midday giving every indication that rain would surely fall. The signs were not at fault, for before the sport had fairly began, a heavy downfall set in, which dampened the ardor of the enthusiasts present, although they managed to crowd under the verandah and keep the pool sellers busy. The first race on the card was a five-eighths dash, for which there were originally six entries, but owing to the heavy going only three came to the post, Naicho B., Sleepy Dick and Applause being drawn. To a fairly good start the flag fell, Minnie B. showing in front first, although her two companions were well up. As they rounded into the home stretch, Barney G. came with a rush and led his field, the others being unable to overtake him. Barney G. was first under the wire, Minnie B. second, Welcome third.

SUMMARY.

First race—Five-eighths of a mile.

E. Flitner's b g Barney G., 5, by Billy W—Unknown, 110 lbs ..... Lee 1
George Richardson's b m Minnie B, 5, by Leinster—Unknown, 110 lbs. ..... Hazlitt 2

Auction pools—The first pools sold: Sleepy Dick $20, Minnie B. $6, the field $7. Sleepy Dick was drawn shortly before the race, and Minnie B. sold slightly favorite, Welcome second choice

The second event was three-quarter-mile heats, to which there were four entries. Minnie B. having worn herself out in the first race, was scratched, leaving three to face the starter. Kildare sold as a great favorite, bringing $40, to less than $20 for the others combined. Amid a heavy downpour of rain the horses got off with but little delay, Kildare taking a trifling lead and easily kept it under a pull, Oro second, Minnie R. third. The relative positions were never changed, Kildare winning easily in 1:22½.

The second heat was a repetition of the first, with the exception that Newell on Oro made a splendid finish, and was only beaten out by a nose. The spectators loudly clamored to have the race run over, many claiming Oro was not run to win. In justice to Jockey Newell it is only right to say that on his riding in the race probably depended his next season's engagement. A gentleman present had spoken to the lad as to terms, etc., the boy knew that his every action was being closely watched, and a magnificent finish was the result.

SUMMARY.

Second race—Three-quarter-mile heats, for all ages:

A match race, reputed to be for $500 a side, was next on the card, between the well known horse Jack Brady and a ch m named Lulu. The latter looks every inch a racer, but was either in no condition to run or purposely "fixed." The pool selling was all in favor of Brady, a small coterie of buyers not allowing a single pool to go to any outsider. Seventy to thirty-five seemed about the ruling odds, although even after the horses started a hundred to thirty-six was laid. When the word was given Brady jumped to the front, and before turning into the straight was anywhere from fifteen to twenty lengths to the good. He won as he pleased, the following being the

Grim's Gossip.

Mr. George H. Miller has been elected President of the Washington Park Association.

The Emporer of Germany has issued an edict that there shall be no more racing in Berlin on Sunday.

All of the crack two-year-olds of last year are entered in the Withers stake, with the exception of Salvator.

The Hon Caleb Dorsey, so it is reported, will sell off his racing stock early in the spring at public auction.

I want all readers of Grim's Gossip to constitute themselves reporters for this page. Send along all the horse news you have.

Green B. Morris will bring suit against the N. O. L. T. P. Railroad for the value of the two-year-old colt Vantrim, destroyed by an accident on that road.

"Snapper" Garrison has finally decided to ride for Mr. Belmont next season. His salary will be about the same as he received from Mr. Haggin last year.

Senator Hearst's Almont, Bryant's Come-to-Taw, Mr. Gratz's Blue Rock and Hankins' Galen, are the strong tips among racing men for the Kentucky Derby.

Tom Hazlitt has purchased the ch c Pawnbroker, by Leinster, dam by Wheatley. Tom will have a string of good ones in the stable by the time the spring racing begins.

When Mr. J. W. Knox takes Anteeo to Kentucky, he will also take for the Montana Stable, the two-year-old Polemus, by Red Boy—Lady Prewitt, she by King Alfonso.

NEXT.—The New York Spirit fathers a story about a filly two and a half months old that can trot at better than a 3:00 gait. She is owned by Judson H. Clark, of Elmira, N. Y.

Mr. Irwin Ayres has had about sixty of his horses and mares turned out to feed on the new volunteer crop which is growing in great profusion. The horses delight in the change and are all looking first class.

The mammoth annual sale of Rancho del Paso yearlings will take place in New York next June. They will comprise the get of Darebin, Sir Modred, Warwick, Joe Daniels, Milner, Hyder Ali, and other good sires.

There is some talk in Eastern sporting circles about a match race between the fillies Princess Bowling and The Lioness. If the match is consumated the stakes will be $5,000 a side, and the race will take place early in May.

The Button mare, dam of Alex Button, 2:26½, sire of Yolo Maid (pacer), 2:14, is still living and breeding. She is owned by the Widow Button, but has been farmed out for the past three seasons to Dr. Finlaw of Santa Rosa.

A well-posted horseman laid a small wager, a few evenings since at the Palace Hotel; anent the American Derby. His bet is that of the three first horses under the wire, that two of them would be Californian nominations.

Rumor hath it, that Mr. J. B. Haggin has, or will, enter horses for the English Derby. The gentleman himself is my authority for denying the report, and he further says he has no idea of taking any of his race horses across the Atlantic.

Budd Doble will not visit California this winter. The horses recently sent to Los Angeles by him will remain there until next spring, when Mr. Starr, in whose charge they are, will take them back to go through the summer campaign.

At Paisley, Lake Co., Ore., on Monday last, a race took place between Alvin Moss's Dutchman, John Partin's Nigger Boy and Wm. George's Foster. After a very exciting contest Foster won, with Nigger Boy a close second. The purse was $100.

Martin Bergen, than whom there is no better young jockey, has signed articles to ride for Capt. S. S. Brown. Bergen will have some of the best horses in the country to ride, and I predict he will become a first-class "jock." He will join the stable at Mobile on February 1st.

Mr. J. I. Case has sold the chestnut horse James G., foaled 1881, by Royal Chief, with a record of 2:20, to Mr. A. J. Feek, of Syracuse, N. Y., for $6,000. The purchase was made by parties residing at Frankfort, Germany, and he will be shipped at an early date.

Among the entries to the two thousand sweepstakes at Nashville for three-year-old horses, are Proctor Knott, Come to Taw, Heron, Long Fish, Waldo, Almera, Kasson, Keeveena, Vatican, Spectator, Monita Hardy, Boodler, Viking, Quarterdeck and Hollywood.

Among the horses that may be expected to be out early in February at New Orleans are: Climax, Cruiser, Banner Bearer, Brown Duke, Dyer, Col. Hunt, Everett, Blessing, Laura Stone, Monita Hardy, Allabrene, Erebus, Roi d'Or, Strideaway, Kermesse, Lottie Wall, Keeveena and a lot more of a similar class.

I will take it as a special favor to the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN if exchange fiends will give this paper credit for items culled from its columns. Several papers are in the habit of reprinting cuttings from the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN without the trouble being taken to even rewrite them.

Sam Bryant was asked a few days ago if he had received any more offers for Proctor Knott. "No I haven't," he said, "and I don't want any. I shan't sell him now at any price, and I'm going to take him East and run him and beat Haggin in every big race in the East."

Among Mr. Haggin's entries to the 1891 Futurity Stakes are Miss Woodford, the famous flier, in foal to Sir Modred; Explosion, the dam of the famous Dewdrop, in foal to Falsetto, who was also Dewdrop's sire, and Maud Hampton, dam of the forty-thousand dollar colt King Thomas, in foal to Mr. Belmont's stallion St. Blaise. Two mares are nominated in foal to Hidalgo, and two more to Ben Ali.

As the Los Angeles Turf Club have already announced their spring meeting for April 8th to 13th inclusive, and the Fresno Fair Ground Association claim from April 23d to 27th inclusive, the question arises, what dates will the Pacific Coast Blood Horse Association have for their spring events?

The owners of Stamboul and Patron are trying to arrange for a match race in addition to the great free for all stallion race, which is now being talked about so much in the East. Stamboul will be in Orrin A. Hickok's stable which will contain some of the very best trotters and pacers ever sent from California.

The three-old-year filly Viente formerly belonging to the Baldwin stable, has been running at Clifton under the name of "No More." Her present owners were not aware of the necessity of fully establishing the identity of the filly and came very near getting themselves into trouble through their carelessness.

W. B. Allen, who lately purchased Miss Majolica from Mr. Robert Bonner, will have the mare trained this year and try to lower her record. She has shown a trial in 2:22¾, but it is supposed she can do much better.

Four of the Littlefield boys were seated around the dinner table at Monmouth Park the other day when Charlie said: "I hear that Jimmy McLaughlin weighs 145 pounds now." "Well, if that is so," said Fred, "I wouldn't be in his shoes in the spring for $1,000.

During last year the Monmouth Park Jockey Club paid out to horse owners $380,323, this sum having been won in the 172 races run over the Monmouth Park track during the months of July and August. Of this amount the club gave in added money to stakes and purses $210,850.

There are already evidences of Electioneer's prepotency in the third generation. Two yearling great-grandsons of his trotted quarters last fall in Petaluma under forty-five seconds; each of them was sired by half-brothers, sons of Elector, 2:21¼ out of differently bred dams. Mr. J. H. White is the fortunate owner of both sires, dams and colts.

The owners of Anteeo have been offered $20,000 for him by a Kentucky party. The association have made all the necessary arrangements to have him stand in the stud at Lexington, Ky., this season, and so have refused the offer. Last season the income from his services amounted to the large sum of $10,350, which is more than his present owners paid for him.

Mr. A. J. Alexander has bought for service at Woodburn, from the estate of the late R. B. Conklin, the brown stallion King Wilkes, by George Wilkes, dam Missie, by Brignoli. King Wilkes has a record of 2:22¼ and is the sire of Oliver K., with a record of 2:16¼. He has been on lease at Woodburn for some time.

Fresno, Mr. J. B. Haggin's colt, is having a deal of attention paid him by the Eastern turfmen. Black and Blue, in the Mail and Express, says that Fresno is superior to either the Favordale colt or French Park. I am inclined to the belief that Salvator will prove the king bee of the stable, as he is of the sort that "train on." Fresno does not like a heavy track and is partial to light weight. He was a disappointing colt, even to his own stable last year.

At the annual meeting of the Agricultural Park Association, held recently at Santa Rosa, the following gentlemen were elected officers for the ensuing year: I. DeTurk, president; S. I. Allen, vice-president; George A. Tupper, secretary; L. W. Burris, treasurer; Directors, I. DeTurk, B. M. Spencer, John Bailhache, Guy E. Grosse, S. I. Allen, J. H. Laughlin, Julius Ort; Auditing and Finance Committee, B. M. Spencer, Guy E. Grosse, S. I. Allen.

I understand that Mr. A. L. Whitney's stallion, Dawn, 2:19½, will not be in the stud this season. He will be kept in good fettle through the winter, prepared next spring and summer, and, barring accidents, will be sent for a watch breaking record in the fall. With a couple of years added to his age since last he was started, it is quite probable he will prove a better "rater" than then, and meet with but little difficulty in shaving the stallion record very closely.

Peep-o'-Day, the promising son of Dawn, 2:19½, now in Owen Hickok's stable, out of a mare by a horse called Mountain Boy, which was brought to Ukiah by a man named Slater, and was there traded for mares to J. F. Todd, about the year 1867. We have made inquiries before about the breeding of this Mountain Boy, and the whereabouts of Slater, but received no replies. Perhaps Jno. W. Mackey, or some other old Sonoma county or Mendocino horseman can throw some light on the subject, which would gratify the owners, Messrs. Hickok and Page.

While I have given in another column the entries to the Brooklyn Handicap and Suburban, just think of the rattling three-year-olds still eligible to the American Derby. Among them are Proctor Knott, Galen, French Park, Salvator, Fresno, Spokane, Sorrento, Caliente, Gladiator, Come-to-Taw, Liberty, Heron, Monsoon, Wahsatch, Winfield, Once Again, The Lioness, Lady Hemphill, Kasson, the Czar, Don Jose, Picnic, Wheel of Fortune, Bootmaker and Volunteer. Out of so many good ones, it is certain a field of three-year-olds will come to the post that will make the race a memorable one for years to come. In all there are 147 entries.

Mr. G. Valensin his purchased of Wilfred Page of Penn's Grove, his yearling filly by Sidney, 2:19¾, out of a mare by Curtis' Hambletonian. If there be anything in breeding this filly should prove a prize. Sidney seems to get fast ones out of anything and everything, but here is a filly whose dam's sire, although living to the age of only nine years, placed four in the 2:30 list, and among these Hambletonian Mambrino, 2:21¼ who sired Wild Rake, record at three years of age 2:22¾. Curtis' Hambletonian's full brother Milwaukee has already sired Adelaide, 2:18, and two others in the 2:30 list. The dam of these two speed-producing brothers was Dolly Martin (dam of Volnoy, 2:23 and Romeo, 2:29½) by Defiance.

The Sonoma and Marin Agricultural District boasts among other stallions, of Anteeo 2:16¼, by Electioneer; Dawn, 2:19½, by Nutwood; Mortimer 2:27(4 yrs old), by Electioneer; Daly by Gen. Benton; Jackson Temple (sire of Emma Temple 2:28½), by Brown's Volunteer; Rustic, 2:30 (sire of Nighttime 2:29½); Whipple's Hambletonian; Eclectic by Electioneer out of a sister to Woodnut, 2:16½, and Manin 2:21; Marco by Elector, 2:21½; Secretary by Director, 2:17, dam by Goldsmith's Volunteer; A. P. by Alexander, 2:31½; Redwood, 2:31, by Anteeo, 2:16¼; Alfred G, 2:31, by Anteeo, 2:16¼, and a son of Fallis, 2:23, dam Stockton Maid (dam of Old Mik, 2:23). There would seem to be but little room for "cross road" stallions in that flourishing district.

M. F. Tarpey is the fortunate possessor of the well known racing mare Notidle, but somehow or another, the owner seems to act as a "hoodoo" to the game and fleety daughter of Wildidle, for although she has won many races, Mr Tarpey has never seen her come under the wire first. Whenever he is present she invariable loses, and when he is not at the track she just as surely wins.

Some horse owners do not seem to understand what the new weights are, many of them contending that two-year-olds must only carry 118 lbs. The proper weights are as follows: two-year-olds 119 pounds, fillies 116 pounds, on three-year-olds 122 pounds, fillies, before Sept. 1, 117 pounds; after that date 119 pounds, with no allowance for geldings. The weights on four-year-olds will be the same as on three-year-olds in races exclusively for three-year-olds, 122 pounds, with five pounds allowance for mares and fillies up to Sept. 1; after that date three pounds allowance. There is a corresponding increase of weights throughout the entire list.

A friend writing from Sacramento says: "I am surprised that you have not mentioned the Sale of Fallis, 2:23, by Electioneer, to the Woodburn Farm, Ky. Mr. F. P. Lowell of Sacramento sent the stallion East on December 15th. The reported price is $15,000. In the same car Mr. W. F. Smith also sent his br f Albina De Mer, by Stamboul, dam Belle Blanche by The Moor. Woodburn Farm has already advertised the stallion's services at $150." I am surprised that the interested parties did not notify me immediately on the sale being consummated. I cannot collect all the gossip there is in the State, but can compile it if my readers will only send in the news. Hereafter I shall look to my friend for Sacramento items.

To the President, Board of Directors and Members of the American Trotting Association:

GENTLEMEN: I beg leave to report the following balances to the credit of The American Trotting Association January 1, 1889, viz.:

General fund	$2,069 50
Trust fund	513 25
Total	$2,582 75

Respectfully,

MORRIS L. WILLIAMS, Treasurer.

DETROIT, Mich., January 1, 1889.

From the foregoing it will be seen that "The American Trotting Association is in a sound financial condition; that notwithstanding its very low fee for annual dues it has paid all expenses, paid off $2,500 00 of its $5,000.00 indebtedness (Guarantee Fund), and has to its credit a sufficient sum to carry on the business until the revenues of 1889 are received, which will undoubtedly be sufficient to wipe out the existing indebtedness of $2,500.00 (Guarantee Fund), pay all running expenses, and leave a satisfactory balance to the credit of the Association.

The $10,055.12 to the credit of the Trust Fund has all been paid out except $513.25 pending litigation, and the report shows the names to which the balance stands credited.

The list of 318 members shows the growth and strength of the association, which it is believed will be a source of satisfaction to its members and friends, as it is to its officers.

Very respectfully,

J. H. STEINER, Secretary.

Kentucky Trotting Stock Going East.

W. H. Wilson, Abdallah Park, Cynthiana, Ky., has sold, and shipped on Jan. 4th to Col. H. S. Russell, Home Farm, Milton, Mass., the following choice collection of brood mares:

Gurgle, b m foaled 1873, pacing record 2:20, by Pocahontas Boy, dam Matlock, by Benton's Diomed; in foal to Simmons, record 2:28.

Kate, ch m foaled 1874, (dam of the great pacer Budd Doble, record, 2:19¼), by Stocking Chief, dam by Cavan's Davy Crockett; in foal to Sultan, 2:24.

Lady Bryan, b m foaled 1879, (dam of Gossiper, 2:29½, trial 2:22½), by Smuggler, 2:15¼, dam Mary B., by Snake, son of Membrino Patchen; in foal to Simmons, sire of Gossiper.

Smuggler Girl, b m foaled 1881, by Smuggler, record 2:15¼, first dam Madam Powell, (dam of Monroe Chief, record 2:18½), by Bay Chief, son of Membrino Chief; in foal to Sultan, record 2:24.

A Talk With E. J. Baldwin.

"Well Grim, what is it you want to know?"

Mr. Baldwin was in a talkative mood and I determined to draw him out on a point, which had been mentioned in many conversations with owners and trainers last year while I was following the eastern circuit. On the tracks of the four large associations, "Western men" is the term used when talking of all owners who come west of the Allegany Mountians, and there seemed to be a feeling among the Westerners that the handicaping was not as advantageous to them as it was to Eastern owners.

"Mr. Baldwin tell me what you think of the Eastern handicapers."

Think of them! Well, I will tell you, they have a bias in favor of the East as against the West, and we are done an injustice in weights. I do not mean to say that they rob us intentionally, but there is a sectional feeling among all of them that causes a pound or two to go on our horses while the Eastern ones are correspondingly favored. The way the business is now run it is almost impossible to win with a first-class horse, for the weight is shoved on so heavy that the good horse is likely to break down, while the scrub that is running against us is all right at the end of a season. Take Volante, for instance: Weight after weight was added to him until he broke down, and in a day I lost the services of an animal such as I had tried for years to secure. Look at Firenzi; in the last handicap at Jerome Park she had to carry 131 lbs., while Raceland, the winner, only had on 110 lbs., yet he had stamped himself a horse of high order during the season, and should have had on much more weight. I consider that weight breaks a horse down quicker than anything else, and the Turf Congress has lately passed a law which is enough to make all thinking men leave racing to those who do not understand it. For the benefit of three or four jockeys my horses will have to carry an extra weight, and that extra weight is liable to cause an accident to any of the two-year-olds, that under lighter weights might not happen. I see Firenzi is entered in the suburban; she will have to pack a monstrous load, and I sincerely trust Mr. Haggin will not start her. The various associations have banded together for mutual interests, and the bookmakers have done likewise; now I think it is high time that the horse owners should form a protective society, to further their own interests. At every meeting there should be two or more open stakes or purses, horses only to carry weight for age, with neither penalties or allowances, then you would find the cracks of the year contending against one another, and it could be easily determined which was the best horse of the season. The handicaping as at present arranged is a failure, and needs revision badly.

"What horses will you take East this year, Mr. Baldwin?"

"I have Los Angelos, and will take the pick of sixteen or seventeen youngsters. My stable will be very small this season, as I have determined to cut down expenses. My books show that I made $35,000 last year, yet I had to give my jockeys and trainer $19,000, which is out of all proportion. $11,000 went for bonus's, in addition to $25 for winning mounts, and $10 for losing ones. My trainer got $4000, making, as I said before, over one-half of the stable earnings. I should have won much more than I did if it had not been for the drunkenness of the trainer. This season I shall have Campbell to look after the horses, and am now breaking in a jockey who promises to be as good as any of them. His name is West, a brother of the jockey who was killed last year. I will stick to the Western tracks until the Saratoga meeting opens, as there is more of a chance to win money at St. Louis, Louisville, Chicago, etc., than there is in and around New York."

"Will the Emperor of Norfolk ever run again?"

"I am in hopes he will. I see that Thomas says he will never start again, but the veterinary surgeons who have examined him say that his legs are all right, and that all he needs is rest. He will not be trained this year. I will have four or five of my best mares bred to him, probably Grisette and Estrella among them."

"What do you think of Proctor Knott's chances?"

"I do not imagine that Mr. Bryant's horse will have everything his own way; Salvator is a good one, and Galen must not be sneezed at. Proctor Knott may not train up to his old form this year, and even if he does I fancy there will be four or five that may down him."

A Chat With Hamilton.

Tony Hamilton, the colored jockey who has signed with Senator Hearst as chief jockey for next year, was in St. Louis last week stopping with Henry Bridgewater. A representative of the Globe-Democrat had an interesting conversation with him:

"Whom do you consider the best jockey in America?" he was asked.

"Well, I think Isaac Murphy is the king of all of them. He is a wonderful judge of pace and is always good at the finish. McLaughlin is another great jockey, and his pluck is proverbial. He has to almost work himself to death to get down to weight."

"The boys, I suppose, will be glad to hear that the weights are to be revised?"

"It will be a God-send to us. I have been so weak at times reducing that I could scarcely stand. I have gone hungry for days in order to come to weight, and I have turned away from the table, almost sick at the sight of the good things which I couldn't touch. In reducing I walk with sweaters on sometimes as much as ten miles a day, and all this, too on an empty stomach. We earn our salaries, sir," said the miniature knight of the pig skin, with a shake of the head.

"You rode Salvator in the Futurity. Do you think him a better colt than Proctor Knott?"

"I do most emphatically. I never saw a horse want to quit as badly in my life as did the Futurity winner. Barnes had me hemmed in right against the rails on the extreme outside, and I had no chance to work at all. If I had been on the inside I would have won by half a length. As it was, however, while I complain, I did not have the best horse in the race. Galen was the best horse that day, and had Turner used him right he could not have lost. You mark what I tell you. Proctor Knott will find three three-year-olds next year who will give him a beating. They are Galen, the Faverdale colt of Mr. Withers, and Salvator. The Futurity winner cannot stand the rough handling he will receive in a bruising race. He tried to cut it in the Futurity, and will stop next year when hard pressed over a distance of ground. I look for the Faverdale colt to be a great one next year. He was about the unluckiest horse of the year. He was last away in a number of races, but was generally heard from before the wire was reached. I think well of Diablo and Reporter. The former was, I think, the gamest two-year-old out last year, and he will prove a hard horse to beat this year. Reporter was the hardest worked two-year-old in the country and proved himself to be a good one in all kinds of company."

"What do you consider the best horse of the year?"

"Firenzi was, I think, the best of them. At weight for age, with sex allowances, I think she can always defeat the Bard. Not that the latter is not a grand race horse. I think he is a grand racer, but Firenzi is a mare as good as any I ever saw."

A Chat With the Owner of Galen.

George Hankins, owner of the Chicago stables, believes the West compares favorably with the East from a racing standpoint. "There are but three events in the East that are worth going after," said he to a reporter of the Republic.

"How many of your three-year-olds will you prepare for the American Derby?" was asked.

"Three—Galen, Girondes and Heron. I shall have them in shape for the Kentucky Derby also."

"Which do you think will be your most formidable competitor in the American Derby?"

"What do you think of Salvator's chances?"

"He is too small an animal to make a great three-year-old, although he may turn out to be a stayer. In my opinion Fresno will beat him."

"Which part of the country will present the most attractions to horsemen this season, the East or the West?"

"The West by all means, and that is the reason I have made up my mind to remain and do my racing here, starting in at Memphis. In my opinion the season will be a particularly brilliant one in the West."

"Which representative of your stable will do the long-distance running?"

"Huntress, I should judge. I think from her performances in the past she is the best fitted."

"When do you expect McLaughlin?"

"About the 15th of the present month. He will remain in Chicago about three weeks and then go to Memphis."

Their Records Broken.

There was quite a sprinkling of horsemen at the Agricultural Park on Friday, January 11th, says the Los Angeles Tribune, and they were well repaid for their visit. The first event on the programme was the pacing match for $250 a side between the celebrated pacing fillies Irma and Ella Wood. "Knapp" McCarthy drove Irma, and Charley Durfee handled the reins for his pacer—a full sister to the great Arrow.

Irma, by the way, has never before competed in a race. All her records have been made against time, and everyone was a little anxious to know how she would perform in a race. Irma arrived in Los Angeles last November from Kentucky, almost reduced to a skeleton. She got the distemper on the road, so that Messrs. "Knap" McCarthy and Hennessy had to stay up all one night in order to save her life, and the animal after arriving here was not fit to be taken out of a jog until the beginning of December, and yet she was driven for a record on December 10th and made the mile in 2:20, going the last quarter strong in 33 seconds. On the same day that Bell Boy lowered his record Irma was to have gone for a record, but the heavy downpour of rain prevented an attempt being made. The owner then waited for a fair day and track before the end of the year, but was disappointed, as the rain invariably came down before the track had thoroughly dried. Irma does not look much like a pacer. She is 16 hands high, and a most symmetrical looking filly, resembling the highest type of the thoroughbred, with as fine a head and neck as one would wish to see, and her easy, graceful style of going is a pleasure to look at. The match was the best two heats out of three. Irma won two straight heats in 2:18¼. She led all the way in the first heat, and won with plenty to spare. The last heat was a remarkable one, to say the least, Ella Wood led till she broke at the back stretch, but just before reaching the three-quarter pole Irma made a most disastrous break, and Ella Wood turned into the straight with a clear lead of eight lengths. Everyone thought that Ella Wood would win, but Irma came up at a tremendous gait and fairly electrified the spectators by her wonderful burst of speed, and passed under the wire winner by half a dozen lengths in 2:18½. Several outside watches made it 2:18. But for the unfortunate break Irma would certainly have lowered her record still two seconds. Ella Wood showed that she is capable of beating 2:20, and considering that Durfee has only handled the mare for a short period she is sure to make a good mark this season. Irma will be kept in California and bred to a couple or California stallions, after which Doctor Schwarz intends, bar accidents, that she shall be driven against the pacing record of the world. Knap McCarthy never used a whip on the animal in the race. A horse comes to Los Angeles almost dead with lung fever, yet inside of two months the horse rounds to so well with this glorious climate of ours that she is able to lower her record six seconds. This speaks volumes for this part of the world as a winter stamping ground for valuable race horses, pacers and trotters.

The special trot for $200 a side between Nehusta, a four-year-old bay filly, and Knap McCarthy's recent purchase, Cora Van Tassel, resulted in a win for Mr. Rose's animal, who lowered her record from 2:37½ to 2:30. The time for each heat was 2:34½, 2:30, and 2:30¾. Knap McCarthey drove Tassel, and Maben, Nehusta.

The record breakers din not end here, for Albion in the special match for $200 beat Harry Velox three straight heats in 2:27, 2:30, and 2:26½.

The Chino ranch bay stallion Albion is by Electioneer, and the writer is strongly of the opinion that he will go a mile before the end of the season in at least four or five seconds better than his record of 2:26½.

SUMMARIES.

At a meeting of the Third District Agricultural Association on Saturday last, it was resolved to hold the fair and races in the week beginning August 26th. The first day's races will be held on Tuesday the 27th, and continue to Saturday inclusive.

Lexington.

We cut from the New York World "Krik's" article on the greatest of all native-bred horses which have "tramped the American turf;" more properly one of the very best racehorses, and as a progenitor superior to all. His opportunities were, perhaps, better than were awarded his predecessors or contemporaries, but after making all the allowances possible for the minor chance of others (when compared with Lexington) he must be given the foremost place as the progenitor of high class racehorses. But that point has been so generally conceded, that there is little necessity for repetition, though it is not so generally known that his blood figures in some of the fastest trotters of the day, and with quite a number which have shown a fair rate of trotting speed. Jay-Eye-See (2:10) and Sunol (two-year-old, 2:18) are from granddaughters, and so is Noontide (2:20¼) while Ansel (2:20) is from a daughter. Maggie F. (2:26) was by Newry, a son of Lexington, and Monarch (2:28¼), also a son. Bland Temple is a daughter, and she is the dam of Nora Temple (2:27¼) and Temple (2:30). The grandam of Voucher (2:22) was by Norfolk, and Captain Jenks (2:30¼) was a son of Norfolk, and ran with fair success before he was broken to harness.

Mr. Crickmore is in error, we think, in naming the son of Woodpecker and the Sarpedon mare Kentucky Prince. We never heard him so named, and in the account of the races in the Old Spirit, Prince has no prefix. There is a singular circumstance connected with these two ten-mile races between Prince and Hero. The first, in which Hero gave up after going six miles, has a report and the time of each mile, the 7th, 8th and 9th being jogged in 5:08½; 6:16; 6:19; when to win wagers Prince was driven the 10th mile in 2:39. The aggregate time, as published in the Spirit, is 35:18, whereas "Krik" gives 36:18, which is the correct addition. As the first five miles were made in 13:09½, had Hero been capable of pushing Prince to his best, he might have made a mark which would yet stand as the best on record for the distance. In the second race there is only a summary, and though the time was very fast (28:08½), the first five miles was 59 seconds slower than in the preceding race.

There is another correction required, that being the price Mr. Alexander paid for Lexington. In addition to $15,000 cash, he agreed to give the services of Lexington to four mares annually, and this was afterwards compromised by Mr. Alexander paying Mr. Ten Broeck several thousand dollars to cancel the privilege. The article will be of so much interest to our readers that we copy it entire.

There is an error in the pedigree given, as Rowena was by Sumpter, a son of Sir Archy.

Among the many horses famous in England none has greater fame than Stockwell, which by reason of the success of his sons and daughters on the turf and in the paddock is honored with the title "Emperor of Stallions." To many Americans, Lexington is the greatest horse ever bred in this country, not only by reason of his performance when in training, but as the sire of hundreds of good horses and mares, especially the latter. When racing was re-established almost immediately after the war, the "cracks" of the day were nearly all by Lexington. In due time they naturally began to disappear and then Lexington's sons and Lexington's daughters began to show as sires and dams. The latter had the call, and when mated with such foreign sires as Leamington, Australian, Phaeton, Billet and others, the produce was such that the American thoroughbred became world-famous.

Lexington was a son of the famous Boston, out of the bay mare Alice Carneal, who was the daughter of imported Sarpedon and Rowena. The latter was by Sir Archy, by Diomed, making three crosses from the first Derby winner, two of which were through his sire Boston. The dam of Rowena was Lady Grey, she by Robin Grey, while Serpedon was a son of Emilius, out of Icaria, one of the stanchest families in the English Stud Book, and had a strain of blood that in later years became better known through imported Australian.

Alice Carneal was owned by Dr. E. Warfield and is described by Dr. B. G. Bruce in his "Memoir of Lexington," as a mare of particular high and nervous temperament, who, at home, was superior to any horse that Dr. Warfield ever bred, but when drawn for a race would sweat freely, tremble, purge and become so nervous and excited as to be totally unfitted for a race. Alice Carneal did not run until five years old, and then only four times, winning once, and was second once. The race won was at two-mile heats, run at Georgetown, Ky., for a purse of $200. It had nine starters. Alice was sixth in the first two heats, and winner of the third and fourth in 3:58, 3:58, the first and second having been run in 3:49 and 3:52. At six years Alice Carneal started twice, and at seven years once, but she was never again a winner. She was sent to the stud in 1844 and was bred to Boston in 1849, the produce of which was a bay colt, that was first called Darley, and under that name ran on May 22, 1853, in the Association Stakes for three-year-olds at mile heats, colts carrying 86 and fillies 83 pounds. Twelve started over a track knee-deep in mud, in which Darley, Garrett Davis, and Madonna ran away two miles and three-quarters before they could be pulled up. In five minutes they were ordered to the post, excepting Garrett Davis, who was withdrawn. At the tap of the drum Darley took the lead, winning the heat in 1:55½, with seven horses distanced. Darley also won the second heat in 1:57, with John Harper's Wild Irishman (by Glencoe) second in both heats. At the same meeting (May 27th,) Darley won the Citizen's Stake at two-mile heats, winning the second and third heats in 3:41½ and 3:49. John Harper's Midway winning the first heat in 3:42½. It is not at all surprising that Lexington could run in the mud.

The day after Darley won the Citizens' Stake Mr. Richard Ten Broeck and Capt. Willa Viley bought Darley, and immediately changed his name to Lexington. The terms were $2,500 cash and $2,500 more if he won the then proposed Great State Stake at New Orleans. Mr. Ten Broeck was not a stranger in Kentucky. He had been racing for many years, having taken some American horses over to Havana in 1843, where he won several races. Mr. Ten Broeck was born in New York, and had been appointed to West Point about 1829. But tiring of military restraint, it is said that he ran away before the first year was over. Mr. Ten Broeck began his career with Lexington by matching him against the Glencoe filly Sallie Waters, to run at three-mile heats at New Orleans early in December.

That Mr. Ten Broeck was an active man may be imagined, for in November he won two ten-mile trots over the Centreville track, on Long Island, with Kentucky Prince against Mr. Joseph Hall's pacer Hero. Kentucky Prince was a chestnut, by Woodpecker, out of a mare by the thoroughbred Sarpedon—the sire of Lexington's dam Alice Carneal. The late Hiram Woodruff handled and drove Kentucky Prince. The first race was for $5,000 a side, both to go in harness, drivers to weigh 165 pounds. Hero was driven by Geo. Spicer, who made the pace at first, but was stopped in the seventh mile, Kentucky Prince winning in 36:18, of which the first five miles were trotted in 13:09½, and the last mile in 2.39, the latter to win a big bet made by Mr. Ten Broeck that the horse would trot the last mile inside of three minutes. Ten days after the two horses trotted over the Union Course, a second race at the same distance, for $5,000 a side, which Kentucky Prince also won in the excellent time of 28:08¼.

With his winnings on the above two races Mr. Ten Broeck went to New Orleans, where, on December 2, Lexington won his match against Sally Waters, and beat her easily, the first heat in 6:23½, distancing her in the second in 6:24½. The match was for $8 500 ($5,000 on Sallie Waters to $3 500 on Lexington). So pleased was Mr. Ten Broeck with his success as a match-maker that he offered to back two or four horses by Boston against any two or four horses not by Boston, at two, three and four mile heats, for $10,000 to $20,000 a side. The proposition was never accepted, but in the meantime Lexington was prepared for the Great State Port Stakes, which was run over the Metairie track at New Orleans, on April 1, 1854.

The track was very heavy, a strong wind which prevailed having so hardened the mud that it was very stiff and unyielding. The first heat was won under a strong pull by three lengths, and the second heat easily, of which the last mile was the fastest in the race. The result naturally caused great enthusiasm, especially among the Kentuckians present, they winning, as the writer was once told in New Orleans, a steamboat loaded with money.

They were fated, however, to lose some of it. Both Lexington and Lecompte were entered for the Jockey Club purse of $2,000, set down to be run on the Saturday following (April 8). The feeling ran high in the Crescent City, the backers of Lecompte demanding another race. Mr. Ten Broeck finally consented, but to do so he had to buy his partner's (Capt. Viley) half interest in the horse for $5,000. The race was run with Judge Hunter's Reube also a starter Lecompte won the first heat in 7:26, and the second in 7:38¾—time faster than ever expected. Lexington, however, was not himself, to which is coupled the fact that Meichon, the rider of Lexington, pulled up in the second heat after going three miles, under a belief that he had gone four miles. He naturally lost much ground, but Lexington responded so well when set going again that Lecompte only beat him by four lengths, with Reube distanced.

The result did not suit Mr. Ten Broeck, and he offered to match Lexington to run Lecompte another race of four-mile heats for $10,000 a side within three days. F. J. Wells, the owner of Lecompte, declined. Mr. Ten Broeck soon after came to New York, where, through the Spirit of the Times, he issued the following challenge:

* * * I will run him (Lexington) a single four miles over the Metairie Course at New Orleans (under the rules of the Club) against the fastest time at four miles that has been run in America for the sum of $10,000, one-fourth forfeit. Two trials to be allowed, and the race to be run between the 1st and 15th of April next. Arrow to be substituted if Lexington is amiss.

Or I will run Lexington over the same course four-mile heats on the Thursday previous to the next Metairie April meeting against any named horse of the rate expressed in the proposition subjoined.

Or I will run him over the Union Course at New York the same distance on the third Tuesday in October. The party accepting the last race to receive $25,000 to $20,000, or to bet the same odds if Lexington travels to run at New Orleans. The forfeit to be $5,000, to be deposited with Messrs. Coleman and Stetson of the Astor House when either race is accepted. If the amounts of the last propositions are too large they may be reduced one-half, with forfeit in the same proportion. * * * R. Ten Broeck.

New York, May 30, 1854.

This challenge was followed by a long controversy, with some bitterness, in which "North" and "South" were mixed. Finally in August the challenge for a race at four-mile heats was accepted by Col. Calvin Green and Capt. John Belcher, of Virginia, for a race over the Union Course, Long Island, to take place that autumn. The controversy continued with increased bitterness, but Mr. Ten Broeck had to finally write one letter that settled all the disputes until the spring of 1855. It was dated Sept. 13, 1854, and was addressed to W. T. Porter, editor Spirit of the Times (old issue), in which he said:

I regret to inform you that Lexington broke his bridle while exercising on his training track, and running through a field of standing corn so bruised his legs as to make it necessary to stop his galloping in view of his match against time next spring.

It was during that winter, or the following spring, that the accident occurred which finally caused Lexington to go blind, which Mr. J. B. Pryor describes as follows:

I had an alley-way through my stables, in which my feed-box was located. The weather being warm, the doors were left open, with bars in front. Lexington got out of his box and got at the feed and filled himself. The late Capt. W. J. Minor had come to my house the night before to see Lexington work in the morning. I had him out to work, and soon found there was something wrong, and then my head man told me about his getting out The horse soon after was in a high fever with inflammation of the eyes. That was his first trouble, and his eyes never recovered, and he was almost blind when he ran his great race.

Mr. Ten Broeck's challenge to run Lexington four miles against Lecompte's 7:26 was accepted by Col. Calvin Green and Capt. John Belcher, of Virginia, and it was made a fixture for the first day of the Metairie Spring meeting at New Orleans, April 2. 1855, for $10,000 a side. It was the event of the season, and it attracted not only the racing people of the South, but many from the North. The New Orleans "Picayune," then the racing authority of the Crescent City, gave a long and picturesque account of the race. The officials selected were Gen. Stephen M. Westmore, for the Virginians; Mr. Arnold Harris, for Mr. Ten Broeck, with John G. Cocks, President of the Metairie Jockey Club, as umpire. The timers were Duncan F. Kenner, Stephen B. Elliott and Captain W. J. Minor. The betting was heavy, with Lexington, the favorite, at 100 to 75. Gilpatrick rode the horse at 103 pounds, which included three pounds overweight. The first half-mile was run in 53 seconds, and the first mile in 1:47¼, which was much too fast, and "Gil" was ordered to slack up. In the second mile Arrow joined in the contest, following Lexington at about thirty yards away, the mile being run in 1:52¼. As they began the third mile, Arrow closed up somewhat, and Lexington increased his pace a trifle, running the mile in 1:51½. Upon entering the fourth mile Arrow was stopped, and Joe Blackburn went at him again, but, as in the first mile, he was of but little benefit. Lexington, running on practically alone, did the mile in 1:48¾ (last quarter in 24¼ seconds), making the total time 7:19¾.

The track was very hard, and during the race Lexington lost his left fore-plate and half the right one. He also wanted to swerve out from the rails in the last mile to the soft going in the middle of the track. An interesting souvenir of the race, in the shape of one of the plates worn by Lexington, is framed and hanging up in the rooms of the American Jockey Club in this city. How good the time of 7:19¾ was, and still is, can be estimated by the fact that it was not until Aug. 20, 1874, at Saratoga, that Fellowcraft, then four years old and carrying 108 pounds, beat it, running the distance in a race in 7:19½, which is still the best on record for a race, while Ten Broeck, on Sept. 27, 1876, at Louisville, with 104 pounds, did the distance against time in 7:15¾.

The Metairie Jockey Club's Spring meeting having begun with Lexington's race against time ended on Saturday, April 10, with a race at four-mile heats, which was fully as sensational. It was for the Jockey Club purse of $1,000. Almost immediately after the time race, in which Lexington had so effectually wiped out Lecompte's 7:26, the admirers of that horse rallied and offered to back their horse to beat Lexington. The result was that the owner of both horses agreed to start for the Club purse with an inside bet of $2,500 each. The meeting of two such champions as Lexington and Lecompte naturally caused the greatest excitement in turf circles. According to the local reports all Mississippi and Louisiana were in New Orleans on that day. The weather was all that could be wished for, with the track in splendid condition. In the betting Lexington was the favorite at 100 to 80. He was ridden by Gilpatrick at 103¾ pounds (3¾ overweight). Lecompte was ridden by the colored boy "Abe," at 100 pounds.

They got a good start, with Lexington on the inside, and Gilpatrick at once began to force the pace, and at the end of the first mile he led by three-quarters of a length in 1:40½. The pace slacked up a little in the second mile, but Lexington still kept the lead and they passed the stand in 3:40½, having run the mile in 1:51. In the third mile Abe began riding Lecompte, but he could not reach Lexington, who gradually increased the gap, so that there were four lengths between them at the end of the mile, which had been run in 1:51. At the beginning of the fourth mile Abe began to use both whip and spurs. They were unavailable, Lexington could not be reached, and, increasing his lead at every stride, he won in hand, while Lecompte just saved his distance. The time was 7:23¾, the last mile having been run in 1:52¼. Before the time had expired for the second heat Gen. Wells withdrew Lecompte, and Lexington's career as a race horse was at an end. It was Mr. Ten Broeck's intention to have taken him to England, but the horse's eyes soon became so bad that it was only a question of time when he would be entirely blind. Thus he was saved to become the greatest sire known to breeders in the United States. Almost immediately after the race he was sent to W. F. Harper at Midway, Ky., where his services soon became in great demand.

The season of 1856 was also made at Midway. In June of that year Mr. R. A. Alexander visited England, accompanied by Mr. Nelson Dudley, of Lexington, who finally persuaded Mr. Aexander to buy Lexington in preference to any stallion that could be bought in England. The result was that Mr. Alexander did buy Lexington for $15,000, paying Mr. Ten Broeck $7,500 in cash, the remainder to be paid if Lexington were alive when he (Alexander) reached home. The English horse bought at the same time was Scythian, by Orlando. Lexington began serving at Woodburn in 1857. Among his foals that year was a chestnut colt out of a Glencoe mare, that was so weak on its legs and unpromising that Mr. Dudley order it killed.

The negro stable hand begged the life of the colt, and with care brought it up. The colt became the horse Optimist, that ran for Mr. Ten Broeck, and won a number of long-distance races in England, including the Ascot Stakes in 1891 and the Queen's Plate, over the Beacon Course (four miles, one furlong and one hundred and forty-three yards) at Newmarket. On his retirement he sired the famous French horse, Mars, the sire of Jongleur, in 1877. Lexington's services at Woodburn was continuous, except during a temporary removal to Illinois in 1865, until the year of his death. He died on Thursday, July 1, 1875, from cause due to nasal catarrh, with which he began to be troubled some three years before his death. He was buried at Woodburn, but the remains were exhumed, and the skeleton "set up," and it is now a prominent object of interest in the National Museum at Washington.

It is utterly impossible to do justice to Lexington as a race-horse or a sire. He was simply the greatest horse ever raised in this country. He never broke down and his legs were as good on the day of his death as they were when he was first put in training. That his old trainer, Mr. J. B. Pryor, is still of that opinion is shown by the following extract from a note received from him dated Holmdel, Nov. 12, 1888, which is almost the duplicate of one he wrote from England to some friends in this country in May, 1863:

* * * In justice to Lexington, he was the best race-horse I ever saw in any country. I have been training race-horses over fifty years in America, England, France and Germany, and I have never seen a horse that could beat him in either country, and I have trained some of the best race-horses in this country and the others. As to his race against time in New Orleans, I know that he could have run in 7:10 on that day. KIRK.

Leading Winning Sires.

All Hail Glenelg, king of winning sires. Another season has rolled around, and once more the son of Citadel stands at the head of the list. Glenelg came to America in utero, being foaled in 1866, his dam Babta by Kingston, son of Venison. Babta was out of Alice Low, she by Defence; her dam was called Pet, she by Gainsborough. Glenelg stamped himself a first class racer, and won many important events. Starting 18 times, he was placed first on 10 occasions, 4 times second, and 3 times third. Firenzi and Los Angeles are again the two largest winners, but the positions are reversed from that of last year, the bay filly then heading the list.

Anent Tips.

Scarcely a mail comes without one or more letters in relation to the use of tips, and when the statements are likely to have a general bearing on the question, answers will be given through the paper. There are quite a number which do not present features which will be of public interest, or require answers other than to get our blacksmiths to make tips from a diagram of the foot, and in some instances queries which have been answered only a short time before. We cannot supply the demand for specimen tips, as the blacksmith who does our work has so much to do in the way of horse-shoeing and general blacksmithing that he is busily engaged with his regular customers. Several years ago we had tips cast of malleable iron, there being a foundry for that branch of work connected with The Judson Works, which is only a short distance from our residence, and they had several advantages over those which were hand made. They wore longer, the metal sustaining the wear of macadamized streets at least 25 per cent better than any steel that has been tried since. But there was not the proper uniformity of temper for other purposes, and on that account the works had to suspend. We have heretofore made the patterns, but at present are much too busy, and have not even the time necessary to instruct a pattern-maker. When there is greater leisure an endeavor will be made to obtain such a variety of patterns that it will do to send to Cleveland, Ohio, where we are informed the best work of that class is done. We shall then be able to supply those whom we are forced to refuse, and it is not unlikely that, from the present outlook, there will be a demand which will warrant the Cleveland works to keep them in stock and furnish hardware dealers in those sections, at least, where fast trotters are trained, and in the cities there is sure to be a demand for them for road uses.

Arranging the Circuit.

Under the above heading, and finishing with "A Breeder," a very good article will be found in another part of this paper. The signature is not a pseudonym, although somewhat indefinite, as the gentleman who sent the communication is largely interested in breeding trotters, and is the owner of stock which are as likely as any to make their mark on California tracks. The problem of how shall the clashing of dates be overcome? or rather, what steps must be taken; what system developed whereby the holding of two or more meetings at the same time will do the least injury? Without having the necessary time at present to give the subject the attention its importance merits, we are favorably impressed with the views of our correspondent, and if others, who are interested in California trotting, will give careful consideration and present their ideas through the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, some plan will be evolved which will remedy, in a measure, opposing interests.

A New Method to Dress Horses.

We have the utmost confidence that the republication of the greater part of the Duke of Newcastle's work will be appreciated by such a large majority of our readers as to receive a practically unanimous verdict in favor of the plan. In the first place, there is not another turf paper in the United States which could accomplish the job. The only copy excepting ours in the United States is in the Astor Library; at least that is the sole volume we ever hear of, or have known to be quoted from, and the work being so rare, it is not likely that a permit could be obtained to have it taken from the library, in order to obtain negatives necessary to present facsimiles, and without these much of the interest would be lacking. Again, the copy from which our representations are taken is as perfect as the day it left the press; and more than that, with recommendations and corrections which are unquestionably the work of the author. The title-page, a fac simile of which is placed at the head of the column, and which will be kept there, is a curiosity in itself; and in addition thereto, a fac-simile of one page or more will be given in each and every number of the paper containing the work.

Not only as a curiosity will this work be valued. There is a fund of information to the students of horse lore, although written so long ago as in the reign of King Charles the Second, and a quaint philosophy which will please those who have a taste for that kind of composition.

One of the most valuable parts will be the author's description of the various breeds of horses of the seventeenth century, and which no man of his time was so thoroughly competent of describing. Universally regarded as the best horseman of the day, with opportunities beyond those of all his contemporaries, enthusiasm so ardent that it was a labor of love to place his knowledge in a form which would be of benefit to all who could read, and had the capacity to understand, it is not surprising that we should regard his contribution to horse literature as eminently worthy of being reproduced 222 years after its first appearance. The Duke of Newcastle wrote a work in French, which was translated and printed in English, and that is comparatively well known, extracts appearing in various works, although there have been frequent quotations by several authors from "The New Method to Dress Horses."

"The Markham Arabian is probably the first of this strain (Arab) ever brought into the British Isles; yet I cannot, myself, perceive wherefore the rejection of this Arab should be charged, as it generally appears now to be, as an error, against the Marquis of Newcastle, the same who gallantly commanded for the king at Marston Moor, and would have won for him his battle, and perhaps his crown, but for the mad and selfish impetuosity of Rupert. This is, however, nothing to the point, however much it may be so that he was considered the best horseman of his day, and that he has left, as a legacy to posterity and a bounty to all those who love that noble animal, incomparably the best old English work on the horse."

Again on another page Mr. Herbert writes:

"It is, I think, worthy of notice, that Newcastle, who was a scholar, a travelled man, an observer and a gentleman, as well as a soldier and a horseman, records his preference of the Spanish horse to any other strain of blood existing in his time, and in doing so directly refers to the Barb, for service, though not in those terms, as a racing stallion. And it is observable, that the very authors who attack him, borrow his description of the various races without acknowledgement."

The attacks referred to were on account of the poor opinion he had of the Arab horse, although he candidly admits that the only one of the breed he ever saw was the Markham Arabian; but we will not anticipate what the great duke has to offer regarding any of the breeds, reserving his descriptions for their appropriate place. A friend to whom we showed the facsimile of the title page, and explained the intention suggested that when more than one page was occupied, the form should be so arranged that it could be clipped out without using two numbers, as would have been the case if printed on opposite sides of the same leaf, and then those who do not have the numbers bound could paste them in a scrap book for future reference. We shall adopt the plan, as without any doubt many people will avail themselves of the opportunity.

In order that our readers may not be troubled with the orthography which prevailed in the days when the Duke of Newcastle wrote, that has been made, with a few exceptions, to conform to the present mode, though the old punctuation is followed, as that seemed necessary to convey the full meaning of the author. The facsimiles which will be given will show more clearly, than can be done by pen portraiture, the great difference from then and now, not only in the spelling, but also in the use of capital letters and italics.

Humbug.

Of all the humbugs which are foisted on the public, in the name of sport, we regard that of long distance "go-as-you-please" pedestrianism as being entitled to the pride of place when the question is raised of the superlative degree of humbuggery. We were entrapped into giving a six day's contest between two of the celebrites of 1880 a support which, when we saw the settlement at the close, we were heartily ashamed of, and it may be that the disgust which followed carries weight that is greater than should be placed on similar exhibitions.

We could not believe, until the proof was absolute, that prominent men could be so devoid of shame as to write, publish and tell a whole chapter of falsehoods in relation to the match, and when they were attacked ascribed the animus to prejudice. "Sucker" enough to believe protestations that everything "was on the square," and when there was no longer anything to be gained by deception the veil was thrown aside without the least compunctions of conscience, without a blush on the cheeks, or tremor of voice when mendacity and duplicity were admitted. It was part of the show, something to be proud of, that people were gulled into the belief that a bona fide match was in progress, when all that it could be termed was a huge "fake" to capture the dollars of a credulous public.

The "prince of showmen," P. T. Barnum, claimed that humbug was a legitimate device, in that respect agreeing with Hudibras that there was as much pleasure in being cheated as to cheat, and that whatever amused the people was perfectly correct, if even it was a mermaid fashioned out of the head of a monkey and the tail of a fish, a Joyce Heath or any other of his mysticisims. It might be that he had a little truth on his side, as any ingenious piece of mechanism will attract attention, and to have the senses so utterly at fault as to fail in detecting the secret springs of "bamboozlement," gives a zest to the imposition which is generally relished.

The match alluded to, between O'Leary and Weston, was the only one we ever witnessed, and although not much of our time was spent in looking on, it was a great surprise that people should crowd the pavilion night after night to see two men shuffling along at all conceivable manner of human "gaits."

That the same tactics are to be employed, so far as the daily papers can be used, in the forthcoming match is evident. Already the keynote is sounded, and the leading morning papers are full of intelligence regarding the affair, which does not open until the 21st of February. What could be better than the following quotations, the object being to make good use of the credulity of the people of this and adjoining cities. The "glorious climate," pride of all true-hearted Californians, is made to open the campaign, and there the gratification of witnessing the best record for the distance is a natural sequence, and may be called the heavy artillery of General Hall:

A rather quiet quartette, consisting of Frank Hall, Bobby Vint, Thomas Howarth, and E. C. Moore, arrived here yesterday on the early train from the East. Hall is the manager who recently was at the head of the great Eastern go-as-you-please matches, and who has come to this Coast to arrange for another, to take place beginning on February 21st, and continuing for six days.

An "Examiner" reporter met the party a short distance up the road. Hart, who is a short, business-like individual, with a wonderful luxuriance of hair and beard, appears to be quite a sport, having really more to say about kennel and pugilistic matters than he has about the match which he proposes handling. In connection with the matter, however, he stated:

"I believe that in this glorious climate the world's record of 623 miles, which is held by Littlewood, the Englishman, can be broken. While I am positive that the men who are to start will cover 650 miles in six days, I would be far from astonished if they covered 700 miles."

The Call has nearly a column, mostly taken up with points, breeding and records of the men, and we suppose that the Chronicle and the Alta are not behind hand in eulogistic notices.

We have no cause to think, and therefore do not charge Mr. Hall and his associates with contemplated fraud, or that there has been, or will be, so much mendacity as was the case in the one mentioned, but we do protest against bringing it under the caption of sport, as it should be dubbed an exhibition which has pleased the people of the big metropolis of the country, and is altogether likely to entice the mercurial folk of the Pacific Coast.

Mr. Baldwin on Eastern Handicaps.

Our associate "Grim" has interviewed the owner of the Santa Anita string, and, as will be learned by a perusal of the interview, Mr. Baldwin is not backward in stating his views. While there is a tendency to growl over the work of the handicapper, and take him to task (it may be with curses loud and deep), there is a general impression among western owners that they are not fairly treated in the way of imposts. Handicaps have swallowed weight-for-age races, so that the really good horses have little chance after going through their three-year-old engagments. That racing is a game of weights is a truism which does not require elaboration, and though a horse may be so far superior to his contemporaries that with health and condition every race he participates in will be at his mercy, it is far more rare to find such an animal at the present time than in the years when Fashion, Boston and Lexington ruled the roost.

Regarding the Emperor of Norfolk we cannot understand the reasons for Mr. Thomas changing his opinion in so short a time. When he showed him to Mr. Winters and ourself the second day of the Blood-Horse meeting, he expressed himself in very different terms, stating, with apparent confidence, that he was sure he would be able to race again the coming season, eulogizing the colt as the best which had ever been shown, and with no expectation of seeing his equal were he (Thomas) to live to a hundred years.

If Mr. Baldwin will have him broken to harness, driven on a trot this year, and confine his work to pulling a sulky when first put in training until he is thoroughly "seasoned," use astringent and cooling lotions on the injured tendon, wear bandages when galloping fast under which there is good supply of cotton batting, keep him barefooted so long as the toes do not wear away to cause soreness, and we have absolute faith that in 1890 he will be himself again.

The Pool and Betting Question.

The only arguments we shall use in favor of a bill to regulate pool selling and bookmaking are those which bear on the horse breeding interests of this section of the country. Forming as it does one of the great resources of the State at present, if not hampered by adverse interests there will be a growth which the most sanguine would not dare to prophesy.

The "high-morality" plea we have little to say about. Men are emphatically gambling animals, and that is nearly as strong in humankind as the passion for stimulants. The best plan is to endeavor to regulate these propensities, and remove as much as is possible, temptations. Prohibition is of doubtful utility. The old-time blue laws are now looked upon as the determination of bigots and fanatics to make every one subject to their prejudices and whims. Gloomy ascetics—men who would fain place a black cloud to obstruct the rays of the sun in order that all Nature should reflect the dark shadows which press on their own hearts. The Great Architect of the Universe, in boundless beneficence, has granted a world of sunshine, of bright flowers, green fields and singing birds. He has implanted a love of pleasure in every breast, and also retributive justice when these pleasures degenerate into any kind of excess. The laws of the Creator are infallible, the best code which human intelligence has evolved is susceptible of improvement. It has been enunciated by one of our greatest men, and the opinion shared by others that "the best government was that which governed the least," but this has to be accepted with explanations and amendments to cover the ground. Civilized society has become so intricate, there are so many rights to guard, that huge volumes, "ponderous tomes," are necessary to contain laws which are imperatively demanded. Unquestionably the right to restrain, as well as to punish, is legitimately within the sphere of legislators, and when it is manifestly proper to adopt guards in the way of prevention, that course is better than to punish criminals after the crime has been committed. As we have written heretofore, it is not the intention to more than allude to the question of morality, the purpose being, in these articles, to show the drawbacks which betting rooms are to the horse-breeding interests, and which if continued will, in all probability, be an impost that will, in a measure, destroy the business.

Rigid moralists may deplore that the propensity to gamble is so universally the inheritance of the human family. Were not that passion a part of our heridity an inheritance which dates from the creation of man the world would retrogade into an existence which is typified by animals which are denied speculative ideas. The only habitable portion of the world would be those favored countries where Nature has provided the food necessary for the preservation of life, and where the climate renders clothing an encumbrance.

The sports of the turf and track can only be fully sustained when there is an opportunity to speculate on the result of the contests. Kept within bounds the harm which may follow is so far counterbalanced that the good outweighs the evil over and over again. Pool selling and bookmaking, when placed under the charge of respectable associations, are as much a part of the recreation as the stakes which are deposited. We do not claim that the pool rooms of San Francisco are conducted in any other than a fair manner, but that they are not an appendage, or in any manner an assistance to racing and trotting is beyond question. When associations let the privilege of pool selling, from 60 to 80 per cent of the gross earnings is paid into the treasury, and this enables the societies to give far larger premiums than would be possible without that aid. Public rooms which are open for the whole of the year, the chief business being on races which take place in far-off sections, do not add one dollar to the amounts awarded to encourage the breeding of fine horses, the revenue being apportioned for rent, telegraphic communications, clerk hire, etc., and profits of the proprietors. That there are large profits, a big balance on the credit side of the ledger is so palpable that it is unnecessary to present a detailed statement of probable receipts and disbursements. The men engaged in it are too shrewd to pursue a losing business, there must be large profits or they would not be so anxious to retain the income. It may be claimed that the moneys obtained from transactions on races which are decided thousands of miles from San Francisco, do not interfere with those on this side of the continent. They do, however, in more ways than one. The money which is expended in speculating on these far away events, or a portion of it at least, is diverted from the natural channel, and as the outlay which is necessary to cover the big expense, not taking the profits into consideration, is so large a sum that a moderate percentage would be a great addition to the resources of the tracks in the neighbourhood of San Francisco.

But there is a greater grievance. Before "rooms" were opened in the city there would be an attendance of hundreds at the minor races, where now there are scarcely tens, and this falling off is not confined to the race courses which are contiguous to the metropolis. The attendance at the fairs has been decreased, and very many of the dwellers in San Francisco, who made it a rule to "follow the circuit," find the attractions of the betting rooms superior to those which entail a journey to seek. As a majority of these men were steady patrons of the pool box there is a lowering of the percentage as well as the money expended for tickets, and with nothing to compensate.

Although the main market for California bred horses is in the East, without opportunities to test them at home there will be a falling off in production, and breeders whose means are limited will be forced to abandon the business. Without home inducements to train race horses and educate trotters, there will be neither profit or interest attached to the pursuit, and it is only a question of time when betting rooms, kept open the whole of the year in San Francisco and the larger towns of the State will be a handicap which cannot be carried.

Some Queries in Relation to Tips.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMN:—I have been reading your book, "Tips and Toeweights," and have tried them some, but cannot get a blacksmith to make them to suit me. I tried them on a double-gaited horse that carried a 14 ounce shoe and 5 ounce weight, but he would pace in spite of me.

There is in this country a son of Blue Bull that has more speed than any of his other sons and daughters, that has shown trials in 2:14 with less than six week's handling after making a season in the stud, and the first handling he ever received he trotted a full mile in May to a road cart in 2:26, but after about four or five week's handling his feet got sore and matter comes out of cracks in the bottom of his feet. Do you believe that the tips with careful handling would carry him through all right? He would make a man a fortune if they would. He has been in the hands of two of the best handlers in this State, but they could not get him through with shoes on. I am a poor man, and it would about break me up if I should buy him and he should do no good, as his services are not appreciated in the stud on account of his feet.

We own a horse that can trot fast, but we took him to a horse show and trotted him over rough ground, so he got to hopping with his left hind foot. He is very long-gaited and has low knee action. I tried to get father to get tips on him, but he calls me a crank. I expect you know how that is

Where a horse has a foot that turns in a little should the weight be put on at a or b? in accordance with the diagram I send.

I am only an amateur handler, and any advice you can give me will be fully appreciated. I remain yours truly,

CHARLES I. THOMAS.

Harrisburg, Fayette Co., Ind., Jan. 10th, 1889.

The antipathy of blacksmiths to the making and properly setting tips, has retarded their use more than anything else. The prevailing opinion among them is that should they come into general use, that it would materially decrease their incomes from the most profitable part of their business. This is an error on their part, as any man who gives the subject any study will readily see that to take proper care in making and setting them, is worthy of as high a price as when full shoes are put on.

Double-gaited horses are oftentimes quite troublesome, whether wearing tips or shoes. We have one which has bothered us for two years, and though I have not given up hopes of correcting the evil, as yet we have not hit on the right course. He was owned conjointly with a friend, and last fall he lost all faith, and insisted that one should take the "sole ownership," and on expressing a reluctance to accept his altogether too liberal a proposition, replied, "That he would have nothing more to do with him, and if I sent him to his farm, some sixty miles off, he would not accept the proffer, and return him to the place from whence he came forthwith."

The Blue Bull mentioned may have quittor, which will require a competent veterinarian to treat, as the description is not clear enough to form an opinion. If it is a bruise, or a partial separation of sole and wall, or suppurating corns, it will be easier to cure. If our correspondent will send an accurate description, we will consult Dr. Bowhill, and may be enabled to give advice which will be of value. At all events, we should recommend keeping him barefooted as long as possible, and should his toes wear away so as to cause soreness, put on a light tip.

The long-gaited horse, which hops on his hind leg, may hop from scalping, or there may be lameness in the limb. A tip beveled on toe and sides, and a good boot on hind feet may correct the evil.

The query regarding where to place the toe-weight on the pigeon-toed horse is difficult to answer. From the sketch sent it might be dangerous to put a weight on the center of the toe, in which case he would be likely to hit his knee or arm, and if placed to one side of the center, should he be "open-gaited," he might wound his hind legs. Some years ago we made some experiments to test the effects of side weights—shoes with one side heavier than the other, etc.—but did not carry them far enough to come to a satisfactory conclusion.

It is the fashion nowadays to call a person who is at all enthusiastic on any subject a "crank," and if the appellation deters anyone from pursuing a course which he feels to be correct, he will have little force; "unstable as water, he will not excel."

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

STANDARD MARES FOR SALE.

Wilber F. Smith advertises this week, three fine mares, at a price which should warrant a speedy sale, whether you fancy Blue Blue, Guy Wilkes or Stamboul blood, he can suit the inclination. Two of them are in foal, one to Fallis, a son of Electioneer. Take a look at their pedigrees and prices.

CATTLE SALE.

We desire to call especial attention to the public sale of high bred shorthorn cattle on January 29th, 1889, by Prewitt and Goff of Winchester, Kentucky. Persons wishing to buy some really good cattle should not fail to attend this sale. A number of the cattle were prize winners in Kentucky the past season. Seldom is such an opportunity offered the breeders and dealers of this coast to get such cattle. Sale to commence promptly at eleven A. M., at the Bay District Course. Killip & Co., auctioneers.

The guarantee system of stake racing seems to be coming into popular favor. I was in England in 1886 when the great Eclipse Stake was run at Sandown Park. The stake had been opened in 1884 and a guarantee given that it would amount to £10,000. Many thought the new feature would incur such loss to the association that it would not be repeated. There will be three of equal magnitude there this year. On this side of the water the Suburban, Brooklyn Handicap and the great American stakes are planned on the same basis and are assured successes.

ROD.

Among the Redwoods.

CHAPTER X.

A MORNING NOT ALTOGETHER IDEAL.

"Cummings," said Erl, bending her brows thoughtfully, is not that the name of the gentleman, papa, who came here last September after the weather had grown so warm and the fishing so poor?"

It was early Wednesday morning, and the air came deeply laden with odor of redwood, rose and honeysuckle, and the strong, young sun looked out clearly from the far east and promised a fair day. The inmates of Myrtle Heights had just finished breakfast, and were sitting on the front verandah planning a day's sport. Philip, through the combined efforts of hoarhound tea and good nursing, had returned to his usual condition of health, and was growing impatient to render himself, like Dick, the hero of a fine catch. Piscatorial honors are not heavy ones, they do not wear the mind, or impair the health, and to Dick they were so old a story that he tossed them off lightly and gave all the time he could spare from smoking to an attempted realization of the days when Cummings would exercise his downy wits on the problem of "taking" flies.

It was a little unlike Dick to mention names, and had he for a moment suspected that Rachael's Brownie was known here he would have exercised more caution; but the murder was out now, and he listened attentively to Mr. Selden, who no sooner heard Erl's question than he smiled curiously, and began examining the leaves of a Homer rose that thrust its branches through the lattice work against which it was trained.

"I think so," he answered slowly, "the one you mean with whom I had such an argument about flies."

"Yes, papa," he was so sure the little ones were useless, you remember."

"Well, he knows," said Dick, stooping down to pet Nestor, who was stretched out at Erl's feet. "Nothing can be valuable that does not bear the stamp of his approval. He is a wonderful man."

As usual it was difficult for any one but Phillip to detect whether Dick was in earnest or jest, and he was too much engrossed by something else to attempt either enquiry or defence. This something was possessed of great tormenting power, vanished illusively when asked to take shape or substance, and so magnified trifles that they shut out the world. It made him annoyed at Dick for leaning over and petting Erl's dog, it found matter for discontent in the fact that they became interested in a conversation over the strain of plebian blood that robbed the poor canine of his full right to the title of St. Bernard, and, what to Philip was worse than all, it had so great capability of arousing anger that he began to look unpleasant, and was not quite equal to assuming the grace necessary for interest in Mr. Selden's remarks on the peculiarities of the Cetonia family.

Erl, guided by a woman's quick intuition, or stirred by somewhat the same uneasy feeling that moved him, detected his trouble and asked if he intended fishing to-day.

"Yes," he replied, without meeting her glance, "that is, if my going will not inconvenience any one else."

"Dear me!" came immediately from Dick, who made haste to rise and walk away. "Send cards the next time. I'm off down the Lorenzo."

He lifted the rod from the rests he had made for it near his room, examined it with a regard almost tender, smiled, fastened on his fish basket, and came back to tell Mr. Selden not to care anything about it if he should not return until late.

"Won't you go with me, Miss Selden?" he asked, turning suddenly to Erl, and ignoring Philip completely.

Erl, flushed by surprise or a deeper emotion, turned and looked toward her father.

"You wish to go up, do you not, papa?" she asked.

"Yes, but it makes no real difference, I can as well go down if you desire."

Just at this point Dick's face was a study. Vexation, doubt, and fear were so markedly apparent, and the attempt to control their outward expression so fierce that he looked like an artist's model of the mixed emotions.

Upon Erl it made exactly the right impression, and to the astonishment of her father and the delight of Philip, she burst into a merry laugh and said to Dick that she invariably preferred the upper part of the stream.

"I'll wager you catch the next fish, any how," he said, smiling at her merriment, and adjusting his trappings so he could make his way comfortably through the back gate and down the cow-trail.

It might very reasonably and naturally have occurred to Mr. Selden that Dick, in treating Philip so cavalierly, had also placed him in rather an uncomfortable position, but it did not. Instead he looked upon the whole matter as very comfortably decided, and went to have a housekeeping conference with Mrs. Morrison before making ready for the day's absence.

The aspect of affairs was not quite so clear to Erl, who lingered about the verandah pulling Nestor's ears, picking up leaves and scraps of paper, and giving Philip no end of opportunities to make some remark indicative of his frame of mind. This was just what he, poor fellow, was striving to do, but being entirely convinced that he had made an unpardonable ninny of himself, could not think of a single sensible word.

At length Erl, who had undeniable force and directness of character, opened a way by repeating her question relative to fishing, and asking if he would be pleased to go with her and her father.

Philip's perversity tried to take instant flight, but the feelings which influenced his speech would not down, and it was impossible to resist saying again, "If I will not inconvenience anybody."

"But papa and I like to be inconvenienced," said Erl. She took one of Nestor's ears in either hand, and pushed her face close against his cold nose. "Don't we, Nestor?"

Tragical contention, to be perfect, requires the proper opposing element, which, happily, in this case was lacking; and as Philip had no mind to be a Jacques to his own shallow, he met her light mood, and went to prepare, humming a snatch of a song as he did so.

When fully equipped Erl looked much as she appeared the first time he saw her, except that to-day her gown was pink instead of blue cotton, and a less dilapidated hat kept the sun from her eyes. The query whether it was quite proper to go about in rubber boots, and a skirt considerably above the regulation length, albeit not very short, I am sorry to say never entered her mind. In so doing she was as unconscious of any sin against social regulations as the hardy brake which thrust its fringes up among her choicest flowers was ignorant of the harm done by its intrusion.

Mrs. Morrison might have set her right, but that good and worthy member of society had long passed the time, if indeed she had ever known it, when the slender waist of a sister woman was to her mind indisputable evidence of frivolous characteristics, and a prettily-turned ankle sure proof of moral delinquencies. And did the thought occur to her as she watched the three go down the road, followed by Nestor, that possibly Mrs. Tanner would make ill-natured remarks, and Mrs. Gilbert clasp her hands and roll her eyes upward, she had no inclination to spoil any one's pleasure for the sake of avoiding their interference.

"You'd walk on your head, with your heels in the air, most o' the time, if you tried the gait everybody praised," she said, sending the dust before her broom, and turning to catch a glimpse of Rob, who was just bringing Wolfgang home after an hour's exercise. She had many happy hours now that this unsteady boy was given over entirely to Mr Selden's care, and tried conscientiously to make him appreciate the true kindness that had made him instrumental in bringing about the change. "Though it's little use talkin' to a child that's settled his mind to have the moon," she said, by way of expressing her scant measure of success whenever the subject was mentioned. Her work in this part of the house was now completed, but she lingered a moment, broom in hand, the wish, meanwhile, running through her mind that he might not see Erl. As well hope the bee would not scent the honeysuckle, or the wild bird spy ripe, red berries!

Rob was a living example of one of the most singular things in the human cosmos. Weak in intellect, unformed in character, without even physical attraction, he yet felt himself the superior of every man, and only on occasion when proof too stubborn strong for any doubt overwhelmed his self-conceit could he believe that Erl did not care for him as he cared for her. And this belief was generally very short-lived because he immediately drowned it in alcohol, and came out ready to begin again.

It was due to such supreme confidence in self that the sight of Erl going down the road between Philip and her father did not seriously affect him, and his soliloquy was characteristic:

"Them city fellers ain't no fishermen; she'll miss me enough afore night, see if she don't," he said, bidding Wolfgang go on, and resting undisturbed in his supposed excellence.

To pass a day now and then under a wrong impression of this kind is not altogether a bad thing; we gain some hours of happiness, at least, and an hour gone for one thing can not go for another. Certainly it was very well for Rob that he could not see Philip's first cast, which lured two trout with sparkling sides and fins like soft silk.

"I see you know all about it," said Mr. Selden enthusiastically. "It makes me feel young again to watch you! Come, my daughter, do not lose your opportunities."

But Erl hung back, and insisted on going further up the stream by herself.

"I wish you would not," said Philip. He was standing in the water, and might have done for a picturesque Tuston of the Middle Ages.

"Oh, but I must," she answered sweetly; "Did Mrs. Morrison give you some sandwiches?"

Philip wanted to say no, but was not given to the stupidity of telling fibs, so confessed reluctantly that she had, and again asked Erl to stay.

She shook her head. Upon which Mr. Selden tried to make her see the advantages of companionship.

"But I shall have yours, papa dearie, even if you are digging among the roots and ferns" She was beginning to get impatient, her nature being of the kind galled by restraint.

"Ah, but I must go to the hotel first and may be busy the entire morning."

"And, papa, isn't Nestor with me?" Just meet me where you said, and I shall do very well."

Both men saw the uselessness of further urging as she began climbing up the bank on the opposite side of the stream.

"Truly going," she replied. "Come Nestor."

Nestor followed his mistress sedately, feeling, no doubt, that much depended on his behavior, and even forbore plunging into the water as he longed to do, or stopping to gossip with the post-master's cur, who suddenly and discourteously appeared on the scene.

Philip, left quite alone, did not fish so industriously as an ardent angler should. Between each take were long dreamy pauses which he tried to fancy spent on experiments with flies and leaders, or in listening to a pair of finches who seemed to shape their course by his; but which, deep down in his consciousness, he knew were given to thoughts of dark eyes and a smiling mouth. At times he would rouse himself and fish with a steady deliberation that promised death to every foolish trout within the radius of his energy; then he would forget and idle again. So far as his reputation for angling went, it was good that the trout were taking well, else had his basket made a pitiful showing. As it was, eleven o'clock found him without a half of the fish he should have had, and so ambitionless and strangely dull that he left the stream, intent on finding a comfortable place in the wood where he might dream away the hour before noon.

Up, up he climbed among the underbrush and young redwoods until he found a snug spot enclosed by waxen-leaved madronos, and made secure by the luxuriant garlands of a wild vine that stretched from tree to tree. The green leaves and pink cups of the oxalis carpeted it, and looking up Philip saw the clear blue of heaven bending like a friendly face above him.

He rested his rod against a tree, took off his basket, and threw himself down to enjoy the quiet hour as listlessly and idly as he chose.

In ordinary life the most practical and business-like of mortals, he now became possessed of sudden sympathy with the romantic and the imaginative, and longed for power to express what he felt. Every kind of impossible thought and fancy stole into his brain, and he seemed to have entered a new world where all things were enveloped in a haze of tenderness. So complete was his surrender to the new emotions, that Erl's sudden appearance in the leafy nook occasioned not even a start of surprise. But she, on the whole, less prepared for apparitions, particularly of so real a character, gave a quick girlish scream, that brought the idler to his feet with a multitude of apologies.

"So you found my bower?" she said, blushing all over her smooth brown cheeks. "Papa and Nestor will have their tramp for nothing. They went to find you. May I see your basket?"

"After I have seen yours." His wits were bright enough now, and so were his eyes, which looked steadily into hers, as he put his arm across the basket, more in the hope that she would try to draw it away than from any real desire to hide his fish.

She did not, however, but turned and blew a sharp call on the little horn that Philip had exhausted adjectives in admiring on the way down.

"Heigh, ho!" he said, not admiring it so much now, "are we to broil some trout for luncheon, or just subsist on sandwiches?"

"Sandwiches," Erl said briefly, and then pursed up her lips and asked him if the bower were not lovely.

"Quite, as befits its mistress," he answered gallantly, "only I should enjoy it ever so much more if you would sit down and tell me something about yourself. Are you satisfied with your morning's sport?"

As it happened, Erl was not at all satisfied, having worked no more industriously than Philip, but this she could not confess, so she took up her basket and opened it.

While examining its contents, they sat on the ground like two children, their heads close together, and their attention wholly given over to the fish.

"You count mine and I will count yours," said Erl quickly. She went over and caught up his basket, and a conflict was imminent, when Mr. Selden and Nestor appeared.

"Ah, you ran to cover nicely," said Mr. Selden, putting down his trowel and basket, and smiling at Philip. "It would seem an easy thing to get lost in these woods, but my experience is the reverse. Are your sandwiches ready, daughter," he asked, turning to Erl, who was busy undoing a bottle.

"They would be, if Mr. Wells would only tell me what he has done with his. I am sure he has eaten them."

Her eyes were dancing as she turned them on Philip.

"Indeed I have not," he said, having an awkward way of mistaking jest for earnest, and not daring to take too much notice of the eyes. "Here they are."

He drew a small parcel from the pocket of his fishing coat, and gave it into her hand.

"I heard you say you liked cold coffee on a fishing trip, so we brought a bottle." Her eyes were downcast now, and she was wondering how she could have said what she did about the sandwiches.

"Give me a drop, too, daughter," said Mr. Selden, while Philip sat awaiting his turn, and thinking it was very pleasant to have some one note his little fancies and indulge them. True, his mother had been doing nothing else since he was born, but this was something different.

A luncheon of sandwiches and coffee, even though the sandwiches are of chicken and the coffee of the best, is quite simple enough to go with sylvan surroundings and a good appetite, both of which the group in the bower enjoyed. Nestor was, perhaps, the only one not entirely satisfied, for which dissatisfaction he may be pardoned, since he was accustomed to something more substantial than chicken bones and bread. Furthermore he objected, and justly, to Philip's way of trying to make him jump for tiny morsels, as though he were a petty trick dog, and finally showed his disapproval of the whole affair by taking himself off to one side and lying down with his head on his outstretched paws.

Luncheon completed, Mr. Selden with the spirit of an old sportsman, took a peep into the baskets, shook his finger at Erl, and told Philip he had certainly played the part of Antony in his fishing thus far, to-day.

Philip laughed and said if he remembered aright that Cleopatra had excused Anthony, and bade him leave fishing to the pretty prince of Pharos and Canopus because he was angling for game of a larger kind.

"Oh, what a thing it must have been to be a man in those days!" exclaimed Erl, her eyes flashing and her body straightening to its full height

"Perhaps," Philip looked at her as she stood with her hand among the leaves of the vine that hung above the entrance to the bower, and became meditative and somewhat inclined to jealousy of the Roman generals which, seeing they had long since mouldered into dust, was beyond peradventure unreasonable.

"I fancy," said Mr. Selden, looking down at the oxalis leaves, "I fancy that speech of Cleopatra's was only a sop to Anthony—a kind of bonne bouche to excite his good nature. She knew how to manage him. Phetaroh, you remember, tells us that she was not so wondrously beautiful, but that she had great cleverness and a fascinating manner. Shall we smoke, Mr. Wells?"

Erl did not object, rather liked the odor of tobacco smoke, she said in reply to Philip's questionings, so he lighted a cigar and joined her father.

"It will be preferable for you to keep close to us this afternoon, daughter," said Mr. Selden after he had smoked some time in silence, "this part of the Lorenzo never had my full approval as a resort for you."

He looked up dubiously as he finished, expecting an outbreak, but to his surprise Erl yielded quietly, and an hour later found her fishing a pool above Philip, with Nestor watching from the bank of the stream and Mr. Selden searching for specimens among the damp recesses of the rocks.

San Francisco, Jan. 15, '89. PETRONELLA.

The Rainbow Trout.

"Petronella's" recent query as to how many varieties of trout were found in California should bring some of the more observant of the local devotees of the rod to the front. Some very interesting notes about one sort of trout quite common in the Sierras are taken from Sports Afield. W. Oldham Chambers, F. S. L., says in the Journal of the National Fish Cultivation Association:

"Its nose is obtuse, its gill covers red, while along the body is a red band. The color of the back is a brown; fins are of an orange-pink color. The head and back are marked with small black spots of irregular shape, which extend to the adipose and caudal fins. It is a deep, thick-set fish; but at the same time the formation is well proportioned, and in this respect it is superior to the salvelinus fontanalis. The dorsal fin is small, and the pectoral fin two-thirds the length of the head. The posterior edge of the operculum or gill cover is rounded in form, and the lower edge of the inter-operculum and sub-operculum forms a straight oblique line. The tail, or caudal fin, is more forked than in the salvelinus fontanalis or common trout. The teeth are well defined, and are placed in nine lines across the mouth, namely, one on the vomer, two in the palatine bone, two on the superior maxillary bones, two lines of incurved teeth on the tongue, and two on the lower jaw. The lateral line runs on a plane slightly above the upper portion of the eye. The fin-rays are: dorsal, thirteen; pectoral, fourteen; ventral, nine; anal, nine; caudal, twenty. The eye is one fifth the length of the head, and placed one and one-quarter its own diameter from point of nose. The length of head as compared to length of body, head and tail, including caudal rays, is as one to five and a half. The fish now before me is eleven inches long; seven inches girth; weight, one and a half pounds; and twenty months old."

The writer quoted adds: But the most striking feature to my mind is the smallness of the mouth as compared with the enormous cavity in the head of the eastern brook trout, and this may have given rise to the name "small fly trout," which it is sometimes called, from the fact that better success in its capture follows the use of a small fly. It is not "proper form" to fish with anything but a fly for trout in this country, or I would tell you what "bait" may be used without any fear of failure as to getting a "bite," the information having been conveyed to me as a secret. Of course no trout fisher ever uses anything but the artificial fly when seeking recreation; nor do I seriously recommend any one to resort to grasshoppers, worms, grubs, horse-flies, caddis, helgramites, or other natural food of the fish. But, at the same time, there are occasions when the alternative being to go to bed without tasting trout that day or to resort to the bait referred to, and on such occasions I have sometimes given way to my animal instincts ("professional etiquette" not being strongly enough seated in my poetic soul to restrain the deed), and resorted to the "dead-sure" bait not mentioned here. I feel sure that you would scratch out the name of the bait if inserted, apply to the writer some oppribrious epithet and wish he was at the bottom of the Falls of Minnehaha, or something of that kind, so I decline to give the "pot-fisher" the benefit of my knowledge in this respect. However, any gentleman who does not want to become a fish-warden can make personal application and obtain the knowledge—providing he will promise not to resort to the bait except in the alternate emergency as suggested above.

The flesh of the "rainbow" captured in Platte is very slightly tinged with orange, and in comparison with the eastern trout is of finer fibre, not so flaky, contains more oil, and to my gastronomical taste is the better fish of the two for the table—being not quite so good, however, as our native trout.

I know but little about the spawning habits of the "rainbow, but know it is a spring spawner, and should therefore presume it well calculated to do well in the mountain streams. Of very rapid growth, and as handsome as a picture, it is to be hoped that more attention will be paid to its propagation at the State Hatchery in the future than has been done in the past. In confirmation of the statement regarding its growth it may be said that the first batch of alevins were placed in the Platte two years ago last August by General Pierce, and last August I caught several weighing over a pound and one that touched the notch at a little over two pounds. It is extremely wary and difficult to lure; but sometimes the force and vigor displayed in seizing the fly is perfectly astounding to the angler, and its conduct after being hooked is really frantic, and unless the angler is cool and collected the chances are that the larger ones will break away in one way or another.

Mr. Thos. H. Chubb, not to know of whom, argues absolute lack of angling proclivities, is sending out a new catalogue, which is a gem, beside being a most useful publication to those who may need rods, reels, lines, flies or hooks, rod holders, lauding nets, or anything else ever needed by the most expert and exacting fisherman. The beautiful little pamphlet can be had by applying to Mr. Chubb at Post Mills, Vt. Mr. Chubb's wares have one merit which cannot but recommend them; they are always precisely what they are represented to be by the maker.

TRAP.

Why Do We Shoot?

"There's nothing more to guess," if the conundrum heading of this note is answered. A writer in current Wildwood Magazine, a journal delightful both in name and in savor, undertakes to answer the query, but does not reach an ultimate. He says:

"The question is often asked why does the civilized man shoot? and why does he fish? And it is superficially and flippantly answered by saying that the man has a desire to shoot and fish. But the answer is totally insufficient for the earnest inquirer, inasmuch as it fails to explain the reason for the desire. A child may cry for the moon, from simple childishness and without reason. That is one thing. A man may brave death, although with a desire to live. If so, he has a reason. That is quite another thing.

When we analyze motives and sentiments, we find that the civilized man of to-day does not shoot or fish because of any single one of the motives or sentiments which are usually ascribed for the act, nor indeed, is it exactly accurate to say that it is invariably because of all or many of them combined.

Let us examine the causes which are the most often assigned. Except as to the market purveyor, the civilized man does not shoot or fish for sustenance as the pioneers of old did, and as the savage tribes continue to do. Even in the early days of Greece and Rome, the sport of the chase was a luxury, and not a necessity.

The man does not do it from love of the labor it entails, for it cannot be denied that shooting and fishing demand constant exercise, much of it severe, and all of it fatiguing. And it must be confessed that many men, who are industrious and unremitting in the field, are incorrigibly lazy otherwise and elsewhere.

He does not do it for the sake alone of the beauties of Nature, for many ardent sportsmen are wholly indifferent to the charms of Nature. He does not do it for mere display of skill, for large numbers of those who are most enthusiastic have but little skill, and a considerable proportion have no skill at all.

Neither does he shoot or fish with a view to economy, because at the best shooting and fishing are expensive recreations. He does not do it solely as conducive to health, for the majority of sportsmen are athletes in full possession of physical vigor. Nor yet does he do it actuated alone by the love of victory in an equal contest with a wary foe. Because, how often is it that there is no contest, and the quarry is unsuspecting and unresisting. He does not do it for the sake of companionship in the field, because not infrequently the best sportsmen refuse all company. Nor yet, again, only for rest from the cares of business, or relief from toil, inasmuch as there are many who have no cares of business, and as many more who do not toil, either mentally or physically.

Why, then, is it?

It is difficult to define the feeling which in each particular individual begets the desire. We can only look for the motive or a sentiment which is applicable, as a general statement, to all. It cannot be, as it has often been asserted that it is, a remnant of savagery cropping out through our civilization, for the sportsman is uniformly humane and tender and averse to all cruelty or wanton destruction. And again, it cannot be true, because—and it is at least a remarkable fact—among all nations the desire prevails, and the higher the refinement the more universal the desire is.

When we consider the variety and cost of the appliances required in these sports, the high degree of mechanical skill involved in their construction, the extravagance so frequently indulged in by the wealthy who can afford it, and the outlays incurred by the poor, who cannot, and when we remember that men will persistently violate laws, and risk penalties and punishments that they may shoot and fish, we are forced to admit that they do it, not because of that controllable impulse which we call desire, but because of an instinct which is implanted in our nature—which is irresistible and overwhelming.

But why the instinct?"

Mr. Joe Bassford, Jr. Writes:

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—Too wet to shoot quail! Rain, rain, rain all the time! We uns in the country tired of sitting around the house! Roads too bad to drive anywhere! Disgusted with myself and everybody else, I sent my nephew to bring over the little Beagles. Well, the next day here he comes on the old black mare. Strapped on the pommel of his saddle was a horn as long as my arm. Behind the old mare's heels was the prettiest lot of little dogs I ever saw. Well, there were only twelve of them. I wanted George to stop with me, but no, he wanted to go up and stop with grandpa.

I said, "The old gentleman will go wild to see all those dogs coming to his house." But he would go and go he did, saying he would meet me at 9 A. M next day on the hills.

Well, I was out there, and after waiting a little while I heard the horn toot, and in a few moments I heard these little dogs. Well, there was music in the air, and soon I saw coming my way an old jack rabbit and about 150 yards behind, coming as fast as their little legs could carry them, were Dukey, Dumpy, Dolly, and all the puppies whose names I never heard. Well, to see those little dogs work made me laugh. The old jack rabbit passed within thirty feet of me, and George and Abe, both boys about sixteen years of age, were hollering, "Shoot him, Joe," "Right by you," "Don't you see him?" "What's the matter with you?"

Abe says, "Joe had better go down to the house and take a nap, and not go to sleep up here on the hill, and let a hare run right over him."

But Joe was not asleep. He was quietly enjoying this little scene going on around him. On went the rabbit and on went the Beagles, and I never raised my gun.

Ah! They have lost the track! Well, just see those little devils separate and circle to find that track; and you talk about tail action! Well, if you have ever seen a hungry lamb sucking, it would have reminded you of the tail action of the Beagle when he has lost the track.

Soon old Duke's voice is heard, and signifies he has found it. All the rest go to him as fast as Beagles can go, and almost with one accord the whole pack are in full cry.

Pretty soon "Bang!" goes an old shot gun, and I hear George say, "I got one anyhow, if Joe is asleep."

For a few moments all is quiet. Then here they come again with a fresh rabbit. He comes my way. He stops about twenty yards from me. I raise a thirty-two Winchester, and accidentally kill this one. Well, I sit still, and soon each little Beagle rushes up in full cry, finds the rabbit, takes a bite at him, satisfies himself that the rabbit is dead, and away they all go to find a new rabbit. I sat there on that old stump and killed seven rabbits, and I enjoyed shooting rabbits with the Beagles immensely.

And I would advise you one and all, when you get the blues, when business gets monotonous, when you get tired of doing nothing, when you do not know what to do with yourself, etc., etc., etc., I would advise you to get a pack of those beautiful little beagles, and go shooting rabbits, and after a day of such sport you will find yourself a new man.

I suppose a great many people on this coast do not know what the true Beagle is. If a miniature fox hound can be imagined, the picture will serve pretty well for a Beagle. The dogs weigh from twelve to thirty pounds, and stand from ten to sixteen inches high. They are fine-coated, handsome little fellows, bright-eyed, keen, watchful, with fine noses, and voices that are very loud and musical. They eat but little, are not prone to disease, breed freely, and all in all are well entitled to more general recognition than has hitherto been accorded to them.

Some months ago Mr. H. W. M. Sandbach initiated a Beagle Club movement, and another was begun by Mr. Sanford Bennett, but both schemes seem to have gone by default. If more people could pass an hour in the field with the little Beagles, there would be no difficulty in organizing a club, and the rarest sport would reward the members. If any wandering sportsman happens near my place, I extend an invitation to come in and sit down with me while the beagles drive rabbits our way.

VACAVILLE, Jan. 9, 1889.

Mr. E. F. Preston has sold his interest in the Tule Belle club-house and preserver on the Suisun marsh to Supreme Court Commissioner Robert Y. Hayne. The share of Mr. A. L. Bancroft in the Tule Belle has been bought in by the club.

THE KENNEL.

Dog owners are requested to send for publication the earliest possible notices of whelps, sales, names claimed, presentations and deaths in their kennels, in all instances writing plainly names of sire and dam and of grandparents, colors, dates and breed.

To Occidental Coursing Club Members.

For originality, briskness, pointedness, and general uniqueness, we place the following circular addressed by Secretary J. B. Lincoln, to the delinquent members of the Occidental Coursing Club. It should revive interest and bring in dues immediately. The Secretary says:

"The Club desires to call your attention to the fact that your dues to the Club are unpaid, and that it is particularly desired that you should pay the same without unnecessary delay or inform either the Secretary or Treasurer that you no longer desire to call yourself a member of the Club. We are doing good work in our especial field, and have a gentlemanly clean club to be proud of, but the good work of elevating coursing to its proper field, can be maintained and pushed on only by the assistance of each and every member. It is earnestly hoped you will respond to this call in either one way or the other—by paying your dues promptly, or signifying your indisposition to consider yourself longer a member, as the Club cannot carry a lot of dead wood while there is work for each and every one of us to do.

Our next coursing meeting to be held on February 22, 1889, we desire to make a great success, and to do this, and to sustain the reputation we have already made for ourselves, it is absolutely necessary that the dues owing to the Club should be collected. As a member of the Occidental Coursing Club you ought to be proud of the Club's record and be willing to respond to this call which so intimately concerns each and all of us who is interested in the noble sport of coursing.

This appeal is made by order of the Executive Committee, who hope and feel it will be favorably received by you."

Deaths.

Mr. E. F. Preston, San Francisco, has lost by death an English setter, bitch by Ajax—Dot.

Mr. Henry May, San Francisco, has lost by death, cause, a gunshot wound inflicted by a malicious scoundrel, the English setter Ajax by Calendar—Rose.

Mr. Henry May recently placed his important English setters Ajax and Dot in the hands of Mr. Walters, at Galt, Sacramento County, for breaking. Mr. Walters left them there in charge of his wife, when he went to Bakersfield to train his field trial dogs. The other day some cruel wretch, in wantonness, shot Ajax, filling the poor beast with small shot and causing his death. The dog was kind, and in the habit of staying about home, so that the criminal can have no adequate defense When Mr. Walters returns he will prosecute the shooter, and we hope will succeed in having a heavy penalty put upon him. It is bad enough to wantonly kill any animal, but when the victim is a gentle, intelligent, useful and valuable servant, such as a fine setter is, the offence becomes rank.

Writing of the derivation of the word greyhound, Dr. J. H. Walsh said: Various explanations have been offered of the etymology of the prefix grey, some contending that the color is implied, others that it means Greek (Graius), while a third party understands it to mean great. But as there is a remarkable peculiarity in this breed connected with it, we need not, I think, go farther for the derivation. No other breed, I believe, has the blue and grey color prevalent; and those which possess it at all have it mixed with white, or other color; as, for instance, the blue-mottled harrier, and the blotched blue and brown seen in some other kinds. The greyhound, on the contrary, has the pure or iron grey color very commonly; and although this shade is not admired by any lovers of the animal for its beauty, it will make its appearance occasionally. Hence it may fairly be considered a peculiarity of the breed, and this grey color may, therefore, with a fair show of probability, have given the name to the greyhound.

English Sires.

The London Sporting Life gives the following list of sires whose get have won upward of 4,000 guineas during the season of 1888. Although most of the fashionable sires have maintained their supremacy, the three leaders are, strange to say, indebted to a single horse for their forward positions, viz: Galopin to Donovan, Isonomy to Seabreeze, Bend Or to Orbit. Judging by the returns of the past twenty years, and in spite of the increased value of stakes, there appears to be little prospect for some time of Stockwell's 1866 record of £61,000 being cut, the nearest approach to this extraordinary success being made by Hermit in 1886 with £44,600, but Hermit's grand total is by far the best, amounting to over £200,000 during the past seven years:

A New Race Track To Be Built That Will Outshine Them All.

At last there seems to be a possibility that the much discussed question as to whether the Monmouth Park Association would purchase the Castler farm and build a new track on it or whether some site near New York City would be selected, will be finally settled in a few days, says the Sporting World. It is not general talk here, because it has not been made public yet; but one or two people who are in a position to know the facts say that while the actual purchase of the necessary land has not been made, it will be as soon as certain minor matters are arranged.

It is proposed to make the new track entirely different from any ever seen in this country before, and it will be built on a scale that for grandness and completeness will eclipse anything of the kind ever before attempted. It will be a mile and three furlongs straightaway, and will extend from Little Silver to Eatontown. With a good pair of glasses the entire course will be in plain view from start to finish. The grandstand will be the very best that money and skill can erect, and the stables and everything else about the new grounds will be on the same elaborate scale.

Charles Durfee has decided to sell Del Sur, the well-known stallion, at public auction in New York city, says the Los Angeles Tribune. Del Sur is by The Moor, the sire of Sultan, his dam is Gretchen, by Mambrino Pilot. Del Sur is full brother to the dam of Sable Wilkes, who holds the world's record for three-year-old trotters, with 2:18. Durfee will also send East a carload of Del Sur fillies. The writer was also informed that Hancock Johnson intended to take a carload of Richmond colts and fillies. As Mr. Rose purposes to take four carloads, this will make six carloads in all from Southern California. The sale will be watched with interest by breeders in this part of the hemisphere.

CATTLE.

Utilizing the Buffalo.

It has long been known that buffalo meat commands a remarkable high price, more than double that of other beef, yet the poeple of the west permitted this, the most useful of all wild animals, to become extinct. The American buffalo or bison, Bos Americanus, worthily regarded as the "boss" quadruped of the western continent, which less then a quarter of a century ago could be found roaming over the great central plateau in countless thousands, is to-day on the verge of extinction, says Hoof and Horn. The few that are supposed to be preserved in the National Park at the sources of the Yellowstone are being stealthily shot down by poachers on that preserve, and the very sight anywhere else of a wild buffalo is promptly recorded in the newspapers. Now that the wild buffalo is nearly gone, a keen interest is felt everywhere in its possible domestication and reproduction, either pure or crossed with the common cow.

C. J. Jones, known as "Buffalo Jones" of Kansas, has lately, with characteristic American enterprise, gone eagerly into the collection and crossing of buffaloes, and has met with gratifying success. He has a herd of wild, captured buffaloes and is breeding them to one hundred cows.

But the oldest and most successful demonstration of the possibility of domesticating the buffalo has been furnished by S. L. Bedson, the warden of Stony Mountain penitentiary, twelve miles northwest of Winnipeg, the capital of Manitoba. Stony Mountain is a circular limestone elevation about 100 feet above the surrounding grassy prairie, on which stands the penitentiary, and where in the dead of winter the herd is collected and supplied with prairie hay. At any season they are quieter than the average of range cattle, but a haystack is a great help to this civilization, and they spend a good deal of their time in its vicinity, leisurely regarding their human vistors much the same as other winter fed stock would.

They seem to appreciate the blessings of farm life, when they come in the form of food and shelter. But they are what a Scotchman would call "kittle cattle," and a single stroke of the horn has been known to rip up a horse ridden incautiously too near them. An old buffalo cow has an evil eye at anytime, and in the breeding season, when they retire from the open plain around the penitentiary to the poplar bush at the northeast they have a very uncanny look which does not bear false witness against them. Precedence among the males is gained by pitched battle, but outside the breeding season they are usually on friendly terms and three or four old toughs, and sometimes a solitray one, will stroll away for weeks, paying little heed to the fences of settlers.

The advantages and pecuniary profit probable to the domestication and crossing of the buffalo are very great. A cross with the Galloway will make a very fine robe, and the value of cross-bred robes is quite as high as those from the pure buffalo. A huge cross-bred was slaughtered last Christmas that dressed 1200 pounds, and the robe was worth over thirty dollars. As a fancy article a buffalo head is worth fifty dollars. The meat is more than that from a common ox, and although when the "old Adam" asserts itself and one or two get out on a "picnic" they are not very heartily welcomed by the settlers, their unborn propensity to rove will become toned down, and give little trouble. They and their crosses are equally hardy and pay little attention to the spells of forty-five degrees below zero that visit us once or twice in a year.

Petaluma Holsteins.

Mr. White's Holstein cattle have won wide fame by their presence at the District and State fairs, and are often described by expert beholders, taking into account both the quality of the animal and the evident intelligent care which they have enjoyed, as the cleanest, neatest lot of Holsteins to be seen anywhere, says the Petaluma Argus. They are certainly a credit to the State and their owner. Mr. White's original stock were selected in North Holland by Theodore Koch, from such noted sources as the Jacobus, Leegwater, Pieter and Simon herds. The shipment to this country was made in 1884, and Mr. White made his selection while the importation was in quarantine in New York. The bull Oro Blanco was calved March 23, 1885, and was bred by C. Rus, Haarlemmermeer, North Holland. His sire was Pieter (209 North Holland Herd-book), and his dam Ontong (No. 8,032 Holstein Herd-book). He now stands at the head of Mr. White's herd, and has made a long record as a prize winner during his short career in this State. The lieutenant of Oro Blanco in the herd is Huachuca, a two-year-old of good achievement and promise. Also may be seen three representative cows from Mr. White's herd. Winfridala (No. 8,042 Holstein Herd-book) was calved March 23, 1883, and was bred by J. Hannema, Hains, Friesland. Her sire was Alfred II. and her dam Wietske. As a two-year-old, Winfridala gave 52 pounds of milk a day. Annemie (No. 8,026 Holstein Herd-book) was calved March 27, 1883, and was bred by P. Koppes, Haarlemmermeer, North Holland. Her sire was Bismarck, and her dam Wietske. Annemie made a record of 50 pounds of milk in a day when a two-year-old. Mr. White has had his attention so much engaged in other interests that he has not secured milk records of his cows for a long period, but he is confident that his animals are doing their duty as representatives of a famous deep-milking breed.

CANOEING.

Oakland Canoe Club.

There was the best breeze the canoeists have had for three months last Sunday, and a large fleet was afloat. There is great enthusiasm about next Sunday's badge race, and several new rigs were being tried. Mystic appeared with a new racing mainsail, or rather the old one altered and improved, being now more of a genuine Monican settee than a lateen, it sits like a board and is very handsome. Conchita hoisted Flirt's big sail, and sailed well. Frolic's larger mainsail being under repairs, she was not under her cruising rig, but this did not prevent her maintaining her supremacy. About 11 o'clock there was a beautiful breeze, and Conchita, Frolic, Mystic and Gypsy ran down to the far end of the basin, and then started for a scrub race home. In a few minutes Frolic took the lead, closely followed by Gypsy. Mystic got a chance by a change of wind later, and was really ahead for a short time. Frolic and Gypsy had a pretty race all the way up, the former winning by about three minutes. She also won another race sailed in the afternoon, Mystic second.

The annual meeting takes place next Saturday evening at the club house, when the last year's doings will be canvassed, officers elected, and general business gone into. There is a fair prospect of several new canoes being imported from the East during this year, which will make the competition all the more lively.

In an advertisement on this page will be found an announcement from a Russian gentleman, who is desirous of breaking horses in the style now so much in vogue in that far-off land. "Troikas" is three horses abreast, the middle one being a trotter, while the two outsiders are runners. Some one of California's prominent breeders may desire to secure the services of a good, useful man.

NOONDAY.

Standard No. 10,000.

THIS CELEBRATED TROTTING-BRED STALLION will be limited to 10 mares the ensuing season at Oakland Trotting Park, Oakland, Cal., commencing February 1st and ending July 1st, at $100 the season, with the usual privilege of returning the mare next season if not proving in foal. The names of his patrons will be entered on his book in order of their application. He will be limited strictly to forty mares. Pasturage at five dollars per month, hay and grain extra.

NOONDAY, sired by Wedgewood (692), record, the fourth heat, 2:19, (sire of Favonia, record, fourth heat, 2:14, and Nugget, record 2:26, he the sire of Nettie Le I, four-year-old record 2:23¾), and five others better than 2:30.

First dam Noontide, record 2:20½, by Harold (413), sire of Maud S., record 2:08¾, Maxtie Graham, 2:21¼, and 17 others in 2:30.

Second dam Midnight (the dam of Jay-Eye-See, record 2:10), by Pilot Jr., sire of the dam of Maud S., 2:08¾, Nutwood, 2:18¾.

First dam (the dam of Woodford Mambrino, 2:21), by Woodford (thoroughbred son of Kosciusko), he by Sir Archy.

NOONDAY is well formed, evenly balanced and handsome; his color is dark seal brown, small star, right hindfoot white, 15 1/2 inches high, weight 975 lbs., strong back and good gaited, short and rapid, and will make a fast and game campaigner.

Breeders will please remember that this horse is not owned by me. I have only leased him for two years for the benefit of the State and breeders on account of the speedy lines and blood that this state is in need of, and no stallion now in public service can show a pedigree with such fast records as enrich the blood of NOONDAY.

I will also handle and train a few horses for gentlemen at fair terms. Address

ELECTIONEER STALLION

EROS,

Standard No. 5326.

Electioneer, his sire, has more 2:30 trotters than any living horse, and more 2:30 trotters than any stallion LIVING OR DEAD.

Eros has a record of 2:29¾, made in the fifth and decluing heat against a field of eight horses in his maiden race, and with only four weeks preparation after coming out of the stud.

Progeny.

Eros had last fall but three colts trained; the oldest a three-year-old trotter, an exhibition mile during the San Jose Fair in 2:34, last quarter in 36½ seconds. A two-year-old (timed by the judges) made a mile in 2:46½, and the other two-year old in 2:47. All of these trials being made without a single skip, and none of these colts had then been handled three months from the bitting harness.

TERMS: $50 for the season, from February 1st to July 1, 1889. Due at time of service.

Thoroughbred Stallion

RATHBONE.

RATHBONE IS A VERY HANDSOME SHADE of brown, the only white a small star in forehead. He is of almost unexceptionable form, 15 hands 3 inches in height, of immense power and substance, and also of the highest quality.

He was never in "order" to run, and yet he has shown well, better by far than could have been expected under the circumstances.

March 11, 1886, on the Bay District course, carrying 5 pounds over-weight (125 lbs.) he defeated, in a stake for two-year-olds, Voltigeur, C. H. Todd, Notidle and Leap Year, the b h Bonnie being run in 39½ seconds. He has shown quarters in 23 seconds, and is so stoutly bred that he could hardly fail to go a distance at a high rate of speed.

His blood lines could not be improved. His sire, Young Prince, is the only stallion that I can recall imported from England to the United States with near strains of Stockwell and King Tom blood, these noted horses being the paternal and maternal grandsires of Young Prince. The family of his dam, Lady Amanda, ranks high among the noted clans of America. Malcolm, Regent, Ontario, McWhirter, Lady Middleton, etc. The following is a tabulated pedigree:

RATHBONE.

- Young Prince (imported.)
  - Knowsley
    - Stockwell.
    - Orlando mare.
  - Queen of Spain
    - King Tom.
    - Ma Mie.
- Lady Amanda
  - Hurrah (imported.)
    - Newminster.
    - Jovial.
  - Lady Lancaster
    - Monarch, (imported.)
    - Lady Canton.

Lady Canton, by imported Tranby, and running from there through the noted race-mare Mary Randolph, by Gohanna, to Lord Egremeret's Highflyer mare.

Stockwell, King Tom, Newminster and Monarch, the best sons of The Baron, Rataplan, Touchstone and Emillus, and the dams of the same remove, by Orlando, Jerry (a St. Leger winner), Bay Middleton and imported Tranby, present such a combination of ultra fashionable blood as is rarely equalled. Young Prince was bred by James Smith, England; foaled 1870. See English Stud Book, Vol. XIII., page 363.

With proper mares there is no question that RATHBONE will get race-horses, with a certainty of getting, from any good mares, valuable horses for harness and saddle, with a fair show of a fast trotter, as RATHBONE is a capital road-horse and shows a good gait without any trotting practice further than occasional drives on the road. He is one of the "most disposed" horses imaginable without trick or vice of any kind.

In order to place his services within the reach of those who feel that they cannot pay the high price demanded for fast trotting sires, his services are put at the exceedingly low price of $25 the season.

JOS. CAIRN SIMPSON.

2111 Adeline St., Oakland, Alameda Co.

THIS CELEBRATED TROTTING STALLION WILL make the ensuing season from February 15th to June 15th, 1889, at 2,111 Adeline Street, Oakland.

Terms.

One hundred dollars the season for mares engaged before May 1st, and one hundred and fifty dollars the season after that date. The object of this is to shorten the time in the stud so as to give a better opportunity for training before the Fall Circuit commences. Last year it was the first of August before he was through, and consequently he could not be got into condition in time even for the State Fair. In this connection it will be well to state that there is no deviation from the price, and emphatically no free list. The terms are certainly low for a horse of the class of Antevolo, and there were several applications where the applicants expected an increase of price.

Form and Color.

It is rare to find a horse of such high form, and I am not alone in considering him as being as nearly perfect a type of equine form as was ever seen in a trotting-bred stallion. He is sixteen hands and half an inch in height, 69 inches from point of shoulder to point of buttock, and weighs, in ordinary condition, 1,150 pounds. He is very muscular, limbs as good as the most critical could desire, and as highly finished as a great majority of thoroughbreds. In color he is a rich seal brown, with lighter shading in flanks and muzzle, black legs, mane and tail, small star in forehead and off hind pastern white.

Performances.

He has been eminently of the improving kind. As a yearling he trotted in 3: 2; two-year-old in 2:41; three years old in 2:23¾; four years old in 2:19½, the fastest record for a stallion of that age up to that time, and in his five-year old form he trotted in from 2:16¼ to 2:17 in all of the four heats of the big trot which Harry Wilkes won. As he only made one break in this race, notwithstanding the great speed of the contestants, he must be credited as remarkably "steady," almost phenomenally so for a horse of his age. Had it not been for an accident which temporarily disabled him, it can be stated with confidence that he would have trotted in 2:15 or better while he still ranked as a five-year-old.

In 1887 an injury to his left hind leg, first hurt when a two-year old, incapacitated him from trotting. That injury was below the ankle, and last year when apparently entirely recovered from that, and when he gave promise of doing better than ever before, owing to the track being harrowed very deeply he sprained the suspensory ligament, so that it was slightly bowed about midway between ankle and hock. This was on the 21st of August, and he was walked and jogged, at times being quite lame, until September 19th, when after short brushes, he was on the 22nd given two easy heats in 2:28 and 2:25, "worked out" twice a week, giving two heats at each working in time ranging from 2:17 to 2:21. On the 6th of October I gave him three heats in 2:28, 2:19, 2:17 (several watches made it 2:16½) the last half 1:07½, and going so easily that I felt sure he could trot several seconds faster.

Although I worked him carefully, it was obligatory that he should have some fast work to trot on the 20th, and on the following Saturday I gave him three heats, in 2:24, 2:18, 2:14½, and the next Tuesday 2:26, 2:19, 2:22. He did not show as well in that as before, and though he made a good showing in the National, a wonderful exhibition after the drawbacks, and also his first race for nearly two years, he was evidently "not at himself." I have so much confidence in his speed and endurance that I will name him again in the National if it is gotten up, and will match any stallion heats of two miles for one or two thousand dollars a side to trot in October or November next, and take the chances of his leg standing.

Progeny.

He has only four colts, which were foaled in 1886. Dr. Lilienerantz has two fillies on his ranch at Aptos, D. T. Sexton of San Francisco has a filly, and C. K. Lewis a colt. It was the intention to train the colt, but having hurt his fore leg when a yearling he had to be thrown out. He is quite promising, and though Sunol and other cracks remain in, third payment was made on him in the Stanford Stakes and Occident Stakes. There are quite a number of foals of 1887, several of which have been broken lately, and every one gives good promise of trotting fast. There are also a number of foals of 1888, and, in my estimation, for form, size, and beauty they cannot be excelled by the get of any trotting stallion. That others share in this opinion is evident from the following quotation; "R. E. Bybee says J. B. Haggin has got a last spring colt by Antevolo, son of Election-er, dam Mabel, sister to Beautiful Bells, that is as much superior to other colts as the Jersey Lily is to a Umatilla reservation squaw."—RURAL SPIRIT, Portland, Oregon.

Nearly everyone who owns an Antevolo colt thinks that he has the best, which is a token of their uniformity.

Pedigree.

The most exacting critic, if moderately intelligent, cannot find fault with his blood lines. His sire Electioneer is, beyond question, the greatest trotting sire of any age when all things are considered. His dam Columbine is the only mare which has two entire sons which have beaten 2:20, 2:18, by a six year-old, 2:19½ by a four-year-old. Antevolo stands in the same relation to the thoroughbred as Maud S., Jay-Eye-See, Sunol, Nutwood and many others of first celebrity. In Stud Book form the pedigree is as follows:

ANTEVOLO, brown c h foaled May 12, 1881 bred by Jos. Cairn Simpson, Oakland, California, by ELECTIONEER.

First dam Columbine by A. W. Richmond.
Second dam Columbia by imp Bonnie Scotland.
Third dam Young Fashion by imp Monarch.
Fourth dam Fashion by imp Trustee.
Fifth dam Sometime Blue by Sir Charles.
Sixth dam Reality by Sir Archy.
Seventh dam by imp Medley.
Eighth dam by imp Centinel.
Ninth dam by Mark Anthony.
Tenth dam by imp James.
Eleventh dam by imp Monkey.
Twelfth dam by imp Silvereye.

Pasture at $5 per month on the Oakland Trotting Park, Mr. Hinchman having resolved to pasture the field inside the track this season. It cannot be excelled, the herbage being alfilerilla, wild oats and burr clover, a living stream of clear water running cross the field, and being enclosed by an inner fence. The gate is often shut at night; the animals are as safe with in the enclosure as it is possible to have them in a field. In fifteen years which I have known it, there has not been a serious injury to mare or colt.

THAT IT IS A VERY IMPERTINENT ERROR, AND OF GREAT PREJUDICE, TO THINK THE MANNAGE USELESS.

Many say, that all things in the mannage is nothing but tricks, and dancing, and gamballs, and of no use; but by their leave, whosoever sayes so, is very much deceived: for a horse that is well settled upon the hand, and firm and obedient to the hand and heels, gallops the field, and changes as often, and just as you will, either without the circle, or within the circle. Serpiger, Terra a Terra, the Piroite or what you will: and all is this upon the ground, and everything and particle of it useful; and so useful, that a good horse-man, upon such a horse, would have too much advantage, in conscience, of him that talks against it, either in a single combat or in the wars; for a ready-horse will run, stop, turn, go back; and if he rise, he knows how to come down again, and is so well on the hand, as you cannot pull him over with both your hands; and so obedient, that I will run him on fire, water, or sword, and he shall obey me: and all this cannot be done but by the art of riding, and that in the Mannage.

But, what makes these men speak against it? The first reason is, because they are ignorant, and so speak, as the wisest men in the world must do, when they will speak of anything they know not, and think that talk will carry it: But the main reason is this; They find they cannot ride well; nay, indeed not at all, a horse of Mannage, and they would be the finest men in the world, for all things, though they will take pains for nothing; and because, forsooth, they cannot ride by inspiration without taking pains, therefore it is worth nothing, and of no use: But if everything was naught, that they cannot do, there would be very few things good in the world.

The next thing, is, that they think it a disgrace for a gentlemen to do anything well. What! be a rider. Why not? Many kings and princes think themselves graced with being good horse-men.

Our gracious and most excellent king, is not only the handsomest, and most comely horse-man in the world, but as knowing and understanding in the art as any man; and no man makes a horse go better than I have seen some go under his majesty the first time that ever he came upon their backs, which is the heigth and quintescence of the art; and yet I dare say the king takes it for no disgrace to be so excellent a horse-man. The Duke of York is also a very good horse-man, and both take it for an honor, and no disgrace; and think it a most useful and noble quality for Princes.

The Duke of Mommorancy, Conestable of France, and the first gentlemen of Christendom, was the best horse-man in the world, and to this day the best branches for bits was of his invention called A. La Conestable; and so he devised the best spurs: and never any Esquier rid like him, being certainly the best horse-man in the world, which he thought a grace to him: The Prince of Conde, his grandchild by the Princess his mother, is a excellent horse-man, and thinks it no disgrace to him.

Most of the princes in France highly esteem it, and are good horse men; nay, their King, at this present time, highly esteems it, and is a good horse-man: nor is any gentleman in France esteemed that is not a good horse-man.

The great King of Spain deceased, did not only love it, and understand it, but was absolutely the best horse-man in all Spain.

I may therefore desire these men to be more merciful, and to think it no disgrace, to them, to be horse-men; but still the old business will stick with them, which is, they cannot do it, and therefore it is naught: a very good and senseless reason! He that will take pains for nothing, shall never do anything well; for arts, sciences and good qualities, come not by instinct, but are got by great labor, study, and practice; wherefore these men will none (I thank you) till they be as easily learnt, as the seven deadly sins, railing and wearing fine clothes and feathers.

But let us see now, how these men are on horse-back, and what their horses do under them.

This cavalier seats as far back in the saddle as he can, his legs stretch as far forward before the shoulders of the horse, with his toes out, that he may spur him in the shoulders; and stoops in the back, which they call a comely seat; not knowing how to hold the bridle in his hand, nor guess at any helps at all; and appears on horse-back, as if he were three quaters Foxt, so ridiculous is that seat: and having sent to a saddler, or a bitt-maker, to bitt his horse, all is well.

Being mounted thus, as I tell you, you shall see his ready horse of use, and his horse-manship. When he would turn him on the right hand, the horse doth turn on the left; and when he would turn him on the left hand, the horse doth turn on the right. When he would stop him, the horse runs away. When he would put him forward, the horse runs backward. When he would put him back, the horse rises, and comes over with him, and there the good horse-man lies, and must send for a surgeon, or a bone-setter, if he be not killed: nay, his horse shall neither come near drum, trumpet or colours, pistol, or sword; but he fetches forty figaries to endanger him and his horse: And this is the excellent horse-man, and the ready horse of use. How is it possible to be otherwise, when the horse knows not how to obey either hand or heel, and the horse-man is as ignorant as he?

Whence it follows that there is nothing to make a sure horse, but the mannage.

I would have every horse (that wears a bit) gelding or nag, wrought in the Mannage, to be firm on the hand, both for readiness, and safety, were it for a B. B, judge or lady; for without settling of the hand, they are very unuseful, and dangerous.

I wonder how men are so presumptious to think they can ride as horsemen, because they can ride forward from Barnet to London, which everybody can do; and I have seen women to ride astride as well as they:

They do not think of any art, or trade, as they do of horse-manship, where they are all masters; which doth not prove so when they ride.

I think I have proved sufficiently their error, and ignorance; and as fully proved, that there is no useful horse but those that are made in the Mannage.

The next thing is, to tell you, that corvets and other Ayres settles a horse very well upon the hand; makes him light before, and puts him upon the hanches, which are all useful for a soldier's horse; and makes him stop upon the hanches, which is very useful for a man in arms; for, did the horse stop upon the shoulders, he would give his rider (being armed) such a shock as would make his bones ache, was he never so sound: Nay, to make a horse go in leaps, firm him on the hand, which is good for a soldier's horse.

But, says a gallant, when I should have use of him in the field, then he will be playing tricks:

That gallant is deceived; for the helps to make horses go in ayres, and to make them go upon the ground, are several; and good horse-men have much ado to make them go in ayres, with their best helps; so that, if you let them alone, they will not trouble you; besides, two or three days march will make them, that they will not go in ayres, if you would have them; and they are much the readier to go on the ground: Whereby you see that there is no horse whatsoever can be a good and useful horse, in any kind, with a bit, but what is wrought in the Mannage;

And therefore I advise you, for your safety and use, to ride all horses in the Mannage, and you will find it very true, that there can be no horse else safe and useful; nor can any horse go well in a snaffle, except he be formerly rid with a bit. As for pleasure and state, what prince or monarch looks more princely, or more enthroned, than upon a beautiful horse, with rich foot-clothes or rich saddles; and waving plumes, making his entry through great cities, to amaze the people with pleasure and delight?

Or, what more glorious or manly, than, at great marriages of Princes, to run at the ring, or tilt or course at the field? What can be more comely or pleasing, than to see horses go in all their several ayres? and to see so excellent a creature, with so much spirit, and strength, to be so obedient to his rider, as if having no will but his, they had but one body, and one mind, like a centaur? But above all, what sets off a King more, than to be on a beautiful horse at the head of his army?

Thus it is proved, that there is nothing of more use than a horse of Mannage: nor anything of more state, manliness, or pleasure, than riding; and as it is the noblest, so it is the healthfullest exercise in the world. In hunting, hawking, bowling, shooting, cocking, cards and dice, and many such things, there is no use at all, but merely pleasure:

But in a horse of mannage, both use and pleasure. It is true that if there was nothing commendable but what is useful, strictly examined; we must have nothing but hollow trees for our houses, fig-leaf-breeches for our clothes, acorns for our meats, and water for our drinks; for certainly, most things else are but superfluities and curiosities.

I find fault with no man's delights, and do only vindicate (with truth) my own, since I have been so pressed to it with odd discourses, but I leave every one to his own ways, and his own delights, desiring they will do the like by me, which I shall take for a great favor: But if it chances they will not be so gracious, and just to me, it will grieve me so extremely, that, in my conscience, I shall sleep never the worse.

Most People are very much Deceiv'd, when, if a Horse throws Down his Rider, they not only Laugh at Him, but think to have Reason so to do; Saying of the Best Horse-man in the World, to whom such a Mischance should happen, That he is a Fine Horse man indeed! For they can Swear, that they knew a Horse Threw him. But they must Learn, That a Good Horse-man may be Thrown Down sooner than Ill ones; because Good Horse-men little think of Sitting, and so may be Surprised, their Thoughts being all how to make their Horses go Well, and never doubt Throwing; whereas an Ill Horse-man thinks of nothing but Sitting, for Fear he should be Thrown, and never thinks how to make his Horse go Well; for he Knows not how to Do it: But Holds by the Main, and the Pomel, and his Head at the Horses Head, ready to Beat out his Teeth, and his Leggs holding by the Flank; and is so Deformed on Horse Back, as if he were a Strange African Monster; and the Horse so Disordered, that to see him Sit in that Manner, is the most Nauseous Sight that can be, and the most Displeasing to the Beholders; and were much Better for the Spectators to see him Fall, and for his Reputation, so he received no Hurt by the Fall.

Thus you see, That any Groom, or Tinker, may Sit, and yet be no Horse-man, which is a Greater Business than only Sitting; for a Jackanapes in Paris Garden, when he is Baited with Musled Mastiffs, the Gentleman Sits very Sure, but not very Comely, and in my Conscience is no Excellent Horse-man: Sitting is but One thing in Horse-manship, and there are Thousands of things in the Art.

So if a Good Horse-man be Thrown by Chance, Hath he Lost all his Horse-manship, because he was once Thrown? And is an Ignorant Fellow inspired presently with Horse-manship, because he can Ill-favouredly Cling to the Horse, and Hold on? No, sitting Fast is the meanest thing in Horse-manship, which Comprehends many more of greater Consequence.

General Topics.

During the late war, and especially in 1863 and 1864, St. Louis was as lively a city as there was on the Continent, if not the very liveliest. There was not another city which I visited where money was so plenty in the hands of men who believed that the chief end of life was to crowd as much excitement into every twenty-four hours as it was possible to accomplish. The "California party" had full control of governmental expenditure. Fremont, Blair, Charley Elleard and others, who were residents of San Francisco "early in the fifties," were the big contractors, and from them there was a regular down grade, the lowest level of which were stable boys, who had saved enough of their wages, or who had friends willing to advance the necessary sum which would enable them to go into the country, pick up a cavalry horse or two, when, if they were on the right side of the inspectors, they would double their money. I was informed at the time that Blair, Elleard and Company got the contract to supply Fremont's army with beef at six cents per pound, and sub-let it for just one-half. Three cents on each pound of beef consumed by a large army was rolling out the cash in a stream of greenbacks, and that was only one of the contracts obtained. One I was personally acquainted with. In May, 1864, there was a race meeting to come off on the Abbey track. Inside of the race-course the ground had been sown to rye the fall before, and it had grown to such a height that, apart from being trampled upon, it obstructed the view of the races. The government corral was not far away, and Elleard made an agreement to take the rye when it was cut down. The estimate was that it would yield three tons of dried fodder to the acre, and as the government was paying thirty dollars a ton for hay, Elleard was to receive ninety dollars per acre, when all that he was required to do was to put mowing machines to work, the men from the corral gathering it from where it laid, pitching it into government carts, and there was a return of something over $3000 from an outlay of plowing, seeding, harrowing and cutting it down.

In 1859 I spent a good deal of time in St. Louis, having matched Blackbird against Lily Belle, formerly Fannie Wood, to trot ten miles for a stake of $1,000 a side. I took the horse down the river nearly two months before the date fixed for the race, and stayed until the approach of winter admonished me that if I got to Central Iowa (my home being about the centre between north and south lines, though on the most extreme eastern point) by steamboat, it would not do to delay much longer. I boarded with Mr. Elleard, and having plenty of time on my hands assisted him in his business, or rather did all his writing, including advertisements, notices for newspapers, and wrote reports of the races. We became very intimate, and I was nearly as well posted on his affairs as he was himself, with one exception. I supposed him to have plenty of capital, in fact from his dress, diamonds, horses, and the lavish expenditure of money, that he was a rich man. Never a bill returned unpaid, and when I accompanied him to town champagne was bought by the basket, and forty or fifty dollars for an evenings amusement he seemed to regard as not being at all extravagant. Returning from there one fine October evening, or rather when the noon of night was verging, "in the wee sma' hours," and the full moon "running so high" that it was nearly in the zenith, so that the shadows of the trees which bordered the roadway fell in a black mass around their roots, and the white macadam made from limestone seemed whiter and colder than ever, when 'Charley," who had been silent for some time, abruptly remarked, "You think I am well off, a rich man, eh Joe?" and as my thoughts had been running on what a happy, reckless, devil-may-care fellow my companion was I was really startled at the suddenness of the query. "Of course," I replied. "Well, this afternooon," he said, "I was making an inventory of my debts, and if everything I have in the world were sold, furniture, horses, carriages, jewelry, even my clothes included, at the top price, I would be more than twenty thousand dollars in debt. Were I to whisper on the streets what I have now told you, before the sun would set again the sheriff would be in charge of the Abbey. Fortunately," he continued, "people are of the opinion you held until you heard my confession, and I can borrow of my rich friends so as to keep all tradesmen's bills and rent paid. Were it not that I feel that fortune has something in store for me I should turn over to my creditors—there are not many who hold my paper—all of my property, except enough to pay my passage back to California, and have another trial in that far-off land for fame and fortune."

After the races, which closed the May meeting, 1865, were over, I dined with him in company of several army officers of high rank. Soon after the opening of the war he transferred his lease of the race course to his brother-in-law, and purchased the residence which formerly belonged to a Mr. Good, a prominent attorney of St. Louis. It was a very fine place, with acres of well kept grounds, and the house commodious, though the style of architecture did not comport with the beautiful park like grounds which surrounded it. After his army guests departed, which was quite late in the evening, we sat in the library, when with the same abruptness he displayed on the former occasion, he said: "You remember the conversation we had on the road that moonlight night, more than five years ago, when I gave you the information that I was so far under water that most men would have sank like a stone, and all that saved me was a natural bouyancy of disposition, and I may add the affair which you also witnessed not many days after our midnight ride. The few thousands of dollars I won from the New Orleans sport enabled me to pay the only man among my creditors who showed a disposition to call in his loans, and from that time on I have prospered." "I will show you," he resumed, what the good dame has done for me." He unlocked and opened the door of a safe which was in the room and took out a draft on the Treasury of the United States for more than six hundred thousand dollars, which he informed me was not nearly all of his means. Again, he continued, "I feel that in trusting my secret to you, and the words of cheer you spoke had a good deal to do with my abandonment of the project to return to California, and the grand stroke of luck so soon thereafter, put it in my power to remain without any suspicions of my real circumstances.

The stroke of luck he spoke of came about in this way. There had been a dull racing day. The fields were small, and in each contest an animal of such decided superiority that there was little betting. The last heat was decided long before sunset, and there was a knot of men, among whom was my friend, standing at the bar and shaking dice, the stakes being a dollar each and the lowest man to pay for the drinks. A big gambler from New Orleans was a looker on, when, with a look of disdain, he said: "That is all you St. Louis chaps are fit for to throw high-die for a picayune a throw. I have been here a week and cannot get a chance to win or lose the amount of my hotel bill, to say nothing of other expenses." Keeping on in a strain of still more derogatory charges, with an unusual accompaniment of oaths, Elleard asked him what he proposed to do. "Anything," he replied, "where there is a chance to lose or win money. I will throw dice from one hundred dollars a cast to as much more as any man wants to make it." Without replying, Charley opened the safe which was in the corner of the room, pulled out a drawer which was filled with bank notes, and counted one thousand dollars, which he laid on the counter. The New Orleans man did the same. "Which shall throw first?" asked Elleard. "You begin," was the reply. There was no more of a tremor in Charley's hand than when shaking for the dollars, and when the box was lifted there was far above an average of spots disclosed. It would have been the biggest kind of luck to have beaten the throw, and it was not at all surprising that, big sport as he was, there were nervous twitchings of lips and eyelids, and an involuntary shake of his hand when he rattled the bones in the cup. He lost and demanded another bout. That he also lost, when the third went to his credit, and after that victory and defeat alternated for some time. At last it settled in favor of Charley, who won all of his opponents ready money, but the other, telling him that he had money in a St. Louis bank which he would draw his check against, the game went on. All one way, however, and when the loss was augmented by a debit of $5,000 he surrendered, far from being the bold, big man he was when casting slurs on the picayune gamblers. Next morning I asked Charley if it would not be well to get the check cashed. "Not a bit of danger," he said; "I know Mr. —— well, and his word can be depended upon with as much confidence as a bond duly sealed, signed and delivered. If that five thousand dollars were all he had on deposit, not a cent would be drawn if even he knew that I would not present mine for a week. He is generally more quiet, but I rather think that he had taken too many drinks at the bar under the stand, and the boys have given him the wrong bottle."

Genial Jerry Millspaugh, superintendent of the Abbey track, and Elleard's general factotum in most of his outdoor affairs, brim full of good nature, always ready to oblige or grant any favor that was within his power to bestow! Men who are verging on three score and ten will recall their boyhood's days, with visions of Raymond and Millspaugh's menagerie, and Jerry was prone to tell long stories of when he was on the road. An elephant was his prime favorite, and he seemed firm in the belief that the animal realized every word he said, responding with trunk pantomime, twinkles of the small eye, and expressive flapping of its big ears. Jerry was known to nearly every resident of St. Louis, and was a special favorite with those who stopped at the Abbey. Life on the road had developed a faculty of drinking an incredible quantity of stimulants, and although I had known men engaged in the lumber districts of Pennsylvania who could manage from a quart to half a gallon a day, (whisky was pure then, and only cost from seventeen cents to a quarter of a dollar a gallon), the best of them would have met their match in Jerry. I have known him to take a drink with an acquaintance, and if another came in while the glasses still stood on the bar the drink was repeated, and it was long odds that if he started to the stable, before he got half way across the yard, he would be brought to a halt with the familiar salutation, "Come, Jerry," and back he always came in response to the invitation. I won a small wager that he would drink forty or more times from morning till he retired for the night. The bar-keepers were to throw a poker check into a cigar box every time that Jerry took a drink, and fortune favored me, as there were more than an average attendance to see the horses exercise in the morning, and the afternoon was so pleasant that the road drivers were out in full force. After a few cocktails in the morning, he settled on Hostetter bitters, and I felt safe as to the results. When he bid us good night, there might be a little thickening of the tongue, and he was somewhat more careful in measuring his strides, and that was all. Sixty-three was the count, so that I won hands down.

At that time, 1859, there lived in St. Louis a Mr. J. C. K——. When a boy he had ridden Reel, and many of the old-time celebrities, and he was fond of making matches, and took great pride in the acuteness he showed in getting the best of the bargain. He was an adept in irritating men into a match, which in their cooler moments they would readily see that the odds were extremely long against them, and forfeits would be paid. There came from Philadelphia a party with several trotters, among them a trotting stallion named Warrior. K—— was a sharer in the stable secrets, and day after day he was offering to wager that Warrior could beat any stallion in the Abbey boxes. He became tiresome in his offers, and aggravated the owners of stallions especially with his offensive remarks. There was also at that time a five-year-old pacing stallion, which was well known as the Zuler colt, but very few were aware of his true name, which was Missouri Chief. George Evans, who has been a resident of California for many years, was a room-mate of mine, and I suggested to him that we should have a little fun with K——, as I was satisfied that he would fall into the trap, which was set as follows: George was to make the match and call upon me to write the contract, which I would frame so as to permit any harness gait, and it was not long before K—— set his foot in it. The only haggling was the amount of the stake, which K—— insisted should be $1000 a side, George favoring half the sum. K—— carried the point. $100 each was put as the first installment, $400 more to be posted in a specified number of days, and the balance when the drivers were "weighed in." K—— was inquiring of every one he thought likely to know what stallion Missouri Chief was, without eliciting the desired information. The time for the second payment was closely at hand, and the Warrior party were beginning to get nervous. He was described in the contract as a bay stallion, but no one could tell him what particular bay stallion was the one meant. At last he met Jerry Millspaugh, and after the usual course of drinks he asked him if he knew a bay stallion called Missouri Chief, informing him of the match made with Evans and his suspicions that I had something to do with it, in which case he thought it probable that it was a Chicago horse brought there for the purpose of beating Warrior. "Not a bit of it," replied Jerry; "he is that big-headed pacing colt of old Zuler's." He was at least five s conds in a mile faster than Warrior, and he recognized at once that under the contract he was eligible to start. Elleard was stakeholder, and calling on every one to come in he authorized Charley to give George the forfeit, and told the barkeeper to "set them up for the whole crowd." It was no part of the scheme to keep the money, so that George refused positively to accept it. K—— was just as stubborn, so Elleard cleared away the difficulty by compromising that it should be spent for a dinner, the guests to be selected by the parties to the contract. Both horses came to California, Missouri Chief being the sire of Nimrod, one of the great pacers some twelve years ago, and I have been informed that Hiram Woodruff, owned by Cornelius Stagg, was Warrior under a change of name.

It was in 1859 that Eoff "carried" Princess from here East. She had been "hippodroming" with Flora Temple in the East, and, by the way, the first regular business hippodrome was inaugurated by Eoff when he made so much excitement with "California Patchen." Never before was a horse of his caliber so over-rated; not one so shrewdly managed as the big bay from the Occident. Princess, too, was handled with consummate skill, and when it seemed that people must have been aware that she could not campaign with Flora, Eoff had tact enough to make it appear that it suited his book to have her beaten, rather than the onus should be thrown on the mare. She lost condition, however, so completely, that she could not make any kind of a showing, Ike Cook being substituted, who was driven by Eoff, and to gratify people who had a strong desire to see the celebrated California mare, she was named on the bills, though driven by the man who took care of her. McMann and Eoff had been giving exhibitions in the towns of the upper Mississippi, Eoff arriving at the Abbey the afternoon that Blackbird was to meet Lily Belle, and he came to the stall and requested a look at the horse. He was stripped, and Eoff, running his hands over his sides and quarters, feeling his neck, and passing his hand down his legs, remarked, "He looks like a four-mile racehorse, but don't you think he is too low to trot?" Not at all surprising he thought so. Although so hearty a feeder that from sixteen to eighteen quarts of mixed feed, i. e., three parts of chopped oats to one of winnowed hominy, with the scantest allowance of pulled hay or stemmed cornblades, he was "worked" so much under heavy clothing, sent along when not clothed mile after mile, with long walks morning and evening, and that without a leg "filling" or causing a disinclination to eat, though every rib showed like those of a skeleton if covered with thick satin, as notwithstanding that kind of treatment his coat was glossy and his eye clear. The bell rang to call the horses, and while his groom was putting the harness on, I informed Eoff of what he could do and the confidence I had in beating the mare. He thanked me for the information, saying that he had been backing the mare, and that he would "get out," which there were plenty of chances to do, as she was the favorite, at odds.

When Landy, the groom of Blackbird, took him by the bit to lead him out of the stall, I heard a great commotion in the yard, and stepping outside Eoff stood a few yards from the stall door with a cocked pistol in his hand. Some distance away was Otis W. Dimmick, one of the celebrated drivers of the time, with a crowd around him, some of them trying to give him weapons, among them K.——,who figured in the Missouri Chief affair, with a pistol in each hand. Telling Landy to put the horse back and shut the door, I drew away from the probable line of fire and awaited the result. Eoff was in a frenzy of passion, his face without a trace of color and his eyes flashing with rage "Do not come a step nearer you—— You crippled me when you knew I was unarmed, and I have sworn to kill you if you ever came within range of my pistol." Elleard opportunely came upon the scene, and placing himself in front of Eoff told him that he would not permit an attack, and that he (Eoff) should have sense enough to know that if a fracas occurred, whichever way it terminated, Eoff would be the sufferer. "You ought to know Jim," he said, "that you are none too well thought of here, and should you kill Dimmick the people who are here will hang you to a branch of one of these trees, if they have to take your own reins for a halter. Should Dimmick kill you it is doubtful if even he is arrested, dead sure that no punishment will follow." "Very likely," Eoff responded, "but that will make no difference if he comes in my way, and (addressing Dimmick) I give you warning to prepare yourself as I shall certainly kill you or you will kill me should you approach me too close." The buildings and stables were on the backstretch of the Abbey Track, there being seats over the boxes for those who wanted to see the horses exercise without going across the track. Dimmick took that for his point of observation, Eoff in the vicinity of the judges' stand.

At that time Blackbird was the worst "puller" I ever knew. He had been harnessed once when I bought him, and the day the purchase was effected I drove him around a half mile track at Maquoketa a few times. He was left with the only man who claimed to be a trotting horse trainer then in Iowa, 1856, and he was possessed with the old idea that in order to trot fast a horse must pull on the bit with a force that only a very strong man could exert. With a temperament such as Blackbird had that sort of tuition resulted in nullifying the strength of his driver with any ordinary bit, and in a match on which I lost one thousand in cash, a pair of mares and an acre lot in a small village, with a blacksmith shop and house, he drove him with what was called in that country "a mule bit." That was in 1857. In 1858 I sent Blackbird to George Bidwell who was then in Chicago, and that fall I commenced driving him myself. Although he was a great deal easier to drive, I was fearful that for so long a race as that with Lilly Belle, my arms would give out, and I engaged James Cowan to drive the match. He was a large powerful man, weighing something over 180 pounds, and had quite a high reputation as trainer and reinsman. He was so well pleased with the horse that he wagered four hundred dollars, getting five hundred against it. The match was made "good day and track," the date fixed upon, the 26th of September. There came a soaking rain two days before, and also another the night previous, continuing until the early morning of the day. The Lilly Belle party proposed that the race should be trotted and I assented. When Cowan heard of it he expressed his dissatisfaction emphatically, claiming that the mare had much the best of it. Blackbird had a long stride and without much knee action, while the mare was the reverse. I felt confident that he was much stronger than the mare, and also that his wonderful endurance would more than counterbalance the advantage the mare had. After a good deal of argument, Cowan became somewhat mollified, though still grumbling over my foolish agreement.

It was a fearful track. There was a cut on the backstretch which exposed the subsoil, a tenacious yellow clay, and that material had been used to fill a hollow which lay beyond the excavated portion. From the time the rain ceased falling there was bright sunshine, which caused the clay to be more "holding" than would have been the case had the rain continued until the time of starting. When the horses were on the heaviest part of the track the pop of their feet could be plainly heard at the judges' stand as they were drawn from the bed of clay, which effectually excluded the air until the feet were raised, and the rush of the aerial fluid was the cause of the sound. I advised Cowan to let the horse go along at his own pace, as an endeavor to restrain him would be likely to make him pull harder, Before the start Eoff had forced the betting from "even money" to 100 to 50 on Blackbird, and when one mile was trotted he was offering 100 to 30. The mare led for three miles, as Cowan thought it would not possibly do to let him set the pace, and as he came past me at about the four mile distance mark I saw that the restraint was overtasking him, and implored Cowen to give him his head. The mare was several lengths in the lead, and her driver, Frank Webb, nodded to an acquaintance, an agreed signal for him to bet. Eoff was then betting 100 to 15, and he and the man who had the benefit of Frank's tip were busy putting up the money as fast as Eoff could count his hundred and deposit it in the stakeholder's hands. The fifteen dollar end was less troublsome to handle, and before the hundred was counted a shout attracted the taker of the long odds. Blackbird was lapped on the mare before the turn was made, they trotted head-and-head until the cut was reached, and the clay fairly broke the mare's heart. The horse opened a gap of one hundred yards in going a quarter of a mile, and when she was finishing her fifth mile he was coming up the stretch on the sixth. The mare was stopped when she got around to the stables, being so much fatigued that she could hardly stand while being unhitched from the sulky. Apparently it was easy exercise for Blackbird, he not showing a particle of distress in wind or limb.

I advised Elleard to advertise the race between Flora Temple, Ike Cook and Princess as an "exhibition of speed," which was the first time I ever knew the phrase to be used in a trotting race. It was generally known that Princess was so much out of condition that she could not trot within twenty or thirty seconds as fast as Flora, and Cook was not credited with being any where near the mare, or nearly as good as he showed himself to be on that day. The first heat Eoff drove him to a very light sulky which was made for Princess, the very lightest I had ever seen up to that time. Ike Cook showed so well in scoring that a few small amounts were put on him against long odds on Flora. Ike kept quite close to her until they got past the three quarter pole, when some were enthusiastic enough to think that the son of Abdallah had a show for the heat. A few seconds, however, proved how futile the thoughts, as Eoff was seen to pull him for the outside fence, and after stopping the horse jogged him quietly home. There was a torrent of denunciations. Take him out and hang him. Break the ——— ——'s neck, with a variety of equally choice epithets. There was a rush for the track in front of the judges' stand, and a good many thought that Eoff would drive around the town to the stables and keep out of the way. He brought the horse to a stop about 100 yards from the wire, and as he turned around, I spoke to the other two judges, Gordon Abrams and John M. Cannon, that we must step down to protect him, as it was evident that something had gone wrong. Eoff drove under the wire asking permission to dismount, and though his face was very pale, he gave no evidence of fear, and not a man offered to interfere with him. The trouble came from the shafts springing so much when he took a pull at Ike for a brush down the stretch, which brought the cross-bars (that was before the day of curved axles) so low that the horse struck his hocks against them, and seemed to be on the point of kicking and running away. Having been advertised as an exhibition of speed, we ruled that it was only right to give what the two dollar tickets presumably guaranteed, a chance to see Flora go three heats, so let Ike start again. The second heat the horse was hitched to his own sulky, and pressed Flora to make the fastest time which had ever been made on the track, and if my memory be correct the fastest ever witnessed in St. Louis, although it would be slow nowadays, 2:26.

The Australian Mare Won.

By "Hidalgo."

An occasional correspondent of the Breeder and Sportsman, who writes under the nom de plume of Hidalgo, has been favoring the Sportsman of Melbourne with some characteristic sketches, one of which is given below.

It was on the last day—Steeplechase day—of the world-renowned Flemington meeting. Blue Mountain was king of the hurdles, and Savanak had redeemed the hopes formed of him in the Nursery Handicap. A party of gentlemen were seated for a glass of champagne under the jockeys' stand. It was a white-haired man who spoke.

"No, sir; the Melbourne cup is a great sight, but it has neither raised nor lowered my estimate of Australian horses. I have had a high belief of their quality ever since I saw an Australian mare win a race near Los Angeles, about thirty-three years ago." "I was not aware that any Australian horses had been taken to California prior to Sir Modred and Darebin," said the manager of the Princess Theatre. "Oh, yes, away back," replied the old man, "there was a man named Cooper Turner, who came from Sydney in 1852, with three horses. One of these was a black mare called Black Swan, and a bay stallion called Chloroform. Both were by Ether, who was quite a favorite sire in those days. The other was a gray gelding called Ito, whose pedigree I have forgotten. In those days there were no fixed events, and everything was the grossest kind of a job. That was not Turner's style of racing, so he sold his horses and started back for Sydney. I have never seen him since."

"Well, as there is no more American history for him, how about the horses?" asked Mr. Dot Boucicault. "I am coming to that, my son," said the old man. "The stallion Chloroform was sold to a penurious old Dutchman named Weber, at Stockton, but he got a great many servicable horses in spite of his owner's lack of enterprise. Ito was sold to Denis Brodigan, who kept the City Hotel, in Sonora, and died in the grand old Tuolumne mountains. Black Swan was sold to Don Ignacio Sepulveda at Los Angeles, who kept her along about a year, and tried to get on a match with Don Pio Pico's horse Roper (which is Spanish for pig driver), but old Pico was too smart for him. Pico had a daughter, however, who lived with a Missouri gambler, named Boone Helms. One day Boone Helms disappeared suddenly, and it was said that he had gone to Mexico. About seven weeks after that he came back with a small brown gelding called Sarco, whose stifles were covered with Mexican brands, and whom he was not afraid to match against old Swan. About this time there was a trainer named James Willett, who had no superior in bringing a horse up to concert pitch. He had with him a lieutenant named Dave Tidwell and a rider named Aleck Marshall, who was born in Sydney of convict parents. There never was a bigger rascal on the turf than Marshall, but he was afraid of Dave Tidwell's pistol and Jim Willett's knife. He would have "given the double" to anyone else, but with them he was straight enough. The match was made for 10,000 head of cows and bullocks (to be appraised before the start), and the race was to be for a run of three miles to a turning post, and three miles back."

"God bless my soul," continued the old man, as he drew his pocket handkerchief over his brow, "I never saw such big betting, and as little money in sight. Those Spaniards would bet a thousand head of horses as though they had just stolen them. It was a red hot day, and Dave Tidwell took a bucket of water in a wagon and went down to the turning-post. The old mare went off about two lengths behind Sarco, but Aleck could not hold her, and she came to the stake about forty yards ahead of Sarco. Dave Tidwell motioned Aleck to stop, and took out the bucket of water, with which he sponged out her mouth and washed off her jowls. He let her go again about seventy yards behind Sarco, but she soon headed him, and won as she liked by a quarter of a mile. Old Sepulveda pulled the saddle off her, and swore she should never race again. I tried twice to hire her for breeding purposes, but the old Mexican would never let her go off his ranch. After the thing was all over, it leaked out that Boone Helms had never been in Mexico at all, and Sarco was no Mexican horse. He was a Kentucky bred horse called Lithgow, a grandson of Priam, who could stay all day long, but the old Black Swan had too much speed for him."

"Did she ever leave any valuable progeny?" asked one of the gentlemen present.

"None worth mentioning," replied the old man. "She died in obscurity, and Willett and Tidwell are long since buried."

"Whatever became of Boone Helms?"

"He was hanged by the vigilantes at Helena, Montana, about an hour before daylight," said the old man, as a shadow crept over his face and his voice sank to a low whisper. "About sixty men took him out of jail and hanged him to a juniper tree. I—I—I saw him die!"

The Montana Agricultural, Mineral and Mechanical Association Programme.

The twentieth exhibition of the Montana Agricultural, Mineral and Mechanical Association will be held at Helena from August 26th to 31st inclusive, but a spring meeting will be held in July from the 3d to the 6th inclusive.

The New Selling Race Rule.

At the last meeting of the Turf Congress there was passed the following rule:

"In all selling races the winner shall be sold by secret sealed bids, to be deposited in a place designated by the Association, within fifteen minutes after the close of the race, the bids to be opened by the presiding judge, and the surplus to be divided between the second horse and the Association."

"Jim Watson," says, in the Philadelphia Press, of the new selling race rule adopted by the Western Turf Congress: "Such a rule out-herods Herod in the way of turf legislation, and it can be characterized as nothing but downright robbery. The object is to squeeze a few hundred dollars more into the club treasury than can be done by open bidding. If an owner of a horse entered to be sold at $1,000 fears that some one may make a bid, he may offer $1,500 rather than lose his horse. The opposition bids may not exceed $1,100, and the difference of $400, obtained from the owners by means of the sealed bid, can only be characterized as extortion."

The New York World says: "The rule is scarcely likely to be adopted in the East, where selling races invariably bring out good fields, making heavy betting, in which the bookmakers have a chance to square their books after an overwhelming favorite has won the stake feature of the day."

Another view of the matter is, however, taken by another writer, who says:

The new law in regard to selling races recently adopted by the Turf Congress, at first looked upon with disfavor by turfmen generally, is now finding many defenders who claim that it will be a great benefit to prove owners of selling platers, not able to win stakes or weight for age races. They assert that during the past season many stake winnings and high-class horses were entered in selling races and backed heavily in the books by their owners and protected when sold, mostly by combination and understanding with the parties who ran second, and only occasionally had to pay a small advance over their entered price. The rule, it is hoped, will tend to break this up, and give a chance to the horses who are in reality selling platers. A prominent Eastern owner voices the sentiment that every horse entered in a selling race should be liable to be claimed at his entered price whether winner or non-winner, and thinks it would be better if the owner of the second horse did not receive a portion of the surplus, which should be divided between the association and the fund for sick and disabled jockeys.

But yet I must Tell you, I never knew in my Life, a good Horse-man Thrown, but I have known many Presumptuous ignorant Fellows get Falls; but, as, if a good Horse-man by Chance be Thrown, he doth not Lose all his Horse-manship with that Fall, if he be not Kill'd; so an Ignorant man, if he Sits, is not Presently infused with Horse-manship: For it is a Mistake as Ridiculous as it is Common, to take Sitting Fast on Horse-back for the whole Art of Horse-manship.

Old Grison, and many Italian Authors, would have a Bardel, which is a Straw Saddle, set first on a Colts Back, and nothing but a Rope Cavazon on his Nose; which is to no Purpose in the world, but Loss of Time: Then they will Trot him two or three Years up Hills, and down Hills, to Stop him; which is to Less Purpose, and more Loss of Time.

They would have a Circle, or Ring, as they call them, of an Acre of ground in Plow'd Land, to make a Horse go a Hundred Turns in it, which is worse than to Ride a Journey of Thirty miles; and I wonder what Horses they had in those Dayes; for I am sure, Those we have now, are not Able to do it.

They Teach to Ride one Horse two or three Hours at a time, when one may well Ride half a Dozen at least in an Hour, and give them sufficiently Enough.

For their Single Turns, and Double Turns, call'd Radopiare, they are Ridiculous, and so is the Repolone, which is to Gallop him Half a mile, and then Turn him Ill-favouredly and False: And their Several Mannages of Metzo Tempo, Tutto Tempo, and Contratempo, are no Better.

For a Resty Horse they Raise a whole Town with Staves to Beat him, with many Curious Inventions, with Squirts, Fire, Whelps, Hedg-hoggs, Nailes, and I know not What. And the fame they do Before a Horse that Runs Away, as well as to the Resty Horse Behind.

Then for Spurring, the Bunching Stroke, and the Clinching Stroke; and if he will not Endure the Spurs, Boots stufft with Straw, and Spurs at them, to Hang at his Sides, (which is not worth a Straw); and the Chambetta, which signifies nothing.

For a Horse that is Afraid, and Starts, they appoint Whirlegiggs of several Colours, which will make him Ten times Worse. And to lay Stones in his Way, and a Hollow Ditch to Ride him in, are Lamentable businesses in Horse-manship: And they have as many Foolish Wayes for the Credensa, which shall never Cure him of that Vice.

They Bid us take Heed, by any Means, Not to make the Horse too Weak-Neckt; which is a Prime Note! But Mr, Blundevile did not Know, that all Horses are a Stiff-necked Generation.

Mr. Pagano would never Use his Horse to any thing but a Walk, or a Trot at the most; wherewith (I am sure) he shall never Dress a Horse perfectly; and yet (sayes Mr. Blundvile) it was a Wonder to all Beholders, to see, That in Eight Dayes, he would make him Run a Carreer perfectly, which I will Undertake to have done the First Morning that ever he Ran.

Speaking of his Capriole, he mistakes the Ayre, as well as the making of the Horse.

For Corvets, Mr. Blundevil did not Understand it (nor his Master Grison belike) when he sayes, The Spaniards take Delight to make their Horses go in Corvets, which never Spaniard yet could do; but he takes Trampling, and Prauncing, for Corvets, wherein he is much Deceiv'd; for Corvets is the Hardest Ayre in the World, which no Horse can go, unless he be perfectly within the Hand, and the Heels, and upon the Hanches; which is not Trampling.

To Ride Short, he calls after the Turkish Fashion, wherein he is Deceived; for it is A La Genette, which is the Spanish Fashion too; and to Ride Short in Corvets is his Mistake, for I would Ride Longer in Corvets than any other Ayre. He is also Mistaken, when he sayes, He would not have above Two Horses in Her Majesties Stable to go in

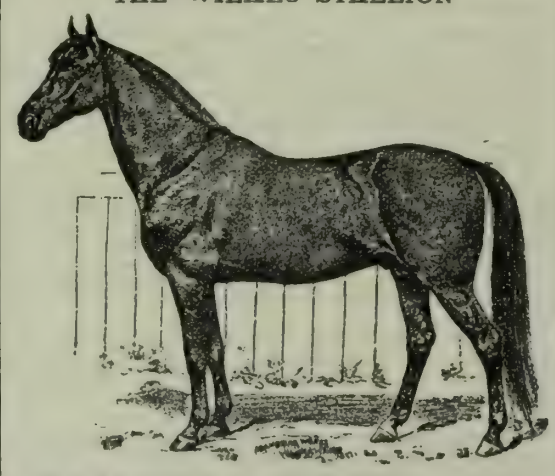
The Thoroughbred Stallion JUDGE McKINSTRY

Will make the Season of 1889, from March 1 to July 1, at San Felipe Rancho, near Gilroy.

PEDIGREE.

Foaled 1879, by Grinstead or Thad Stevens, dam Katy Pease; second dam Minnie Mansfield by imp. Glencoe; third dam Allegrante by imp. Young Truffle.



DESCRIPTION.

JUDGE McKINSTRY is a bright bay with black points, 15¾ hands in height, of a conformation combining power and speed. His breeding is one that cannot be excelled. The fam lies on both sides being noted for their gameness and fleetness. Speakin of JUDGE McKINSTRY, Matt Storn, the well-known trainer, says: "He is the fastest race-horse I ever saw on the Sacramento track. He has shown me trials that were marvelous, one especially of a mile and a quarter that was ahead of the present record." He was started in several races when not in condition to run, and even then developed an amount of speed that is characteristic of the noted families from which he descends. His performances are too well known to need repetition here. Good judges of horses state positively that there can be no doubt of his sire, as he is a perfect picture of Grinstead, but rule compels us to name both sires.

TERMS: $75 payable when the mare is moved from ranch, or, $100, with the usual privilege. Good pasturage, $3 per month. Mares at owners risk. All communications must be addressed to

MAMBRINO WILKES 6083,

Sire of Gus Wilkes, 2:22; Alpheus, 2:2 ; Balkan, 2:29½, three-year-old; John O'Brien, lapped out the winner in 2:36 as a three-year-old; H. A. W.'s Black Colt, trial 2:.9 with very little work as a four-year-old.

Will remain in the future at San Miguel Stock Farm, Walnut Creek, Contra Costa County.

DESCRIPTION.

MAMBRINO WILKES is a black horse, 16 hands high, and considerably longer than his height; has immense muscular development and weighs 1,200 pounds. He has the utmost symmetry of proportion and elegance of finish. No competent judge who has seen this horse has failed to pronounce him a perfect individual, and his breeding is certainly fashionable enough to satisfy the most fastidious. His colts are large, stylish and handsome, and Balkan has been pronounced by many the most stylish trotter on the turf.

PEDIGREE.

Sired by George Wilkes, dam Lady Chrisman by Todhunter's Mambrino; second dam by Pilot Jr.

Todhunter's Mambrino by Mambrino Chief, dam Ripton's dam by Hunt's Commodore, son of Mambrino, by imp. Messenger; second dam by Potomac, son of imp. Messenger.

George Wilkes sired 65 colts that have beaten 2:30. Of these 39 have average records of 2:23, 14 of 2:19 and 12 of 2:18.

TERMS.

Mares from a distance will be received at the Dexter Stables, Oakland, or Livery Stable, Martinez, the owner notifying Smith Hill, Superintendent at the farm. Good pasture and plenty of water. For the purpose of placing the service of a Wilkes within reach of breeders, the same rate will be maintained as last year, to wit, $75 for the season. Although it is not admitted thereby that this horse is inferior as a producer to the horses whose fees are placed at from $150 to $500.

BALKAN,

Three-year-old Record 2:29 1-2; trotting many heats in private taster, when he did not obtain a record.

PEDIGREE.

It will be readily seen that this colt is from strong producing lines on both sides. Fanny Fern having produced Mollie Drew, May Queen, Onyx and Fred Arnold, all noted trotters and all by different sires.

This colt will be kept at the Oakland Trotting Park, and will be stinted to ten approved mares at $10. for the season.

MORNINGTON.

Bred by J. H. ANGAS, Esq., Collingrove, Angaston, SOUTH AUSTRALIA.

MERRYMAKER.

Merrymaker, bay colt, 4 years old. His sire, Lord Salisbury, imported at a cost of 1,500 guineas from Scotland, and numbered 1,205 in Clydesdale Stud Book, gained first prize as a yearling at Ayr, in 1876, and first prize at Andrussan. As a two-year-old he gained first prize at Kilmarnock, with gold medal for best horse in the yard; and first prize at Ayr and Dalry same year. First prize at Glasgow, first prize at the Royal Show, Liverpool, and first prize at the Highland Society's Show, Edinburgh, and since landed in New Zealand has been placed first every time exhibited in Otago.

HAVELOCK.

Havelock, rich bay horse, five years old, by Robin of Staywood Park, who was got by the far-famed Rantin' Robin (imported from Scotland, and numbered 685 in Clydesdale Stud Book), and out of the prize mare, Nelly (imported from Scotland by the celebrated breeder, R. Brodie, Esq.), winner, among other honors, of the second prize at the Highland Society's Show, Edinburgh. Rantin' Robin, (685, C.S.B.), winner of first prize at the Highland Society's Show at Dumfries in 1870.

Havelock gained two first and one second prizes at Natimuk, first prize at Edenhope, and second prize at Mount Gambier.

FASHION OF THE DAY.

Fashion of The Day is a beautiful bright bay, six years old, with good flat bone, plenty of fine, silky hair, grand action, and a fine temper. He is by the far-famed horse Earl of Barfolo, who was by Old Victor (imp.), out of Damsel, by Comptroller, (imp.)

EMULATOR.

Emulator is a grand bay colt, foaled 5th November, 1885. His sire, Rantin' Robin (imported from Scotland, and numbered 685 in S.C.S.B.), as a yearling and two-year-old was distinguished as the winner of many first prizes at Kilbride open competition and other shows. As a three-year-old he gained the Selkirk premium of £40, and third prize at the Highland Society's Show. As a four-year-old he gained the Midlothian premium of £50, and the same year gained the Highland Society's first prize at Dumfries.

PRIDE OF ALL NATIONS.

Pride of all nations is a handsome bay colt, two years, by Sir William (imported from Scotland), winner of first prize at Stranraer as a yearling, and second prize at same show, open to all Scotland, as a two-year old. Grand sire Lord Lyon, 489, C.S.B.; gg sire Hercules, 378, C.S.B.; ggg sire Rob Roy, 714, C.S.B.

These are all pure Clydesdale stallions, and are the finest ever imported to California. They may be seen at the Bay District Race Track. Prices and any information regarding them may be obtained from the owner, JOHN TRESTAIL on the grounds, or from

Grim's Gossip.

Liberty, who won the St. Louis Futurity last year, has a bad leg and has had to submit to treatment with the firing iron.

Among the gossip picked up at the track is a rumor that Cy. Mulkey will train the Babb stable during the coming year.

Mr. P. Quinn, manager of the Eureka race track, has been very ill at Rohnerville, to which place he had gone for his health.

The Directors of the Rochester Park Association will repeat this year the Flower City Guarantee Stake of $10,000, open to all.

Robert Bonner recently remarked, "as the owner of Maud S., I am free to speak. I consider Lucy Cuyler the fastest trotter in the world."

Arrow, 2:13½, has recovered from the illness which caused him his first defeat. He has been blistered and is almost ready for hard work again.

A very valuable colt, owned by Mrs. G. G. Briggs, of East Tremont, Solano County, was killed the other day by a train, while grazing on the track.

Ex-sheriff W. A. Harkey, of Sutter County, than whom no horseman is better known in the State, has lately purchased 400 acres of land in Butte County, near Gridley.

Ossary, the latest purchase of Milton Young's, will not be raced at all in America. Immediately on his arrival he will be sent to the stud at McGrathiana Farm.

Geo. N. Hopper, of Unionville, O., has purchased from Palo Alto stock farm a black weanling filly by Electioneer, dam, Consolation, by Dictator. $3000 is the price paid.

Hanover never looked better in his life, and Frank McCabe, trainer for the Dwyer Bros., who was always "sweet" on the son of Hindoo, thinks he will be the champion of the year.

William Easton has purchased in England the bay horse Prince Jo, six years old, by Prince Charlie—Mystery, by Trumpeter. It is not stated for whom the horse was bought.

Senator Hearst evidently desires to save his King Ban colt, King Thomas, for the Futurity Stake, as by looking over the Coney Island entries I fail to find his name in any of the other stake events.

Tom Gallagher, sporting editor of the Chicago Tribune, is rusticating in Southern California. His close application to work caused his health to give way, and a change became necessary.

Mr. C. V. Tupper, owner of the race-horse Al Farrow, has returned to Santa Rosa, and I am pleased to learn that he has entirely recovered from the injuries received at the Bay District track.

There are about thirty trotters and the same number of thoroughbreds quartered at the San Jose track. The new inside running course has been made and in a few days will be ready for use.

Little George Covington will attend to the light weight mounts in the interest of Senator Hearst this season. With Hamilton and Covington, the Hearst colors should win many a big dollar in 1889.

The English hackney stallion Truffit's Fireaway is now rising 30 years. He has done stud duty for over 25 years, and has averaged over a hundred foals yearly. His get are roughly valued at $1,250,000.

Mrs. W. H. Wilson, of Abdallah Park, Cynthiana, Ky., who has been visiting her daughter, Mrs. R. B. James nee Miss A. L. Wilson, will shortly visit Los Angeles as the guest of Mr. and Mrs. De Camp.

Galen, the wonderful 2-year-old who ran third in the Coney Island Futurity with very little preparation, and who was sold to George Hankins last Fall, has developed splints on both fore legs and has had to be fired.

The St. Louis "Republic;" generally one of the most reliable papers in regard to sporting matters, announces that the Great American Stake will be worth $250,000. A tenth of the amount stated will be nearer the mark.

Mr. and Mrs. "Knap" McCarthy will pay San Francisco a visit preparatory to leaving for the East. Mr. McCarthy's horses have all done well on the coast, and he will return well satisfied with his Pacific Slope experience.

Pennsylvania and New Jersey are following closely in the wake of New York. In the legislatures of both States bills have been introduced to restrict pool selling, each being based on what is called the Ives' pool bill.

Mr. Harry J. Agnew, of Honolulu, who has been on a visit here for some months, has been confined to his room for several weeks from illness. Mr. Agnew will probably return to his island home by the next Australian steamer.

Mr. Geo. F. Hoeffer, attorney for the society for the suppression of vice, is the originator of the text in the motion for the abolishing of pool-selling, which was introduced by Judge Dibble in the legislature on Tuesday last.

Three prominent English owners, the Duke of Portland, the Duke of Westminster, and Lord Falmouth, are against the Paris Grand Prize because that event is run on a Sunday, and in consequence will not make any entries for the great French event.

President Clark, of the Louisville Jockey Club, has written a history of racing in America from the earliest times down to the recent revival in sport. The history is in manuscript as yet. The story should be one of intense interest, for no one is better able to do the subject justice.

Gleaner and his trainer Richardson and Jockey Stone have been ruled off at New Orleans for throwing a race in which Wooley was allowed to win. A telegram announcing that the race was "fixed" was received by one of the sporting fraternity in San Francisco on the morning of the race, and at least one of the bookmakers suffered in consequence.

In spite of reports to the contrary, Mr. Hankins of the Chicago stable has finally decided again to put that ugly but very speedy brute Little Minch in training next spring, and will have him as one of the bread winners without a doubt.

One of the most peculiar names yet given to a racer is St. August, a name given by F. B. Harper to his weaning colt by St. Blaise—Secret. It is supposed to be a compliment to August Belmont, who owns the sire of the youngster.

S. A. Brown & Co., proprietors of the Kalamazoo Stock Farm, having refused an offer of $30,000 from a syndicate of Southern horse breeders for Ambassador, by George Wilkes, dam Lady Carr; Ambassador's record is 2:21¼; private trial, 2:18.

Mr. C. W. Aby has purchased for Mrs. Langtry, from Mr. W. Easton, the horse auctioneer of New York, an imported thoroughbred stallion and four imported brood mares. When Mr. Aby returns he will bring his purchases with him, in addition to several he has bought in Kentucky.

The BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN offers its services to any strangers visiting San Francisco, and will be pleased to receive letters and telegrams for those who have no regular address. This will be a convenience for our readers, and we shall be only too pleased to have them accept our offer.

I wish I could do justice to the band of Shorthorn cattle which are to be sold by Killip & Co. at the Bay District track on Tuesday next. They are the finest lot, all round, I have ever seen, and bred, so I am told, equal to Proctor Knott or Sunol; but then I can talk horse when I cannot write cattle.

Some years ago a race track was laid out on the Woolsey estate at Astoria, Long Island, but for some reason was never finished. Work has been resumed at this late day, and will be pushed so as to have everything all ready to start on July 4th. If the management is in good hands it should be a paying project.

Master Willie Ketchum, of Brighton, Canada, has trained a dog to trot, and the canine has developed such speed that a challenge has been issued to trot the Irish setter against any pony twelve hands or under on either ice or turf. He has already won a race, having been matched against the imported pony Donald Dinnie, owned by W. J. Turley, of Frankfort, Canada.

Some prominent citizens of San Jose have instituted a movement for the formation of a jockey club in the Garden City. It has been suggested and will in all probability be carried to a successful conclusion, that the gentlemen interested announce a spring meeting, either before or directly after the Blood Horse Meeting.

The suit brought by Miss Jennie Jouette against W. G. Brien, Sr., the trainer on the Clifton track, for the recovery of her two race horses, Drumstick and Clatter, and her share of the winnings, amounting to $1,725, was compromised yesterday, Brien paying $3,100 for a bill of sale for both horses.

I had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Leslie E. McLeod, assistant editor of Wallace's Monthly, one day this week, and we two horse-sharps had a grand time talking over old reminiscences. "Mac" will write up the principle breeding farms of the Pacific Coast for his magazine, and that it will be well done goes without saying.

Up to date I have received exactly forty-one exchanges which have printed the 'Chat with Cy Mulkey" about how Yum Yum was discovered, and as yet failed to find one that has given the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN credit for the article. One of the principle New York daily papers is numbered among the pirates.

Some weeks ago I reported that Col. Russell of Boston, had purchased the well known son of Electioneer, Ansel, and a few days afterwards it was confirmed by telegrams sent out through the associated press. It seems now that the negotiations have fallen through, and Ansel will not go to the far East. Rumor now says that Col. Russell is trying to purchase Stamboul from L. J. Rose, and that he may probably succeed.

The regular annual meeting of the stockholders of the Ukiah Park Association was held last Saturday afternoon, says the Dispatch Democrat, a majority of the stock being represented. Directors were elected as follows: T. M. Mannon, J. S. Reed, president; L. F. Long, vice-president; L. T. Day, secretary; W. A. Hagans, treasurer. The indebtedness of the association amounts to $965.41, but the property it owns is worth much more.

E. Spiers, of Glen Falls, N. Y., has purchased from Leland Stanford, of the Palo Alto stock farm, the bay colt May King, three years old, by Electioneer, dam May Queen, by Alexander Norman. The latter is the sire of Lulu, which has a record of 2:15.

The price is not named, but it is said to be between $8,000 and $9,000.

I had a hearty handshake on Monday last with that prince of good fellows James Golden of Boston. Mr. Golden, whose many years on the trotting turf has made him an authority, is out here to see for himself whether the yarns told by Doble Splan, Caton and others about the marvellous climate is really correct or not. He is already satisfied that not half the truth has been told. Welcome Jimmie.

That excellent theatrical journal the New York Dramatic News, will, from on and after this week, devote a part of its columns to high class sports, and in furtherance thereof has selected that good all-round actor, Harry Gates, to collect Pacific Coast items. Harry is at present on the staff of Music and Drama, and it need not surprise his friends if he should ask on the one hand "How is Lydia Thompson's leg show getting along?" and on the other "how are the legs of the Emperor of Norfolk?"

Three little Clifton jockeys are we,
Filled to the brim with impish glee,
Cute as jockeys well can be;
Three little Clifton jocks!

Every sucker's a source of fun,
Nobody's safe for we care for none;
Each in his turn on his head we've spun,
Three little Clifton jocks!

St. Louis Republican.

In each and every stable there is already one favorite selected for 1889, but in picking winners ahead do not forget that Matt Storn has Forrester (formerly Theodore Winters) by Joe Hooker, dam by Melbourne Jr., that is showing some marvelous time on the Sacramento track. I hear that some of the old timers proclaim him a world beater. He resembles C. H. Todd in appearance, being a pretty chestnut with white face and legs.

James Murphy, of Lexington, Ky., announces that he stands ready to match Dilemma, two years, by Onondaga, dam Perhaps, dam of Doubt, Chance, and Perplex, against any youngster of her age in the country, the race to be for any amount up to $5,000 a side, weight 100 pounds, no sex allowances, either half a mile or five furlongs, and to be run on April 15th or during the spring meeting of the Kentucky Association.

At a meeting of the Sonoma Agricultural Park Association on the 17th inst., a lease of the track was given to W. B. Sanborn for one year, one week in August being reserved for their annual fair. Mr. Sanborn will begin at once to work the track and have it in the best condition, as he will give a running meeting in the spring, to follow immediately after the Blood Horse Association's annual events.

Mr. J. W. Knox has sold to Montgomery & Rea of San Jose, the br c Boodle, foaled 1886, by Stranger, dam Bride by Jay Gould. Stranger, by Gen. Washington, dam Goldsmith Maid; Boodle's second dam Tidy, by Ethan Allen; third dam by old Abdallah. Mr. Knox would not have parted with this magnificently bred colt, but his business interests for 1889 prevents him from giving the horse the attention required. The price given for Boodle is not stated.

The Directors of the Overland Park Club Association, Denver, Col., have elected the following officers for 1889: D. D. Streeter, President; J. K. Choate, Vice-President; J. H. P. Voohies, Secretary; W. R. Mygatt, Treasurer; D. B. Hall, Superintendent. D. D. Streeter, J. K. Choate, A. H. Fowler, W. R. Mygatt, J. H. P. Voorhies. J. N. Carlile, and S. S. Austin, Executive Committee. The spring trotting and racing meeting will be held May 20th to 25th, 1889.

H. W. Peck of Healdsburg is the owner of the bay yearling stallion Ferndale. He is by racing rule a two-year-old, though in reality but twenty two months old. He went a quarter the other day in 40½ seconds hitched to a very light cart. Ferndale is by Anteeo, 2:16¼, and his dam is a speedy and game mare by John Nelson. He is considered by many horsemen the best son of his illustrious sire, which is saying a great deal. It is not often that a colt of such perfect conformation and gait is met with, even in this day of progression in horse affairs.

From the St. Louis "Republic" I gain my first information of the death of the thoroughbred stallion Imported Billet, which occurred at the breeding farm of Clay & Woodford, near Paris, Ky. He was by Voltigeur, dam Calcutta, and was one of the greatest stallions in America. He sired Miss Woodford, Raceland, Sir Dixon, Belvidere, Spalding, The Lioness, Barnes' Runnymede and others. His get last season won $120,042, and stood second in the list of winning sires. He was 24 years old. His get from 1883 to 1888 won $592,202.50. Imported Billet was third on the list of winning sires in 1884, seventh in 1885, second in 1886, fourth in 1887 and now stands second, with $120,042 to his credit.

The announcement of a match race between C. H. Gilman's Solitaire and N. Craig's Acrobat, says the Sacramento Bee, had the effect of attracting a fair-sized attendance at Agricultural Park on Saturday afternoon. Solitaire went to cart, while Acrobat went to harness. The first heat Acrobat won in 2:34½; but Solitaire won the next three and race in an easy manner in 2:32½, 2:372, 2:37.

Several of the lovers of turf sports are arranging for a five days Spring meeting in this city to be held in the early part of May. There will be several novel features on the programme, besides the running, trotting and pacing contests.

The chief interest at Sheepshead Bay just now centers in the doings of the horses owned by United States Senator George Hearst. King Thomas, the $40,000 King Ban colt, is of course the pet of the stable. He stands 16 hands high, and will stand a lot of work. Allen thinks he will have him ready for the first of the spring stakes. Mr. Allen thinks the fleet filly Gorgo will have no superior of her age during the coming season. The Australian horse, True Briton, and the three-year-old, Philander, promise to give a good account of themselves.

All the Eastern sporting journals have given "oceans of space" to guessing at the probable weights to be carried by starters for the Suburban, and all concede top impost to either Firenzi or the Bard. It is a hard matter to bring a lot of racehorses to the post, each in the pink of condition, and "Black and Blue," in the "Mail and Express," shows this clearly when he says: Egmont, at one period of last year, could have beaten any horse in America over the Suburban distance. Eolian, at another certain time, could have beaten Egmont. Terra Cotta, in June, could have beaten both, and Firenzi, in August, could have run away from all of them.

BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN readers will be pleased to learn that D. D. Withers has at last decided to name those of his horses which heretofore have been called after their dams: The five-year-old Cyclone colt is now called Catspaw. The three-year-olds named are: Stately, by King Ernest—Mimi; Stonecrop, by Stonehenge—Mary Buckley; Chemise, by Sensation—Chamois; Tomboy, by Tom Ochiltree—Majority; Orator, by Tom Ochiltree—Cadence; Major-domo, by Tom Ochiltree—Sweet Home; Cynosure, by Tom Ochiltree—Cyclone. His two named two-year-olds are Chieftain, by Uncas—Chamois, and Adamant, by Stonehenge—Adage. He has not found a name yet for the Faverdale colt, but may possibly select Brookdale.

The proudest man I have met in many a day is Mr. C. E. Needham, of Bellota, San Joaquin county; and I don't wonder at it, for he is the owner of Steve Whipple 2:23, made against E. J. Rose's Dubec, while in a trial he has shown 2:20, and gone a quarter in 32½, equal to a 2:10 gait. While the horse will stand in the vicinity of Stockton this season, it will be for a short time only, as in June the well known driver, Parker, will prepare the stallion for campaign work. It is the general impression that 2:16 is about his mark, and Mr. Needham feels confident that his colt can touch it easy. Steve Whipple is by Chrisman's Hambletonian, by Whipple's Hambletonian. His dam, Twist, by Whipple's Hambletonian.

Dagworth writes in the Los Angeles Tribune: Gossiper is the little trotter that will need watching this season. He will break the four-year-old stallion record held by Brown of 2:18¾ before the season is very old, Gossiper is a brown stallion, four years old. He is by Simmons' dam by Smuggler. At San Francisco Gossiper made a trial in 2:22½, and Charlie Durfee has driven the horse a mile at the Agricultural park in 2:22. It is not yet decided whether Gossiper will make the California circuit or the big Eastern circuit. Durfee holds Gossiper at $15,000. He has twice refused $10,000 for his lucky purchase. I would not be the least surprised if Gossiper should lower the world's four-year-old record before another year hops around.

An Act to Restrict Gaming.

The People of the State of California, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

Section I. Whoever shall engage in book-making, or in the issuing of any ticket, check, or other evidence of an interest in any pool, chance, bet, or wager, or in the sale of any pool, bet, chance, or wager, upon the result of any trial or contest of skill, speed, or power of endurance between horses, or between men, or upon the result of any pastime, lot, or hazard, beyond or outside of the enclosure of the race track, building, hall, structure, course, or place, or the part thereof, within which such trial, contest, lot, or pastime is to take place or to be had, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by imprisonment in the jail of the county not exceeding six months, or by a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars, or by both.

Section II. Whoever knowingly leases, rents, permits, or suffers to be used, any premises, building, booth, yard, boat, or other structure by him owned, kept, controlled, or occupied, for the purpose of book-making, or of issuing any ticket, check, or other evidence of an interest in any pool, chance, bet, or wager, or of selling any pool, bet, chance, or wager, upon the result of any trial or contest of skill speed, or power of endurance between horses, or between men, or upon the result of any pastime, lot, or hazard, contrary or in violation of Section I. of this Act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by imprisonment in the jail of the county, not exceeding six months, or by a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars, or by both.

Section III. Whoever shall purchase or accept any pool, bet, chance, or wager, or any ticket, check, or other evidence of an interest in any pool, bet, chance, or wager, or knowingly become pecuniarily interested in any book made on the result of any trial or contest of skill, speed, or power of endurance between horses, or between men, or upon the result of any pastime, lot, or hazard, sold, made, or given, in violation of Section I of this Act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by imprisonment in the jail of the county, not exceeding three months, or by a fine not exceeding two hundred and fifty dollars, or by both.

Section IV. Every person who shall lose any money or other valuable thing on any book, bet, chance, pool, or wager, made, sold, or given, contrary or in violation of the First Section of this Act, shall be at liberty to sue for and recover the money or thing so lost and paid or delivered, or the full value thereof, with costs, from the winner, in any court of competent jurisdiction. And in case the person who shall lose such money or other thing, as aforesaid, shall not within one month from the date of such loss, bona fide and without covin or collusion sue and thereafter with effect prosecute for such money or other thing, by him lost and paid or delivered, as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for any person to sue for and recover treble the value of the said money, goods, chattels, and other things, with cost of suit, against such winner aforesaid; one half to the use of the county or city and county for the benefit of the common schools, and the other to the person suing.

Section V. This Act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

How Todd Was Timed.

A few days ago the New York World contained an interesting account of the principal bookmakers in the metropolis, part of which is of local interest, and warrants republication in the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN. It is as follows:

J. C. Boardman, or "Billy" Boardman, as he is known East and West, is one of the shrewdest and safest bookmakers in the circuit. His honesty and regard for his word are proverbial. He is very companionable, and usually spends his winters surrounded by his friends in Louisville, where he talks by the hour of his interesting experiences on the turf. The story goes that Boardman was one of the few who knew that C. H. Todd was going to win the Chicago Derby two years ago, and he got his information in a very peculiar way. The stablemen were very secret about the horse, taking care to exercise him at two or three o'clock in the morning, when the track was clear, and there was no possibility of any one seeing him or catching his time.

Billy had an idea that the horse was a good one, and he determined to find out what he could do. It was two days before the race that he came to this conclusion, and he knew that the next morning's trial would, in all probability, be the final one. The great question with him was how to catch the exact time. The horse was always run in the dark, and if he used a lantern to look at his stop watch he would be detected at once, and the trial would be postponed. At last a brilliant idea suggested itself to Billy's quick brain. There was a little negro on the track the regularity of whose pulse was the wonder of every one.

For hours at a stretch it had been tested and was found to beat exactly sixty times to the minute. He had been tested walking, sleeping, riding and eating, and under all circumstances it remained identically the same old regular pulse with its sixty beats to correspond to the sixty seconds of the minute. Billy hastened off, hired the boy, and that night they both lay in a convenient fence corner near the string and waited. The night was very dark, and as he did not know at what moment the horse would be brought out Billy had to keep a sharp watch. He had been waiting in his cramped position for two hours and had almost given up seeing the trial when he heard the galloping of a horse coming down the track. The rider pulled up just in front of him, and presently a man came up whom Billy recognized as Todd's trainer. He carried a bull's-eye lantern, and it took Billy but a moment to see that the horse was the mysterious C. H. Todd. Billy waked the negro boy up, and gave his orders. The boy was to time the horse by counting his own pulsebeats!

A moment later the midnight trial had begun. A strangely picturesque scene it was. As the flying horse, with the little jockey on his back, swept past the quarters, men posted there with lanterns flashed their lights across the track to notify the trainer and give him an opportunity to catch the time. The horse was revealed for a moment, and then there was darkness, and only the far-away muffled tramp of the hurrying animal; and there in the fence corner sat Billy, the little negro by his side, scared and trembling, but manfully marking time.

"What was the time of that fust quarter?" whispered Billy when the light flashed.

"Twenty-fo', boss," piped the little darky. Then a silence when Billy could almost hear his living chronometer beating the seconds.

"What's the half?" inquired Billy, as Todd appeared for an instant illuminated by the lanterns, and was then swallowed up by the darkness.

"Fahty-nine, boss. Golly! ain't ole Todd a-crackin' it," and the little darkey's eyes nearly popped out of his head with excitement.

It seemed an age till the third light fell on the fleet-footed thoroughbred, but when it did the boy whispered, "One-fifteen! an' he's comin' a-bustin'!" As the horse rounded into the stretch and the clattering hoofs drew nearer and nearer, Billy and the boy were both so excited they could scarcely keep from cheering. Down the track he came, and under the string with a rush, and when Billy consulted his timepiece he found that Todd had made the mile in 1:41. That was enough. He wanted no better line than that. Next day he had a clean sheet for the Derby, for he wouldn't accept a bet against Todd, and besides he won a pretty sum on the outside. Nor did he forget his little black watch.

Breaking Colts.

It is not to be expected that every man should be a professional horseman in the sense of handling the unbroken colt according to the most approved rules of horse breaking, says the Kentucky Stock Farm. But there are a few simple rules which observation, common sense and a familiarity with horse kind will lead one to adopt in handling the green colts so they may receive the first rudiments of their education to the best advantage.

In handling the green colt it should be remembered that horses—especially very young ones—are controlled by two great passions; and exercising a controlling power for good or evil in his education, is the faculty of memory. An injury, or the fear of an infliction or harm, is long remembered by the high spirited, nervous young horse, and kind usage afterward, long and persevering, will only—and then, perhaps, not wholly—eradicate the effects of fright or ill usage.

If, then, we can excite the curiosity of the colt, and not his fear, and thus gain his confidence, we are laying the foundation of a good education for the future horse.

To hamper the free movements of a spirited young colt by halter or bridle is a new and startling experience to him, and unless the colt has been handled and accustomed to the use of these articles in his infancy, he naturally expects something harmful as the result of the restriction of his liberty by their use. Hence, it is readily seen that placing the green colt in such—to him—unusual environment the most cautious and careful handling by the one conducting the education of the colt is necessary to inculcate the primary principles of instruction which shall render the future horse safe and useful under harness.

As the training gradually progresses, teach the colt that neither harness nor vehicle will harm him, and the trainer assuredly not, and a great point is gained, because his keen faculty of memory will enable him to keep in mind former experiences, which always proving, if not pleasant, not fearful or painful, in the recollection to him will give him assurance.

In passing upon the road, teach the colts that certain objects are not dangerous, by permitting him to examine them until he is satisfied of the fact himself, and will remember it. It very seldom proves a benefit to whip an inexperienced driving horse for being afraid of objects on the road. Whenever you see a horse of mature years frightened at every unusal object on the roadside, and ready to go into the air and take to the gutter to the imminent peril of the carriage and its occupants, you may be pretty sure the horse's education was faulty when young, by being whipped and otherwise improperly used because evincing signs of fear at objects he was unaccustomed to seeing when first driven upon the road. Kindness is far more effective, and be manly and reasonable means to use to overcome the sensitiveness and fears of the young horse.

A Bit of History.

There is hardly any horse living or dead but what has some interesting history connected with him, and in the dull winter months when items of the turf are scarce, the average reporter picks up points and produces for winter reading valuable information. One of the brightest of this class of items is given below, copied from The Reins and Whip, and will amply repay perusal.

For some time it has been known among local horsemen that there was an effort being made to unite the fast pacing mares, Bessie M. and Sallie C. Mr. Bradenburg of the Dime Museum, had, until recently, owned Bessie M., but for some reason he allowed Mr. Robinson to purchase Sallie C. and finding no price he could offer would induce him to part with her sold his little black mare with a record of 2:16¾ for $1,750, a price extremely low considering her speed. Both animals are now owned by Mr. Robinson, and an effort will be made at the opening of the reorganized Belmont Park to reduce the double teams' record as it now stands. Sallie C. has a history. She was bred up in New Mahoning Valley, where the people mostly are good, honest farmers, and more adapted to agricultural pursuits than sports of the turf. She was sired by Senator, a son of Middletown, he by Hambletonian. Her dam was Polly Hooker, a good serviceable pacing mare that could go in 2:20. Her owner was a tiller of the soil, and while he might have been an expert in guessing at the weight of a deceased porker, or refreshing his broad acres with fertilizers, he failed to detect any racing qualities in the handsome little gray mare then called Fanny. She grew up with the mullen weeds, daisies and clover blossoms until she was three years old, and then her owner put her up at a raffle. The tickets were limited and sold a 25 cents each. An honest farmer lad bought one of them, and on the day when the cast of the die was to settle the question of ownership, he hitched up the horse and started for the scene of the shake up, some twelve miles distance. On the way he called upon a yeoman friend, whose son was persuaded to go along with him. The farmer lad won the dainty little mare by his throw, and that night there was merry making at the country hostelrie. He "set 'em up," and the best in the house (stale lager and hard cider) went for all hands. His total expenses of the trip were $11,50 including the ticket. On the way home he grew weary of his bargain, as visions of an imaginary little, balky, kicking gray mare drifted through his mind, and struck up a dicker with the neighbor's boy. The result was that he sold a half interest in his prize for $5.75. The boys took her home and soon found out that they had a sweet dispositioned little gray mare that could go fast. W. A. Ogden, a livery stable keeper of this city, heard glowing accounts of her and visited the moralists. The result was that he took her home with him, and gave her a few easy races at country fairs for pumpkins and cord wood. He gave her a mark of 2:26¼ at Mount Holly, N. J., last fall. Then she was sent back to the farm for the winter. This last spring Ogden gave the neighbors' boys $500, for their interest in the little gray, and bought out the share of the original holder of the ticket for $750. Ogden gave her a record of 2:17¼, and sold her recently to her present owner for $3,000.

Races in the United States.

The total number of races run in the United States in 1888, beginning at Clifton on Monday, January 2d, and ending at the same place on Monday, December 31, were 4,521, an increase of 680 races over the total of 1887, says the Horseman. Of the 4,421 races run, only 156 were for jumpers, leaving 4,265 races run on the flat. This is a great falling off in the number of jumping races as compared with 1887, when there was a total of 193 in all, viz: 71 over hurdles and 121 steeplechases. In 1888 there were only 34 races over hurdles, with 96 steeplechases, a result partially due to the elimination of jumping races by the Washington Park Club, Chicago, the American Jockey Club at Jerome Park in October, and at Monmouth Park, where there were only two races each week for jumpers, as against three in former years. The total number of races run on the flat under Jockey Club rules in Great Britain and Ireland for 1888 was 1,589 of which 759 were at five furlongs and under six, 262 at six furlongs and under a mile, 333 at one mile, 184 at over a mile and under two, 40 at two miles and under three, 7 at three miles and under four, and 4 four miles. There were 100 races run in Canada in 1888, as against 153 in 1887, when the money value was $19,860. The value in 1888 was $15,600, with seven races for which no value was given. The following combination table shows the number of races run in 1878 and 1888 in the United States and Canada, and just what the changes have been in ten years:

Half-mile and under, dashes and heats	191	358
Five furlongs up to include mile heats	476	3,102
Over a mile to two-mile heats	284	893
Over two miles to four-mile heats	35	2
Hurdle races and steeplechases	72	156
Totals	1,058	4,421

Sunol Not Sold.

San Juan, in the Sporting World, says:

This is the season of the year when sales and rumors of sales of prominent trotters are constantly heard of. The comparative leisure of the winter gives to the owners of trotting stables and of breeding establishments the due opportunity for the close investigation and the diplomatic negotiation that surrounds such transactions. Such reports are like the scriptural virgins—some are wise and some are foolish. Of the latter class is the statement that Mr. Robert Bonner has paid, or offered to pay, $50,000 for Sunol, the famous two-year-old filly by Electioneer, that made a record of 2:18 last fall. I have the best authority for saying that Mr. Bonner has made no such offer, nor has he contemplated such an offer, though it is perhaps true that some negotiation looking to her purchase has been had. It is possible that Senator Stanford may value her as highly as the figure named would indicate, and indeed she may some day be fairly worth it, but such a price for a two-year old, even for so wonderful a filly as Sunol, is beyond reason. An owner such as Senator Stanford might reasonably refuse to sell at that price or at any other price, but it would be a different matter to buy at so extravagant a figure. If Sunol fulfills the promise of her early youth, she may surpass the record of Maud S., when she reaches maturity. She is perhaps more likely to lower the record than any other animal living, and should she do so she would, if she remained sound, be fairly worth $50,000 or more. For Maud S. Mr. Bonner paid $40,000, and it was understood that she was worth more money. Mr. Vanderbilt sold her to Mr. Bonner at a reduced price, because he was assured that she would not be campaigned, and he therefore wished her to go into Mr. Bonner's stable. At the time of the sale the mare's record was some seconds slower than it is at present. It is possible that Mr. Bonner may buy Sunol, but it is safe to say that he will not pay $50,000 for her until she shows more clearly than she has yet done ability to beat 2:08¼.

Mr. Allen, the wealthy and enterprising breeder of Pittsfield, Mass., will have a mile track built upon his farm next season in the form of a figure eight. He recently offered Woodburn Farm $15,000 cash for a filly by Electioneer, out of the dam of Maud S. 2:08¼.

ROD.

Among the Redwoods.

CHAPTER XI.

CURRENTS AND SHALLOWS.

Owing to this arrangement of keeping together, the afternoon did not copy the morning, but gave new stimulus to the anglers for their best work. Rivalry between them was scarcely possible, because Philip was too gallant and Erl too shy, yet both were human enough to enjoy any little ascendency that might be gained without sacrifice of pleasurable feeling. Erl had much advantage in her knowledge of the stream, but she would never have been contented with a success that came through selfishness, and so turned the desirable pools over to Philip as regularly and fairly as if a good take might be had wherever a line could be cast. Her kindness in this direction might as well have been spared, for Philip's luck had turned against him, and he was at last reduced to the necessity of asking what flies she found most effective.

"None," came the dampening reply, "I have been doing my best for two hours, and ten fish are all I have to show."

She was standing beside some tall lily stems on her way to a ripple above of which she expected nothing, and therefore might be excused for lack of enthusiasm.

"That's wonderful, from my standpoint," he said gloomily, "I have averaged just one an hour."

Erl laughed, looking like a happy fay among the green.

"Perhaps you had better take to the shore, where papa and Nestor are," she said, the sparkle which had done so much execution again finding its way to her eyes.

"Stay where you are and I will," he answered, beginning to reel in his line.

"No, no! I must fish!" The merriment vanished at once, and she was ready to be gone. "My flies are red palmer, blue dun spider and yellow dun."

"Mine exactly," he called after her, as she darted forward through the brush.

Conscientious fishing, like conscientious everything else, is slow and careful work; for, on the way the water is approached and whipped depends at least one-half of the hoped-for return! Not that good fishermen are always successful, any more than poor ones are the reverse, as sometimes, right on the same stream and in the same weather, an angler will have experiences that baffle wisdom, science, and the most prolonged and patient effort. At first he rejoices in an astonishing run of luck, and later becomes disgusted by a total lack of it, and tries to figure out causes. He asks himself whether the food proposition is thrusting itself up again, and wonders if a dearth in one stretch of water and a surplus in another, would account for the difference, or if the change may be due to periods of feeding. Water conditions next offer themselves, and he carefully studies one pool after another, only to finally conclude that the trouble is unnecessary, because all are so much alike. Shade and light now confront him, and he becomes confident that dark stretches are the best, only to lure his next trout from a shallow on which the sun shines brightly.

"All of which goes to prove," said Philip, as he moved cautiously up to a place where the water eddied round the end of a partially submerged tree,—"All of which goes to prove that there are many things unknown to me yet."

Ever since Erl's departure he had been turning propositions something after the pattern of the ones recorded, over and over in his mind, without deriving ease or profit, and was about ready to concede himself vanquished, when he cast into the water before him and drew out a trout. From this on sport was excellent, and the next time he met Erl he lifted up the cover and showed her a basket evenly full.

"I fear you are a sorcerer," she said. "Since our last conference I have taken but three."

"Half of mine are yours if you will." He kept his basket open and took up a handful of the fish.

"It seems to me that in sport as well as other things each one should stand on his own merits," she answered, looking down, "and I am not yet ready to confess myself the poorer fisherman."

"His and man. I see you are advanced enough in thought to maintain your own position." The fish dropped down among their fellows, the basket shut and was turned back to its place, as Philip stepped aside and asked her to test the next ripple.

Long, rugged masses of purple were beginning to settle in among the hollows of the canyon when she drew out the one solitary little trout her flies attracted, and ever and again the whizzing voice of the saw-mill came to warn them that their sport for to-day was at an end, unless they choose to seek the lesser stream a little higher up that threw its waters into the Lorenzo.

Mr. Selden had evidently decided against this, for they found him sitting in an improvised chair of green foliage, nearly opposite the mill, where Nestor was renewing acquaintance with a mischievous black Newfoundland puppy.

"I am given over to tears, papa," said Erl, splashing along through the water. "Mr. Wells has a splendid basket, and mine is not quite half full; see!"

She held her basket open and Mr. Selden laughed quietly, but in a way that testified much secret gratification. From a perfect understanding of his daughter's character he knew it would not do to permit this to become too apparent, so he picked up his own little basket, which he said was like a young mind where everything had gotten into a state of confusion, and commenced arranging it, at the same time making a place for Philip and Erl on either side of him, and suggesting that they take their rods apart.

"Oh, what for, papa?" asked Erl. "I always prefer waiting until I get home to do that." She looked at Philip, who felt just the same, and who did not hesitate to abet her by nodding.

"Perhaps I made a mistake then," said Mr. Selden, still intent on his ferns and lichens, "but I told Mrs. Morrison to have the horses meet us opposite here on the road, and I scarcely think Wolfgang will put up with your rod." He spoke gently as usual, and Erl at once felt her error.

"Did you!" she exclaimed, springing to her feet and kissing him. "Some day, Papa, maybe I shall learn what you have so often told me about conceding reason ground to others."

Her humility was genuine, and therefore attractive, but Philip liked the impulsiveness better, though he pretended to be so busy getting his rod into a close canvas case as not to be aware of either.

"Where is your case, Miss Selden?" he asked, and turned to assist her.

"That is more than I can say. Papa, did you think of a case?"

"Yes, dear, I generally do when I think of you," said Mr. Selden, without the least suspicion that his reply might be interpreted in a manner he did not intend.

His innocence and Erl's preoccupation warned Philip that a smile would be entirely out of place, so he took the case from Mr. Selden, and while getting the small tips of the rod in, asked, irrelevantly, if they did not consider the mill a great blot on the beauty of the woods.

"Oh my, yes! And in a few years it will be a miserable ruin. How many things of the kind there are from one end of California to the other! Not mills alone, but dummies of every sort of unfruitful enterprise left standing, perhaps as a warning to others who have more ambition than brains, or executive ability—to let such things alone.

Mr. Selden stopped abruptly and looked confused, fearing he had spoken lightly of what were serious things to those they had impoverished or robbed of manhood's most vigorous impulses. And by way of amendment he called Philip's attention to a huge log that was ready to be made into boards.

"Yes," said Philip, unable through his severely practical quality to judge of all the thoughts that swayed the older man. "Yes, it must be either boards or trees. I hate to see the trees go, but we must have boards." He had put away the rods and was making a wreath of ferns and wild roses.

A trivial thing to be about! I grant it, serious reader, but have you never engaged in some equally light pursuit when no spring day was long enough to measure your happiness? If not, then a corner of your heart lies fallow, and you are not quite capable of sympathizing with the eager impulse that made Philip hold the wreath out to Erl. She took it from him, and without awaiting any suggestion slipped it round the crown of her hat and arose to call Nestor. Philip was just a trifle disappointed, though what sort of demonstration he had expected was not quite clear even in his own mind.

"Do you feel equal to our climb now," asked Mr. Selden, taking up his trowel and basket, and beckoning to Erl.

They crossed a shallow of the stream and found a close trail by which egress could be had from the labyrinth of brown stems and green leaves without other inconvenience than the occasional loss of a hat, or damaging of a coat. Mr. Selden went first as one more able to guide; then came Philip following closely, and behind him Erl and Nestor—the latter kept at a safe distance because of his dampness.

For Erl it was a surprising experience to have all the rude briars held aside, and to be helped over every stone and fallen limb. Of how to exact such attentions she understood nothing, which only made Philip more ready to offer them. And her shy, sweet acceptance seemed to him so like what he knew of poetry and romance that he wished for more unruly branches to hold aside.

I am quite sure Mr. Selden would have condemned this visit, and not solely on account of his daughter, for the climb was long and exhausting enough without the additional tiring, and they were compelled to pause more than once before reaching the top of the ridge. A height gained is, however, a satisfaction, and I think Philip was equally glad with Erl and her father when they could rest and try to catch a glimpse of the stream that appeared to run a silent course at the foot of the canyon walls, or hurl a stone in among the fluttering leaves and listen as it struck the rocks below.

The trail by which they had come up lost itself in the road nearly opposite two rough, unpainted cottages, with low porches and dirty windows, that had the appearance of having built themselves in a night. Some very thin hens and a frowsy rooster disputed the front yard—which seemed common to both—with a black cat, a large-framed woman peered from the small window of the cottage nearest the trail, and passed comments on our friends.

"I reckoned they'd be along soon, Jane Gilbert," she said to a very stout companion who rocked slowly back and forth over some soiled crochet, "That young man's a stranger, pears like. Leastwise I aint never set eyes on him before."

"Nor I," said her companion, dropping the crochet in her chair and coming over to the window.

"He's right good lookin' too, Nancy Tanner, though he don't appear to be much on the dress. Where do you reckon that imp of a Tommy's put off to with them horses? 'Twouldn't more'n serve Rob right if they'd cleared plumb out. Sech a moonin' no account chap I never allowed to see! I'm right glad they got shut of him over to the mill."

Mrs Gilbert, you see, shared the universal opinion of poor Rob, whose weak wit never served him a worse turn than in calling out her enmity, for she had a tongue—her husband said—that would blister a callous.

Both women nursed ill-feeling towards Mrs. Morrison, not on account of any evil she had done, for in sickness or trouble she was first to come and last to go, but because, against odds that would have discouraged any one else, she achieved more success in life than they thought she deserved. In this they were not so exceptional as would at first seem to appear, since sympathy with success is one of the rare qualities that form part of a broad nature, and broad natures are not met with every day. So much indeed may be said for these neighbors, if their natures are taken into account, that I will only defend them by saying they were half unconscious of their own feeling, and did not understand or even seek to understand why it was so much easier to find fault with than to praise Mr. Selden's housekeeper. And when Mrs. Tanner, on getting a good view of Erl, exclaimed,

"Pears like Mrs. Morrison ought to hev better sense than to let Erl Selden go round in short clothes," it was more in obedience to the small stinging feeling that continually irritated her than because her womanhood felt any particular shock.

Mrs.Gilbert, still at the window, rolled her eyes and clasped her hands exactly as Mrs. Morrison had fancied, but forgot whatever sentiments she had intended to express, through interest in the conference taking place outside.

Tommy, barefooted and smiling as usual, had made a jump from the bank, a short distance up the road, and after showing Mr. Selden where the horses were tied, gave Erl a bundle.

"And I believe in my heart, Nancy Tanner, she's comin' right fur this yer house. Yes, she is. 'Twont do to show myself in this dirty calico. Don't let it upset you, now. I'll come back the minute she's gone."

Picking up her crochet, and again warning Mrs. Tanner not to be upset, as though that easy-going creature was likely to dance a hornpipe or turn a somersault, she went out of the back door when Erl was knocking at the front.

Mrs. Tanner opened the door slowly, and assumed an air of surprise, calculated to convince anybody that she had been in the kitchen until that very moment. Erl was instantly sure she had taken her from some task, and felt herself a nuisance.

"Come in, Miss Selden, come in. Right glad to see you. Out alone?" Mrs. Tanner's tone was hearty and her manner cordial.

"Oh, no indeed," said Erl; "papa and a gentleman are with me. I came over to ask you, Mrs. Tanner"—blushing and smiling—"if I might put on my riding-skirt and shoes in here. Auntie Morrison sent them; she is always so good."

"Deed you can, Miss Selden. Come right into my bedroom."

She would have liked very well to have said something derogatory of Mrs. Morrison's goodness; but once differing with Erl on that subject always taught people never to try it again, and Mrs. Tanner had learned some discretion during her forty odd years of life, and knew a proverb or two about quarrelling with her bread and butter.

Erl looked very much larger in the riding-skirt and jacket, and her hat with the wreath of drooping roses made the large eyes beneath its rim seem darker and of more intense expression.

Mrs. Tanner was greatly impressed, and could not resist telling her she seemed more like a young lady in a long dress.

"I hope young ladies are more comfortable than I shall be until I get on my horse," said Erl in reply.

She had tied her boots up in a small bundle, and standing with them and her rod in hand, she asked many kind questions about the children, who were with their father at the mill, spoke of the changes which had occurred there, and hoped they would be for the better, then bade Mrs. Tanner good-bye warmly, and went out to mount Wolfgang.

He was standing beside a low stump, tossing his head, and looking anxiously toward the cottage.

"Nice old horse," Erl said, patting him, all unconscious of Nestor's jealous eyes. "Be good now, and carry my things as you should."

Again and again his head went round, while she and her father were arranging the little extras on his back; but his full look of pride did not come until Erl was seated in the saddle, and Nestor stood waiting near.

"And now, Tommy, what disposition is to be made of you," said Mr. Selden, noticing that Philip was ready to start.

"I'm goin' home in the wagon with father. Rob's over there." His face was a mixture of merriment and shyness, and his reply rather indefinite, but Mr. Selden mounted Jerry and told the little fellow to scamper off then and not near the creek.

"No, sir, I won't," and vanished as they were starting.

Riding was an agreeable change after their many and continued tramps that added to the enjoyment of warmth, melody and fragrance, surrounding them like a charmed atmosphere.

The part of country through which they passed was wild, but had, too, that appealing luxuriance common to the Coast Range of mountains, and in such marked contrast to the dignified stateliness of the Sierra.

To their right rose high ridges, broken occasionally by small clearings on which fruit and berries attained ideal excellence; and to their left the forest bent to the course of the Lorenzo, and once or twice a wide belt of woods invited them to leave the roads and enjoy its quiet shade.

A tall flume used for floating lumber, also followed the course of the stream, and as they rode close to it Mr. Selden said the worst part of their journey was over, which greatly surprised Philip who thought they had much further to go; but as the horses were fresh they had ridden at a good gait, and before five o'clock were within a few paces of the hotel.

Mr. Selden's business made it necessary for him to stop here again, and Philip and Erl had decided to ride on and wait near the turn of the road, but as they drew nearer, she called attention to a lady who was standing on the verandah. Philip looked up quickly and bit his lip.

"I hope you will excuse me for a moment," he said raising his hat and turning his horse's head. "That's my sister Rachel."

PETRONELLA.

SAN FRANCISCO, January 22, 1889

THE KENNEL.

Sixth Annual Trials of the Pacific Coast Field Trials Club.

Two old darkies matched to guess the best thing to eat, and the first guesser suggested "baked 'possum and 'taters." The other one quit with the remark, "There's nothing more to guess," and a similar remark might be made of the sixth trials of the Pacific Coast Field Trial Club which began on January 14th and closed on the 18th. In a sense this last meeting may be said to be really the beginning of the growth of the club. The four earlier trials were held on different grounds each year, no one of which presented excellences enough to justify using it a second time. At Walltown Timber the first year, there was too little cover and too many trees. In the second year at White Rock the same objections were made. The third trial, near Olema, were run in a drizzle, through high cover, and were well calculated to make even the most enthusiastic lose interest. In the fourth year the contest was run off on the boundless pampas about Hanford, where cover was scarce, birds scarcer, and the dryness and heat almost prohibitory of good work. The fifth trials held at Bakersfield were run under general conditions quite favorable, and were satisfactory as to climatic conditions, ground, cover and birds, although the lack of acquaintance with the using places of the covies made it a little tiresome at times.

Bakersfield offered so many advantages that it was settled upon as the permanent home of the club, around which traditions will linger, and legends cling as they do about High Point, Grand Junction and Fisher's Island.

Bakersfield is quite the ideal resort for sportsmen. The town is situated about midway between the northern and southern centers of population, is upon the trunk line of the Southern Pacific Railroad; has fine hotel accommodations, good water, perfectly healthful sewerage, vast expanses of the best quail ground in America lying all about it, and last, though by no means least, has an appreciation of sportsmen and a willingness to contribute to the success of field trials that entitles it to the favorable consideration of the guild everywhere. Until January, 1888, there were but three or four sportsmen resident in Bakersfield, but they were men of rare qualities, keen, energetic, unselfish, kindly and fully alive to the interests of their visiting brethren. The little knot of local lovers of the gun, Mr. W. E. Hough on, Mr. H. L. Borgwardt, Mr. C. E. Lechner, Mr. Richard Seymour, Mr. Mr. D. M. Pyle, I. L. Miller and Mr. D. A. Leonard, at once set about forming a sportsman's club, and the Knights of the Trigger of Bakersfield resulted. Elegant club-rooms were secured and handsomely fitted up in the best building in the town. A fine locker room, with gun-cleaning bench, and all necessary conveniences, added.

Control of one hundred and thirty thousand acres of land, placed in the hands of the club directors, and everything else done that the most careful thought could suggest. The club invited sportsmen resident in other parts of the State to join, and the invitation was responded to in a manner which showed the high appreciation in which the venture was held.

To Subscribers.

Should this paper be received by any subscriber who does not want it, or beyond the time he intends to pay for it, let him not fail to write us direct to stop it. A postal card (costing one cent only) will suffice. We will not knowingly send the paper to anyone who does not wish it, but if it is continued, through the failure of the subscriber to notify us to discontinue it, or some irresponsible party being requested to stop it, we shall positively demand payment for the time it is sent.

Special Notice to Correspondents.

Letters intended for publication should reach this office not later than Wednesday of each week, to secure a place in the issue of the following Saturday. Such letters should be addressed to the "BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN," because if otherwise addressed they may be delayed until too late. Letters which demand immediate attention may be delayed, and still worse be entirely neglected.

Whatever pertains to the paper should be addressed to it. This will insure immediate attention.

The Daily Press.

Now that the daily press of San Francisco, and the papers published elsewhere in California, have made joint cause against indiscriminate pool selling and bookmaking, there is nearly a certainty of the passage of a controlling act. Still it will not answer to depend entirely on that, the justice of the cause, and the support of ninety-five per cent. of the best citizens, as action as well as moral support is requisite to ensure victory. The presentation by Mr. Conklin of a bill to prohibit the controller from drawing warrants to aid the State society unless the president and secretary make affidavits that pool-selling or gambling has not been allowed on the State Fair grounds, is in the interest of the San Francisco rooms. Mr. Conklin may not be aware of the effect it will have, and has been bamboozled into the belief that he was acting on the principles of high morality, but we will venture to say that directly or indirectly he has been used to forward the schemes of the pool lobby.

An Act to Restrict Gaming.

Under the above heading, on page 54, will be found the Act presented in both houses a few days ago. We did not see it in time to give a critical review this week, through from a hasty reading it appears to be just what is wanted.

A New Method to Dress Horses.

At the solicitation of many of our readers, the extract from the Duke of Newcastle's book is literally copied, excepting in the type. It is doubtful if the exact reproduction of the type of the Seventeenth Century could be got now; certainly not without entailing a large outlay. The facsimiles given will show the peculiar letters in vogue at that time.

Matrimonial.

Saturday last, at the residence of the editor of this paper, in Oakland, Miss A. L. Wilson was married to Robert Bruce James, the officiating clergyman being the Rev. Dr. Horton of the First Presbyterian Church. The mother of the bride, Mrs. W. H. Wilson of Cynthiana, Ky., was present and a few friends. Mrs. James has severed her connection with the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, and with her husband will engage in stock-raising in Monterey county. We have little hesitation in predicting a successful result, as there are few men who have as intimate a knowledge of trotting horses as the female partner of the firm. That they may meet with great and uniform success is our sincere desire.

A Queer Typographical Error.

A change from plural to singular was the occasion of a queer error in the General Topic columns of last week, in the paragraph which gave an account of Mark McGuire and John Murphy's contest on Fleetwood. The sentence was written, "By that time it was nearly dark, a kind of dense twilight, with a few pale, twinkling stars; scarcely as much light as there would be when the sky was fully ablaze with the far-distant suns." A pencil mark through the last letter, s, with a corresponding sign in the margin of the "proof," converted suns into sun, and the myriad of twinkling orbs were transferred to the grand governor of the day, which destroyed the allusion. As astronomers concur in the opinion that fixed stars are suns, the plural was appropriate.

In an article which appeared in the Chronicle of Wednesday it is stated that Buckley will not oppose the progress of the pool bill which has been presented, when he learns that a large number of people are interested in it becoming a law. From our high opinion of Mr. Buckley's ability, that opinion having been expressed two weeks ago, and we may add every word printed being our sincere belief in the correctness of the estimate, we anticipated his concurrence in the necessity of reform.

From being deprived of eyesight Mr. Buckley is not in a position to become fully acquainted with the bearing that pool-selling and "booking" has on trotting and racing, and, consequently he has to depend upon what he hears. From being on intimate terms of friendship with some of our prominent bookmakers, their side of the controversy would be presented fully, while the contra could only be gathered at a great disadvantage.

But the blindness of actual vision is, in a manner, overcome by the faculty of keen perception, and what may be termed an intuitive knowledge of the course it is politic to pursue.

Mr. Buckley is credited with the control of twenty-two votes, which probably means that twenty and two members of the Legislature would depend upon his guidance, accept his reasoning as having more potency than their individual judgement. This concession may be granted from good motives, and we trust that the influence is due to an acquiescence in superior ability, and not (as is generally believed) from the stimulus of money-eyed considerations. The wisest men seek counsel. A man who is well posted on a majority of human affairs may be entirely at a loss when he is called upon to decide on others which have not been studied, and in that case he will be guided by the opinion of those who have more knowledge. In regard to the pool-selling bill, the first impression among those who were not acquainted with the affair was that it was a strife between the lessees of the Bay District and Oakland tracks and the proprietors of the rooms.

This impression would naturally govern Mr. Buckley, until he learned that it was altogether erroneous. When agitation arouses a feeling whereby the opinions of thousands are made known, when it is fully proved that every prominent breeder of horses is in favor of throwing off the load which is crushing their industry, when nearly every man who attends races and fairs unites in the supplication that redress may be provided, when the best citizens of town and country signify their approval of remedial action, it cannot be otherwise than that a man who has the quick perception of Mr. Buckley should realize the true situation. Should he oppose the bill when sanctioned and sustained by such powerful auxillaries, the report that he had a moneyed interest in perpetuating the evil will have additional force; strengthened by corroborative testimony, Mr. Buckley has, beyond doubt, been accused of many shortcomings of which he was innocent. As we have had his character described, he would be more likely to be influenced by the desire to protect his friends' interests than for his own emolument. He would not be the power he is had selfishness been his governing principle. A mere division of spoils might attract to his standard mercenary cohorts, whom it would not take long to clamor for enlarged subsidies, and be ready at a moment's warning to desert his ranks to join the enemy.

Bad as human nature may be there are stronger ties than those which are founded on the love of lucre. Money alone cannot induce respect and esteem, and though it has been emphasized as the lever which moves the world, while that may be true in a general sense there are microcosms in which it loses its power.

We had faith from the first agitation that when Mr. Buckley became conversant with the true state of affairs that in place of being in opposition he would support the bill when presented to the Legislature, and we have full confidence in the report. With that gained there is nothing to fear, and even as great a corporation as the Western Union Telegraph Company will be powerless.

The Great Danger.

Should a bill regulating poolselling and bookmaking come before the Legislature so that there will be an opportunity for argument, there is not a question of it being passed by such a majority in both houses as will gratify every well-wisher of honest sport. But the danger lies in strangling it by methods which are well known to those who manipulate legislation, and the main efforts will be directed to keeping it in the background, and not permit a chance whereby a fair hearing will be obtained. Should these be the tactics adopted to kill the much-needed act, the legislators who lend themselves to the scheme will have to stand the brunt. Members cannot evade the obloquy by claiming that they were only the puppets, while others pulled the strings; the responsibility will fall on their shoulders, and there can only be one of two explanations: either an interest in suppression, or with judgment so feeble as to be controlled by the weakest of arguments.

We hope to learn before this number goes to press that a bill has been introduced and referred to a committee, the members of which have the confidence of the public. We have been informed that the bill which will be presented was prepared by an eminent jurist, so that there is scarcely a chance for faults in construction or a lack of legal perspicacity. From what we have heard of the points contained, it will be satisfactory to those who are the most interested in the passage of the bill, and without any grounds for opposition excepting those which are inspired by mercenary motives.

Needed Space.

There is no necessity for apologizing to our readers for the space occupied in the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN of this week in discussing the pool question, by all odds the most momentous issue that has a bearing on the breeding of fast horses, and which has a direct interest to a large majority of our readers. Even those who attend the fairs and races, but never buy a pool or wager a dollar, should take an interest in the discussion, and lend their support. The question is not intricate. Under the present system turf sports are handicapped with a weight which cannot be carried, and declarations of non-acceptance will come from every quarter. The evils which are directly due to the prevailing custom will, if not checked, induce well-meaning men to vote against pool-selling and bookmaking under any circumstances, and then a blow will be struck similar in effect to that which nearly broke up the turf when supported by the immense population of New York. Under the Ives bill, which legalizes pool-selling and bookmaking on the grounds of associations, there has been a revival of interest, and at no former period has the Eastern turf been in so flourishing a condition as it was the past season. New York State, or rather the inhabitants, have not so much at stake as the people of California. There are not as many race-horses bred in the whole State of New York as are turned out from Rancho del Paso, and though there are several large establishments where fast trotters are the aim, the whole of them combined do no equal what Palo Alto has accomplished.

Horse Interests in California.

Residents of California have a proper pride in the manifold resources of their country. Not far wrong when the assertion is made that in no other part of the world of like extent can a parallel be found. Alt the metals gold, silver, copper, iron, etc., the grandes forests on the globe, the most productive soil for all the cereals, lands which excel for the culture of every kind of fruit outside of varieties confined to the tropics. Thirty-nine years ago the prevailing impression was that gold was all there was to base prosperity upon, and when the mines gave out the only resources would be the herds and flocks of early days. when the missions absorbed the income of the country. Wheat toppled King Oro and Queen Argo from the throne, and vines and fruits threaten another revolution, after which Pomona and Bacchus will sway the sceptre.

When we came to California, April 1874, and for two or three years thereafter, it was the general opinion that the East was the only section where fine horses could be purchased. At that time Mr. L. J. Rose was the only breeder of trotters who was engaged in producing them on a scale at all to be compared with eastern farms, and Sunny Slope, fifteen years ago, was scarcely a "marker" for Rosemeade at the present time. Since then, Palo Alto, Del Paso, San Mateo Stock Farm, Cook Farm, L. U. Shippee, Irvin Ayres, Pleasanton Stock Farm, G. Valensin, The Reavis' Stud, and several smaller establishments have been organized, while outside of the places which are engaged in producing trotters, there are least twenty times as many people, who breed on a minor scale, than could be counted ten years back.

There must be at least two million dollars invested in the horse departmant of Palo Alto and Governor Stanford's Vina Ranch. The trotting stock at Rancho Del Paso represent a large amount, while Mr. Corbitt, Mr. Rose, Mr. Salisbury, Mr. Valensin, Mr. Cook, and some others have a big capital employed in the production of fast harness horses.

Great as has been the increase in trotting stock, it does not equal the kindred branch of rearing thoroughbreds. There are good grounds for the statement that Rancho Del Paso exceeds any other breeding establishment in the world for numbers and with quality in keeping with its magnitude. Palo Alto is so far in the lead in trotters that comparison is out of the question, and therefore California contains the two greatest farms of both hemispheres, in the line of production of the most valuable horses. When to these are added the stock held in smaller lots the aggregate will swell the sum total into huge proportions, and it is also within bounds to assert that on the basis of comparative population, California has more capital invested in breeding, rearing and training horses than any other section of the country.

That these great interests shall be sacrificed in order that a few men may gather in the dollars of a credulous public; that a telegraph company shall add to their receipts at the expense of so large and influential body of citizens, is too absurd a proposition for any man of ordinary judgment to sanction.

Owners of horses are not the only persons who have large interests at stake. There are a greater number of race courses and trotting tracks which are a mile in circuit in California than can be counted in any other one of the United States. As a rule they are more thoroughly equipped than those of the East which are located outside of the large cities. Owners and breeders of all other kinds of live stock, agriculturists, horticulturists, mechanics, in fact, all who exhibit at our State and district fairs are concerned in the passage of a law which will protect that department of our exhibitions which enables the managers to give large premiums for all classes of exhibitors, than otherwise could be offered. Poolsellers, and bookmakers on events which take place outside of California, their clerks and employes, and the telegraph companies, are the only recipients of the profits which accrue from the business as it is now carried on. Rooms which are used to sell pools and lay wagers could be rented for other purposes, so that the loss from the suppression would fall on a few individuals. "The greatest good to the greatest number" is the motto which should influence men to whom the making of laws is delegated. If our Legislators be governed by this guide (which can be termed an axiom), there will be a thousand, yes ten thousand benefited by poolselling and bookmaking under proper restrictions to each individual that is injured.

A Field Trial Challenge.

Mr. S. D. Meriweather of San Francisco desires to match Mr. L. J. Rose, Jr.'s, pointer dog Point against any dog on the Pacific Coast, for any part of a thousand dollars a side, to hunt one, two or three days, under the rules of the Pacific Coast Field Trial Club. Mr. Meriweather may be addressed in care of this office.

Restriction or Prohibition.

We have been informed that the "bookmakers" of San Francisco threaten that if there is any likelihood of a bill similar to the Ives bill going through at this session of the legislature they will join their forces to those of the "unco gude," and have a law passed abolishing pool selling and bookmaking entirely. Although our informant had full faith in the accuracy of his information as it came to him at second hand, and it may have been third or fourth from what was claimed to be the original source, we place very little faith in the intelligence being at all worthy of credit. Some such story may have been originated to frighten those who are immediately interested in the sports of the track from attacking their business, but that there is a single person connected with the rooms, or at least having a proprietary interest in them, who would pursue such a course as that implied by the menace is so absurd that a few lines will be sufficient to prove that it is a mere bogie to scare those who are easily shaken. Men who have a tithe of the sense which is possessed by every bookmaker we are acquainted with, are not likely to stultify themselves to gratify a whim. They have a valuable property to protect, and unquestionably will do all in their power to prevent the passage of a bill which will render their property comparatively valueless. But when it comes to decide between a total loss and one which does not entirely wipe out their privileges, they are too shrewd to throw away a loaf of bread for no better reason than that the pie and cake have been consumed in the fire.

Then again, the threat implies that they have influence enough to sway a number of members into the very opposite of what they have advocated. Let us illustrate hypothetically. A bill is before the Legislature to restrict poolselling and bookmaking to the tracks of bona fide associations. There will be arguments for and against the passage, those who oppose it claiming that it is not necessary to restrict, and that pool and betting rooms kept open from January 1st to January 1st again, are in no wise an evil, and should not be disturbed by legislative enactments. What kind of a position will these advocates be in when their next reasoning is? Unlimited pool-selling and bookmaking is not an evil. No matter if there is a pool-room in every block; no matter if sharks, who are envious of the profits which reputable men are making, should determine to take a hand, it is all right. But the same thing, when pursued under legal restrictions, when it is under the surveillance of men who have the breeding interests of the State at heart, when taken away from localities where temptation is hourly placed before changing throngs to a situation not so handy, and when an outlay is necessary to participate, when only a few days during the season can be occupied, in lieu of 313 days, while the earth is making its annual revolution, it is altogether bad, and must be abrogated. We will travel from here to Sacramento to get one good look at a man who will place himself in such a position, as we cannot imagine what sort of a genius it would be to possess the necessary qualifications for the job. An old story, and not a bad one at that, recounts the escapade of a famous advocate who had forgotten which side of the case he had to argue, and after the evidence was in, presented, not his client's interest, but those of the opposition, and with reasoning, too, so powerful as to be unanswerable. When made aware of the blunder, he had the tact to turn it to account by remarking to the jury, "I have now presented the other side as forcibly as it can be given, and now I will prove to you how weak the best arguments which can be offered really are." He kept his word, tearing down the house he had built with so much care, and traditions say that he gained the case, which his client thought had "not the ghost of a show." Able as he proved himself to be, so thoroughly apt in his profession that he could gain either side he advocated, were he a member of the present Legislature of California he would see the utter uselessness of convincing people that black is white to-day and black again to-morrow.

A New Race Track.

Santa Monica has always been the favorite winter resort of Los Angeles residents, and generally speaking the pretty little town has kept pace in its attractions offered to summer visitors with the older resorts on the Atlantic coast, says the Los Angeles Tribune. There is everything there in fact, to make time pass pleasantly, but heretofore the town has not attempted to inaugurate a summer racing season, such as forms so large a feature in the life of Coney Island and Long Branch.

Next summer this will be remedied, for the people of Santa Monica are even now taking the preliminary steps for the formation of a racing association and the laying out of a mile track superior to any in Southern California. Senator Jones and Colonel Baker have agreed to donate land for this purpose, and the track will probably be very close to the beach upon the flat north of the town. Such an institution will double Santa Monica's attractions particularly if the association is put in the hands of men who will secure the best horses to participate in the races.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—I note the letter of Mr. L. J. Rose in the issue of last week, suggesting that I call a meeting of the representatives of the various fair associations that dates may be satisfactorily arranged for the coming year. We did this last year, and it was supposed that the arrangement of dates fixed at that convention was for all time and to the satisfaction of all, provided the State Fair was set later. This objection has been removed by the Board of Agriculture setting the State Fair one week later. This gives an opportunity for the same arrangement as last year, and in the same order with the only objection removed. I think, however, it would be very easy for San Diego and Los Angeles to arrange theirs satisfactory to themselves, and that will make it satisfactory to all. Th reby saving a great deal of expense in the calling of a new convention. Yours respectfully,

L. U. SHIPPEE.

Advertising Notices.

Mr. J. O'Kane of 767 Market Street, San Francisco, has a large assortment of horse boots and turf goods of all sorts, which for durability and excellence of make are unequalled. Those who are unable to call should send for an illustrated pamphlet and price list, to become convinced that Mr. O'Kane will not be undersold.

There is always a demand for first class trotting stallions, and those who desire to secure one now should read the advertisement of Killip & Co., auctioneers, 22 Montgomery street. They have had two placed with them for sale, and are willing to take very reasonable figures for either. Intending purchasers should see these desirable stallions.

W. F. Smith of Sacramento, has three standard mares for sale, any one of which would grace the large breeding farms of California. The prices at which they are off red place them within the reach of all. The advertisement gives the pedigree of the mares, and also the price at which they can be bought.

"Ossidine" is a preparation so well known, that it is hardly necessary to mention the marvelous cures which have resulted from its use. S. A. Browne & Co., of the Kalamazoo Farm, Mr. F. Gebhard, of Lake County, and others, vouch for its value and curative properties in the present number of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN. H. M. Moore & Sons, of Stockton, have been appointed agents for the Pacific Coast.

Donnelly, Dunne & Co. advertise the services of the thoroughbred stallion Judge McKinstry. A glance at the pedigree will convince anyone that this son of Grinstead is highly bred, and without doubt he will be well patronized. Matt Storn says that Judge McKinstry was the fastest colt he ever saw run over the Sacramento track, an assertion which is endorsed by many others.

The now famous thoroughbred stallion, Three Cheers, is announced as usual this week, for service during the coming season. Since the colt Almont made his wonderful flights of speed at Sacramento, Three Cheers has been in great demand, and already his book is nearly full for the season of "89." Another of his get, Applause, is a noted racehorse, and has won several stake events, while Why Not, a daughter, is also a stake winner.

Begarding the large Real Estate Sale advertised on the last page of this issue, some few items in relation to the "Buena Vista" seem to be in order. The following, clipped from the "Alta" of January 1st, covers the ground so thoroughly that we reproduce it. We cheerfully commend the firm of Briggs, Fergusson & Co., knowing them to be reliable and honorable.

No more fertile valley can be found in all the length and breadth of this beautiful State than that through which the Salinas River winds its devious way. The strong, fertile soil produces rich and succulent grasses. Since the raising of stock has been subordinated to agriculture, it has been no uncommon event for the traveler to ride continuously in a grain field for twenty-five miles, where the stalks would reach on an average to the height of the buggy wheels, with patches of mustard from eight to ten feet high. It is in this wonderfully fertile locality that an opportunity for investment now presents itself, which is unusual in the advantageous terms offered.

To any one but a Californian the stories told of the capacity of the soil in this State often appear exaggerated and utterly incredible, but not a single statement is made in this article which can not be readily proved, and, indeed the proofs will be cheerfully furnished. With this guarantee in mind a few facts about the Buena Vista Rancho will be read with interest. The famous ranch of 7,725 acres is located on the west side of the Salinas river, at the foot of Santa Lucia mountains. The west end of the ranch is only three miles from Salinas City, the county seat of Monterey county, and fifteen miles from the world-celebrated Hotel Del Monte at Monterey. Spence Station is near the east end of the property. It is no exaggeration to say that the soil is the very best to be found anywhere in the State. Experts have pronounced it so. There are 4000 acres of sediment bottom land and 2000 acres of rich table land, all of which acreage is adapted to the cultivation of cereals and root crops. It will produce 500 bushels of potatoes per acre, and the finest and best quality of sugar beets. All such fruits as apples, pears, prunes, peaches, apricots and berries can be grown in rank luxuriance at a minimum expenditure. The remainder of the tract consists of low, rolling hills. The Santa Lucia Mountains shelter the lands from hard winds, and springs are everywhere abundant. It would be hard to discover anywhere a tract of land so well watered.

Unquestionably this is an unparalleled opportunity to secure valuable land and beautiful homes in a most desireable location close to San Francisco, and on the main route of travel between the largest cities in the State. The Southern Pacific Company is pushing its line to early completion, which means a great and increasing demand for property in that direction.

Nine thousand acres of the best of the quail land were reserved for that purpose. Not a shot is fired upon the ground except during the trials. The cover is perfectly adapted to protect the birds, as well as to permit satisfactory field trial work, being low grass and sage, with thickets at intervals of a few hundred yards. The quail will multiply upon the tract, and being protected there will serve as seed to keep up the stock upon all the surrounding lands where shooting is permitted. Irrigating canals upon each square mile of the trial ground afford plenty of water for quails, and as the land is used for grazing purposes the birds are not disturbed at nesting time. As a final excellence the grounds are quite level, being rolling in parts, but teams can be driven everywhere in safety, and all of the work of the dogs seen without discomfort. The trials just closed attracted many prominent sportsmen, and many more would have been present but for the epidemic of pleuro-pneumonia which decimated local kennels in November and December and killed off most of the Derby entries. Among them being,

J. G. Edwards, San Francisco, president of the club; G. T. Allender, Watsonville; I. N. Aldrich, Marysville; J. M. Barney, Dutch Flat; J. M. Bassford, Jr. and G. W. Bassford, Vacaville; H. Boyd, San Francisco; H. M. Briggs, Central Point; H. C. Chipman, Sacramento; J. S. Dunham, Stockton; Hon. W. W. Foote, San Francisco; H. Gerber and J. Gerber, Sacramento; J. G. Gates, Vacaville; Alva Green, Galesburg, Ill.; W. H. Harris, Oakland; H. A. Hubbard, Oakland; S. D. Meriweather, Ventura; W. DeMott, Stockton; Judge C. N. Post, Sacramento; Hon. T. J. Pinder, San Francisco; L. J. Rose, Jr., Ventura; William Schreiber, San Francisco: P. J. Shafter, Point Reyes; P. M. Scott, Oakland; W. Thomas, Chico; F. A. Taft, Truckee; R T. Vandevort, Pasadena; F. A. Watson, Colusa; M. D. Walter, Galt, and N. E. White, Sacramento.

The judges were chosen at a late day, the reason being the absence of the president of the club in the East. One of them, Mr. R. T. Vandevort, is known to field trial men everywhere as a good handler and judge. He might have just a bit more of self-assertiveness. Of the other judges, Mr. Payne J. Shafter had had a little experience, having served the club in similar capacity at Point Reyes in 1885. He possesses very many of the predispositions necessary to make the first rate field trial judge, and may become a second Bergundthal. The third judge, Mr. Ike N. Aldrich, was one of the first men in the State to import well-bred setters, having brought out Macgregor, a Rob Roy-Queen Mab, some years since. Mr. Aldrich had never attended a field trial until last week, and made a few minor errors, but in the main gave satisfaction. The decisions of the judges were all received without comment, and without any display of pettishness, a thing that only rarely can be said of a trial. It was easy to be seen by all of those present who had been at earlier trials of the club that the average quality of the dogs was much higher than hitherto. Both stakes throughout were first class in the quality, breaking and handling of the starters.

First in each was won by Old Black Joe, 10,057, A. K. S. B., a black pointer, supposed to have been bred by W. R. Pape at Newcastle-on-Tyne, England. The dog was purchased about a year ago by Mr. Jas. E. Watson, Secretary of the Pacific Kennel Club, through William Graham of Belfast, Ireland. Mr. Watson paid a long price for the dog, and should have received proper certificates of breeding, date of whelping, etc., none of which have been procurable. Old Black Joe weighs about forty-five pounds, won third in class for light-weight pointers at the P. K. C. show in April 1888, and is a fair looking dog all over, being especially well sprung in the ribs, and showing immense thighs and second thighs, with close feet.

He is the best average pointing dog ever seen in California, and probably as good as any in the world. A fairly wide and uniform ranger, covering his ground closely and with good judgment, showing fine nose and staunchness, and doing his work in free, merry gallant style. He is a dog to be proud of and fit to go in any company, either in this country or anywhere else. He was very well broken indeed.

In the All-aged Stake second went to Mr. Thomas Bennet's English setter Sirius by Sportsman—Sweetheart. Last year Sirius was broken by Mr. Charles Tucker at Stanton, Tennessee, and was run at High Point, and Florence being entirely out of condition and showing little merit. When sent to his owner by Mr. Tucker the dog was nearly dead, being leucocythemic to a marked degree, and a mere skeleton. For months it was an even thing between death and the dog but the treatment by Doctor Bowhill and careful nursing by his owner pulled Sirius into something like shape and he was turned over to Mr. M. D Walter for preparation. In the trials he showed good bird sense, nose and staunchness. He pace was only ordinary, his style in motion not taking, and on point not catchy. He was under good control. Third in the aged event went to the California Kennel's English setter Sunlit, also by Sportsman—Sweetheart. Sunlit has not justified the predictions based upon her form as a puppy. She is fast and tasty, and has good nose, but is rank, under no control, unsteady under the gun, and disposed to blink her points. Taking all of the points for judgment we should have preferred either Point, Scout Croxteth, or Solano B. for a place. Of the beaten dogs all showed considerable merit. Mr. L. J. Rose, Jr.'s big son of Vandevort's Don, was "off" except in pace and range. He was careless, and his nose did not not serve its usual good turn. Point won a place in each stake last year, and in his training had been doing splendid work, but during his heats was not up to high form. Senator T. J. Pinder's Scout Croxteth, by Croxteth—Frank, moved in rather cramped, constrained fashion, and did not seem a likely covey dog, but in cover and on scattered birds he was all over the pointer. He is a handsome dog, and nicely broken. Mr. Henry A. Bassford's staid old Solano B. showed better than last year, being much faster, and more stylish. Sol is a fine "meat dog," and not an easy one to beat on scattered birds. President Edwards' old English setter Royal Duke II has run his last race. As game a dog as ever started, he has lost his hearing, grown careless and headstrong, and must retire.

The California Kennel's Sirocco by Sportsman—Sweetheart showed good range and pace, but not much other merit, during his only heat—that with Royal Duke II. Mr. W. W. Foote's Dick, a son of Royal Duke II., showed pretty style, good pace and good breaking, but was rather incautious and overran his birds. Mr. Barney's Galatea went at a lively pace but showed no nose and no breaking.

Of the Derby dogs, other than the winner of first, which has been mentioned, all were very fine. Second went to Mr. G. W. Bassford's pointer Lottie B. by Professor—Gracie Bow. Lottie is a pretty bitch, a close worker, with fine nose, very staunch, has fair style and is a stayer. The winner of third, Mr. William Schreiber's pointer Nestor by Gladsome—Forest Queen II., sustained the reputation of his famous sire as to pace, range and style, but did not seem to have had much experience on birds. He will make a dangerous dog in the all-aged stake next year. The other puppy, Mr. William Schreiber's pointer Laddie by Tom Pinch—Lassie, was the fastest dog in either stake, had very fine, free style, ranged widely, but did not show a bit of nose. He seemed to know nothing about birds, but will be given another chance, and then if he does not come to himself will be destroyed.

The annual business meeting of the club was held in the rooms of the Knights of the Trigger on the evening of Wednesday, Jan. 16th, President J. G. Edwards in the chair. Present, J. G. Edwards, William Schreiber, F. A. Taft, R. T. Vandevort, J. M. Bassford, Jr., L. J. Rose, Jr., N. E. White, C. N Post, J. Martin Barney, D. M. Pyle, H. C. Chipman, Wm. De Mott, C. E. Lechner and H. H. Briggs.

After reading and approval of the minutes, election of new members was entered upon, and the following persons added to the club roll: Messrs. J. S. Dunham of Stockton, R. E. Auerbach of Oakland, H. L. Borgwardt and I. L. Miller of Bakersfield, S. D. Meriweather of San Francisco, Richard Seymour of Sumner, W. Thomas of Chico, and Hon. T. J. Pinder of San Francisco.

On motion of Judge Post the dues of Messrs. Houghton, Lechner and Seymour, were remitted to 1890.

The resignation of Mr. Geo. T. Allender was offered and accepted.

An assessment of $5 each was levied upon all persons holding membership in the club on Jan. 1, 1889.

Election of officers being the next order of business, Mr. J. G. Edwards was re-elected president, Mr. J. M. Barney first vice-president, Mr. L. J. Rose Jr. second vice-president, Mr. H. H. Briggs, 313 Bush St., San Francisco, secretary and treasurer; executive committee: William Schreiber, C. N. Post, J. M. Bassford Jr., D. M. Pyle and J. S. Dunham.

On motion of Mr. Schreiber, seconded by Mr. J. M. Bassford Jr., a vote of thanks was proffered to the local members of the Knights of the Trigger for the elaborate provision made for the entertainment of the visiting club, and for the general interest shown in the success of the trials. Mr. W. E. Houghton responded in an eloquent speech, modestly disclaiming all credit, and promising continued and increased interest in the future gatherings of the field trialers.

On motion of Mr. L J. Rose, Jr., it was ordered that the next meeting of the Pacific Coast Field Trial Club begin at Bakersfield on the third Monday of January, 1890. Congratulatory speeches were made by Messrs. Schreiber, Rose, Post, Pyle, and others, and the meeting adjourned.

The Knights of the Trigger had arranged for an elegant masquerade, which was given on Friday evening of trial week, and was a delightful affair. When ladies are present, beauty is universal, and all graces too, and the gathering of the society princesses at Bakerstield proved the saying true. The wife of one of the judges, Mr. Shafter, and several prominent social leaders in local circles attended the trials, among them Mrs. Borgwardt, Mrs. Houghton, Miss Hortense Lechner and Miss McCloud. The presence of the ladies added much to the interest of the trials, and was a source of great gratification to all the participants.

Field trial week this year was passed as it should be, in a spirit of mutual consideration and friendliness, and without any attempt to overreach or prejudice the judges, reporters or anybody else. Each evening the whole party of visiting sportsmen sat down to dinner about a great table, the feature of each meal being huge game pies, into which went quails, snipe, cottontails, ducks, and everything else killed during the days either upon the trial grounds or by shooting-parties, of which several went out and made big bags. Mr Schreiber took down a quantum of some alcoholic menstruum, with which he said he intended to preserve such rare birds, eagles, owls, etc., as he might kill, but somehow the stuff was mainly used to corn non-feathered bipeds, and the splendid state of preservation in which Fred Taft, Judge Aldrich, Nick White, Judge Post, Mr. Walter, Mr. Allender, President Edwards and Mr. Foote returned from the trials is the best possible recommendation for the fluid used. Ample provision in the way of horses and carriages was made by Mr. D. A. Leonard, a member of the Knights of the Trigger, and all charges were kept at a reasonable rate.

THE DERBY.

Monday, Jan. 14.—The Derby was the first stake run, and it began at 2.30 P. M. Monday. The morning was drizzling, but about noon the sun shone out, and as the light soil is never muddy, President Edwards ordered a start to the trial grounds chosen, Section 17, three miles southeast of the town. Since last year the lands have been fenced into tracts a mile square, and there was some perplexity in reaching the Red House, from which the start was to be made, but by 2:30 P. M. everything was ready and the first brace was ordered down.

OLD BLACK JOE—PRIDE.

Mr. James E. Watson's black pointer, Old Black Joe, handled by G. T. Allender, and Mr. Albert Peri's grade Llewellin setter Pride, handled by M. D. Walter. The dogs were sent across the open to a marked bevy, Joe showing the way. After freeing themselves, Pride showed better pace, but not equal to Joe's. Approaching a brush patch Pride dropped on point and was prettily backed. To order, Walter put up and killed the quail, both dogs steady and Joe dropping to shot, Moving on both dogs ran by a single bird which they should have pointed. A piece of grass land was entered upon, and after the brace had worked it over, the handlers put out a pair of birds. Through a brush patch and into grass Joe drew up on a rabbit, which bolted, when Pride ran close in.

Sent along, Joe made game, but on a down wind swing flushed the birds, stopping to wing, and then drawing on up wind, when a bird was seen running thirty yards ahead. Joe moved more and more freely as the heat progressed, and had all the style. He quartered well. Sent on, Joe trailed a running covey, but could not stop the birds which flushed wild. The dogs then got into a lot of larks, which were very tame, and Joe pointed several of them, always standing well to wing. Ordered to a likely-looking, brushy place, Joe pointed, and his handler trampled the grass for a little space and then ordered the dog on, but Judge Vandevort, to satisfy curiosity, insisted on a more thorough effort to find birds, and succeeded in flushing three, which the dog had been pointing. At 3.15 Old Black Joe was awarded the heat. He was much the better all around. In cover and on scattered birds Pride would give good sport, but he was entirely outclassed in the heat, albeit a nicely broken bitch.

Laddie—Lottie B.—Down at 3:27. Mr. William Schreiber's pointer Laddie, directed by G. T. Allender, and Mr. G. W. Bassford's pointer Lottie B., handled by owner. Laddie broke away at very high pace, and raced over a wide range, but did not seem to use any judgment, doing as much of his ranging over perfectly bare ground as in cover. The style of the dog was very good, and he was quite bidable, but showed absolutely no nose. Lottie B. was slower but was hunting. She moved without much animation, but left no likely place uncovered. A long cast was made without finding, Laddie flushing one quail. A big covey was finally put up by a reporter, and the dogs were sent toward where the birds pitched, Lottie flushing a single bird on an across wind cast, and dropping to wing. Moving on Lottie flushed three birds, the wind quartering to her and again dropped to wing, and within a few moments drew to a nice point on part of the covey. Laddie refused to back, ran in and flushed the birds, and the heat should have ended right there. Sent on Lottie false-pointed in some brush, and a big lot of land was then drawn blank, a bevy being found finally strung along a gully. Lottie B. soon pinning a bird which was killed by Geo. Bassford, the bitch breaking shot and retrieving, Laddie also unsteady under the gun. On along the gully Lottie B. scored three good, staunch points on single birds, and at 3:59 was given the heat. The bitch is a good dog on single bird work, her competitor better in everything except that he showed no nose.

Mr. William Schreiber's pointer dog Nestor, being the odd dog in the drawing, had a bye under the rules.

TUESDAY, SECOND SERIES.

Nestor—Lottie B.—The winner of the first heat and the bye dog being handled by the same person, the rule operated to bring Nestor, handled by Allender, and Lottie B., handled by George Bassford, together. Tuesday opened clear, sunny and cool, and at 10:15 the dogs were started. Nestor showed a great flight of pace, a low, level style of going that was pretty. Lottie B. was a little faster than in the first series, and worked her ground carefully. A half-mile spin set the dogs in good humor and a pretty heat resulted. Lottie B. soon sighted a running covey, and pointed along on the trail as the birds moved. Nestor ranged across the trail and stopped, then roaded in nice style. The birds ran faster than the dogs, and were at last put up by a horseman and scattered. Nestor flushed two down wind and Lottie dropped on a false point. Nestor soon after got point on a single, dropping, and being steady to wing when Allender flushed, no shot. Lottie then on the edge of a sedge pointed a single bird and stood to wing. Nestor immediately after scoring two staunch points and Lottie B. adding another to her score. Both dogs steady to wing, the handlers not shooting. After a stop of five minutes to water the dogs, they were sent on in brush, Lottie B. soon getting a point and being nicely backed, both steady to gun. Moving on, Nestor drew to point in superb style, and Lottie B. backed in equally fine style, both steady to wing, no shot. A fine, tasty bit of work. Sent on Nestor again pointed and stood to wing, Lottie not near to back. When ordered on, Nestor, after a little puzzling, located a bird and dropped on point, breaking in when the bird flushed. Nestor then got another, the bird flushing wild, Lottie B. backing handsomely. A hare broke cover near Nestor, and the dog went yapping off after it, but after the hare fairly got to moving Nestor became disgusted and returned. Sent along in high brush. Lottie B. located a bird and pointed it prettily, Nestor backing. Ordered up at 11:06, and Lottie B. being awarded the race.

The judges said Lottie B. had best nose and staunchness, and backed best, but as the heat was seen by the reporter the decision was erroneous. The dogs were equal in nose. Nestor had much the better pace, range and style in motion. On point and back they were about equal in style. Both were staunch, neither had demerits except for a break in. Two of the judges penalized Nestor ten points for running after the hare, which they had no right to do. The heat was clearly Nestor's, although both ran a good race.

THIRD SERIES.

Old Black Joe—Lottie B—The final race for first money was an interesting one, Lottie B improving much over her form in her earlier heats, going faster, in better style and with more snap. The brace was sent to a lot of marked birds at 11:26, Lottie B soon pinning one and Joe another, both steady to wing, no shot. A wide round was then walked over without finding, and at 12:06 a halt of an hour for luncheon was made. At 1:07 the heat was resumed, Joe soon getting a bevy point and a moment after a single, steady to both flushes. Lottie B then dropped to wing, when a bird flushed wild near her. Sent on, Joe on edge of a draw pointed a quail and stood to wing, and a moment after pointed three birds and stood well to wing, Lottie not near to back. The dogs were then ordered back along a swale, Joe soon making game and working out three birds prettily, finally pointing them and being steady to wing. Sent on Lottie B pinned a single at long range and stood to wing. Moved on a bird flushed wild near Lottie, the bitch standing to wing and shot. Joe then scored a point, which was almost a flush, the bird rising wild a moment after the dog stopped. Ordered on Joe dropped on point in grass, Lottie B moving near pointed the same birds, both steady to wing. Joe then got another point and the heat ended at 1:47, in favor of Old Black Joe, giving him first place and money. The dogs were equal in nose, judgement, staunchness, obedience and disposition, but it was a heat in which a good dog was compelled by superior pace to work out ground already cleaned by her faster competitor. Old Black Joe showed himself a wonderfully good, quick, sure ,and biddable dog.

FOURTH SERIES.

Lottie B.—Pride —The heat for second money was essentially like the preceding. Lottie B. had the foot of the race. Each was nicely broken, and either alone could do well, but Pride was compelled to trail Lottie B., and was consequently under a disadvantage. Soon after starting each scored a pretty point in brush and was steady to wing.

On, Lottie soon picked up another bird, and broke in when it rose. Then Lottie B. got a point on a single and was backed. Sent along, Pride dropped to point on a single bird and stood to gun.

A large waste of barren ground was then drawn blank, Lottie finally pinning a bird in low grass, and immediately after scoring another nice point, Pride also getting credit for a point and a back, both very nice. A little further along Lottie B. found and pointed a single bird in brush, and stood well to wing. At 3:32, Lottie B. was awarded the race and second money.

FIFTH SERIES.

Nestor—Pride.—The race for third was a one dog event, Nestor so far outclassing his tasty, but slow and pottering competitor. Nestor in high brush soon found a bird and pointed it in good style being steady to wing. A big covey flushed wild soon after and trailing after it Nestor scored four good single points and was backed once. At 4:12 the heat and third money were awarded to Nestor.

The All-Aged Stake.

The all-aged stake began on Wednesday morning, the day being seemingly all that a day should be for field trial work, but for some reason the dogs did not seem able to locate the birds with certainty. They ran by and over them with a perfect looseness that was annoying to the handlers and not edifying to anybody else. New ground was selected for the morning's work, near a schoolhouse opposite Section 17 on the Bellevue road, the tract being covered with grass and weeds about knee high, and appearing to be as likely a place for birds as could be found.

WEDNESDAY.

ROYAL DUKE II.—SIROCCO.—Mr. J. G. Edwards' English setter Royal Duke II, handled by W. De Mott, and the California Kennel's English setter Sirocco, handled by M. D. Walter, were cast off at 9:27 to work toward a big covey previously marked down by Mr. Seymour. Both dogs showed great pace, wide range and the utmost independence, the latter being in a measure accounted for by the partial deafness of both. They disregarded the whistles of the handlers utterly, and rushed about like mad, routing out birds, running over them, and raising the deuce generally. Neither showed a bit of nose, and after fifty minutes and plenty of opportunities to point birds, they were ordered up for lack of merit, the judges reserving the right to run them again if thought desirable.

On the following day, Thursday, they were again put down and run for fourteen minutes, Royal Duke II. winning the heat.

DICK—SUNLIT.—Down at 10:34.

Mr. W. W. Foote's English setter Dick, handled by W. De Mott, and the California Kennel's English setter, Sunlit, handled by C. N. Post. No birds were found until a lot of ground had been drawn, when, on redrawing a portion of the ground Sunlit drew to point on a single bird, Dick refusing to back, running in and flushing the quail, both steady to wing and gun. Moving on, Dick pointed a cottontail rabbit, and Sunlit stole in and pointed the same beast, both breaking when the rabbit bolted. At 11:26 the dogs were ordered up, and a move made to the ground used on Monday and Tuesday, the brace being again started at 11:49. Birds were soon found and shot over when they rose wild. Soon up-wind Sunlit flushed a single, and stopped to wing. A swing was then made to get the wind of the scattered bevy, and Dick got a nice point, being well backed, but no bird could be found. Dick's handler said the dog was pointing the form where a rabbit had been. Up at 12:27 for lunch, and put down again at 1 o'clock, Dick soon flushing part of a covey up wind, and Sunlit pointing the other part of the covey. At 1:09 the dogs were ordered up and the heat given to Sunlit. The dogs were equal in pace and range; Dick had better style, Sunlit had the better nose, and greater bird sense.

SCOUT CROXTETH—SIRIUS.—Started at 1:16—W. De Mott handling Mr. T. J. Pinder's pointer Scout Croxteth, and M. D. Walter shooting over Mr. Thomas Bennet's English setter Sirius. The dogs crossed a fence soon after starting and made a circuit of a mile, some wild flushing birds being found, but neither dog doing any work on them. Both moved fairly well, although neither was fast. Scout had better style and more uniform range, he moved in particularly merry fashion, and was very taking. Up at 1:34 and a move made back across the wire fence. Started again at 1:42, and Scout Croxteth soon drew to point in nice style on a single bird. A patch was then drawn blank, and a move was made to the opposite side of Section 17, ten minutes being consumed in the change. When again ordered on Sirius pointed a single bird, but was held so long to enable a photographer to make a picture of him that the bird ran. Sent along, Scout Croxteth made game and drew to point twice on the trail of a running bevy which flushed wild. Sirius soon after ran in and false pointed where the birds had last been, Scout backing nicely.

At 2:27 the heat was given to Sirius, a decision which this reporter thought might well have been reversed. Scout got no credit for his work on the last bevy, while Sirius was not only not demerited for a false point, but was actually given credit for a point when he should have been demerited. In pace and range they were equal. In style Scout had the best of it. They had about equally good noses and were both obedient and staunch, the pointer having a little the better nose.

OLD BLACK JOE—GALATEA.—Mr. Jas. E. Watson's black pointer Old Black Joe, winner of the Derby, handled by G. T. Allender, and Mr. J. Martin Barney's pointer bitch Galatea handled by owner, were cast off at 2:33. Galatea soon flushed some quails and broke in. Joe then drew to point on a single and was backed to order, Joe being steady to wing, and Galatea breaking in. Sent on, Joe again pointed, and Galatea refusing to back ran in, flushed the bird and both stood to wing. When moved on Joe soon dropped on point, the bird flushing wild soon after, Galatea near by flushing a single bird. Ordered on Galatea scored two flushes and a chase, and at 4:22 the dogs were ordered up for the day, to be run on the following.

A rank bad decision. Galatea was beaten pointless after fair opportunities, and Joe should have been given the heat on the work done. The failure to reach a conclusion after an hour and forty-nine minutes of one dog racing was one of those awful things that tend to drive a reporter to the verge of frenzy.

THURSDAY.

Thursday was a perfect day, just warm enough to be comfortable, just breezy enough to keep body scent along the ground within reaching distance of ordinarily high-headed dogs. The attendance was large, and of the pleasantest, including many ladies, whose critical plaudits alone would have given a roseate tone to the sport. First in the all-aged stake was run off and won by the pointer Old Black Joe, a splendid average dog. Perhaps not phenomenal in any one quality, but so good in all as to make him good enough to win a world's championship. That famous son of Vandevort's Don, the pointer Richmond, has hitherto been admittedly the best field pointer ever seen, because he got out with the setters and won in company with them. The work and style of Richmond are well known to this reporter, and it is his opinion that Old Black Joe is better in every way, even than the famous Richmond, than which higher praise could not well be accorded. The first race of the day was the unfinished heat of the evening before between

They were started at 9:41 on section 17, at the south-west corner near the school house. A big covey was soon found, which flushed wild, and when sent to the marked birds Joe made game, and was drawing on the birds when Galatea ran in by him, rooted out bird after bird, and chased. After the bitch had run away Joe picked up two points on singles and was steady to wing.

At 9:55 Old Black Joe was awarded the heat. Galatea had considerable pace, but was beaten pointless. Her owner had seen her do good work before the trials, but her public showing was utterly without merit, and her load of demerits would have swamped any dog.

ROYAL DUKE II—SIROCCO—Down at 10:01.

At request of Judge Post and Mr. Edwards, and also to reach a more satisfactory conclusion than a suspension of judgement, the brace was put down to finish the suspended heat of the day before.

Sirocco immediately ran over a single bird, and then scored two flushes up wind. Duke pointed a bird for a moment before it flushed, Sirocco backing.

The point of Duke was not seen at first by his handler, but the handler of Sirocco very generously called attention to it, an act meriting the highest approbation. Sent on, Duke just drew to point as a bird flushed, and when ordered on again pointed, but the bird ran away in plain sight. Then Duke scored two flushes and a good point in high cover, and at 10:15 was given the heat. Neither had much merit but pace.

POINT—SOLANO B.—Down at 10:20.

The final heat of the first series was between Mr. L. J. Rose Jr.'s white and lemon pointer dog Point, handled by G. T. Allender, and Mr. Henry A. Bassford's white and liver pointer Solano B, handled by W. De Mott. The brace moved off well, Point showing better pace, wider range and better style. Point soon dropped to wing as a pair of birds flushed near him, across wind. Sent on through high, thick cover, dusty with pollen, which floated off in clouds when brushed by the dogs, Solano B. flushed two birds. Taken out of the high pulverulent stuff, and back toward the wagons, Solano B. in a ditch pointed a single bird, Point backing to order, both to steady wing.

Ordered on, Solano B. again pointed, and broke in when the bird flushed. The break in was a bad one, the dog moving twenty yards or more, but as the bird moved in one direction, and the dog at right angles to the line of flight we did not look upon it as a chase. Point, as a divertisement, yapped off after a hare, but returned in time to make a pretty point on a single bird, and to be steady to wing. At 11:17 the dogs were taken up and moved to more open cover, where a big covey had been found and herded by Mr. D. M. Pyle. Sent off again at 11:28. Solano B. immediately pointed in a dry ditch, steady to wing and gun. Then Point pointed a bird, and both dogs broke in when it was flushed. The brace then ranged off through a patch of fine cover, full of birds, neither pointing until near the far end, when Solano drew up on a single, and Point rushed up on the other side of the bush and pointed the same bird. Sent on, Point drew up in fine, high-headed style on a single bird, and at 11:35 Point was awarded the heat. During the last five minutes both dogs were in the midst of a big lot of birds, but were hunting down wind. The wind was only a zephyr, and both should have made a dozen points.

SECOND SERIES.

Sunlit soon pointed a single and stood to order when the bird was shot at and missed. The dogs were put down on scattered birds on the ground where the last heat was finished. Royal Duke II hunted near his handler, but Sunlit ranged off out of sight over a rise when her handler claimed two points for her, which were allowed by Judge Shafter, who had ridden to the bitch. Called back and directed to work together, Sunlit soon got point on a single bird, Duke refusing to back, both steady to gun.

At 12:01 the brace was taken up, Sunlit winning the race.

OLD BLACK JOE—SIRIUS—After 27 minutes for luncheon, the only notable incident of which was the demolition of the lunch box by a reporter who lazily thought to rest his all too solid flesh upon it, work was resumed, the pending brace being started at 12:28.

Sirius soon pointed in a ditch and stood to gun. Joe above and near root of a tree pointed a single and stood to gun. Both nicely broken, Joe showing best pace, style and range. Sent on Joe scored another good point. Sirius then false pointing and being backed. When Sirius moved up Joe dashed in ahead, failed to detect scent and ranged off, Sirius still pointing, a good bit of work for Joe. Sent on Sirius again false pointed and was backed. A pretty picture to see the big orange-flecked Si in statuesque likeness, and behind him in the nerviest of attitudes the coal black devil of a little Joe. Sirius was finally ordered on, and Joe ranged off to one side, began roading and located a single bird in high cover, which he pointed handsomely, and was steady to wing. Across a ditch Sirius on a wide cast pointed a bevy and stood to wing. Toward the scattered birds Si soon pointed a single, then false pointed, and soon after pointed a rabbit. Ordered on Sirius got a pretty point on a little bunch of quails, part of the bevy, Joe backing well and both staunch. Then Joe got a pretty point, dropped to shot and retrieved well. Ordered up at 1:40 and the heat awarded to Old Black Joe.

POINT, a bye. Being an odd dog in the series Point had a bye.

THIRD SERIES.

POINT—SUNLIT.—Down at 1:49

Point was decidedly "off," refusing to back a point soon made by Sunlit, and both breaking shot and chasing, Lit retrieving the bird. Sent on, Sunlit roaded a single bird, pointed it, flushed and chased it, a bit of rankness that was surprising.

Point then scored a false point, and on a rapid swing flushed two birds, Ordered on, Sunlit pointod a single, Point refusing to back, and both steady to wing and gun. Moving on, Sunlit again pointed a single bird, Point refusing to back, and stealing point on the same bird. Both steady to order.

FOURTH SERIES.

Joe soon pointed a pair of birds and stood to wing. A wild flushing bird was killed by Allender, and Joe retrieved it nicely. Moving along, Sunlit pointed a single and was steady to wing and gun. When ordered on, Sunlit roaded a bevy by sight, stopping at intervals; Joe ran near and backed the bitch when the latter was dropped by Mr. Post. Black Joe then pointed a bird, which ran from him soon after.

Further on Joe scored a good point and stood to wing and shot, Sunlit to the left, false pointing and a moment after making a flush. Moved on, Joe rolled up three good points, one of them on three birds blinked by Sunlit. Then Joe pointed a single bird handsomely, was prettily backed, and at 3:10 Old Black Joe was awarded the heat and first money.

FIFTH SERIES.

After a trial heat between Sirius and Galatea, to select a competitor with Sunlit for second money, in which Sirius had it all his own way and won.

SUNLIT—SIRIUS.—Were put down at 3:50.

Sunlit at once pointed a little bevy beautifully, Sirius running in and pointing the same birds prettily. This reporter could not determine whether or not he should have backed. Then Sirius pointed a winged bird and to order caught it. Sunlit off to the right was unsteady to gun on a wild flushing bird which Mr. Post killed, the bitch breaking shot and retrieving.

Sirius soon pointed three birds and stood to gun, then he pointed a pair and was steady to shot, until Sunlit broke in and went to retrieve, when Si also broke. Up at 4:06, Sirius winning the heat and second money.

FRIDAY, SIXTH SERIES.

SUNLIT—SCOUT CROXTETH.—The heat for third money between Sunlit and Scout Croxteth was two hours long, under fine conditions, and was closely contested. The work began at 10:20, on Section 17, near the school house. Much blank grass land was drawn, a wild flushing bird being killed by Mr. Post and poorly retrieved by Sunlit. It was then decided to go to the Red House on another side of the tract, and a big covey was soon found by Joe Bassford, Jr., whose fog horn tones quickly called the party to his vicinity. Sunlit pointed a single bird right away, Post killing the bird, bitch steady to order. Then Scout got a handsome point dropped to shot and retrieved well, Sunlit near by being on point and steady. Sent on Scout soon pointed again and stood to wing. Then Sunlit got a point, the bird was flushed and shot at, the bitch remaining on point. Her handler tramped about near her, and another bird was flushed and the bitch stood to wing. The heat went on for some time without finding birds, and at 12:15 the dogs were taken up and the race and third money given to Sunlit. It was anybody's heat, because of Sunlit's disposition to blink which made her uncertain.

The heat ended the trials pleasantly and satisfactorily to all concerned.

OSSIDINE

KALAMAZOO, Mich., Sept. 15, 1888.

GENTLEMEN:—We have used Ossidine for the past two years and consider it invaluable for Sprung Tendons, Curbs, Ringbone and Spavins; there is nothing equals it; and for us it effected a permanent cure where firing failed, although performed by one of the most successful veterinarians on the continent. We have recommended it to others with like success, and believe it has more merit than any blister ever used.

Very respectfully yours, S. A. BROWNE & Co., Prop's.

This scientific preparation is an absolute cure for all bony or callous lumps on horses, and is a more powerful absorbent than "firing," without creating the slightest blemish. After a few applications the excrescence is so palpably reduced that even the skeptical frankly acknowledge that it is by far the most valuable outward remedy for horses ever invented.

The ONLY preparation in the world that will remove a Bone Spavin after it has become ossified.

Price $3.00 per Large Bottle,

Sole Agents for United States and Canada.

Owner of Eole, St. Saviour, Follist, etc., says: I have long used it in my stables, and find it to be all that is claimed for it in removing callous and unnatural bony growths, without leaving the slightest blemish. From my experience, I most strongly recommend the use of Ossidine, and feel that it is a necessary adjunct to every stable. Yours respectfully,

LONG BRANCH, July 28, 1888. F. GEBHARD.

NOONDAY.

No Record, Foaled 1884.

Standard No. 10,000.

THIS CELEBRATED TROTTING-BRED STALLION will be limited to 40 mares the ensuing season at Oakland Trotting Park, Oakland, Cal., commencing February 1st and ending July 1st, at $100 the season, with the usual privilege of returning the mare next season if not proving in foal. The names of his patrons will be entered on his book in order of their application. He will be limited strictly to forty mares. Pasturage at five dollars per month, hay and grain extra.

NOONDAY, sired by Wedgewood (692), record, the fourth heat, 2:19, (sire of Favonia, record, fourth heat, 2:15, and Nugget, record 2:26, he the sire of Nettie Leaf, four-year-old record 2:23¼), and five others better than 2:26.

First dam Noontide, record 2:20½, by Harold (113), sire of Maud S., record 2:08¾, Mattie (Graham), 2:21¼, and 17 others in 2:30.

Second dam Midnight (the dam of Jay-Eye-See, record 2:10), by Pilot Jr., sire of the dam of Maud S., 2:08¾, Nutwood, 2:18¾.

First dam (the dam of Woodford Mambrino, 2:21), by Woodford (thoroughbred son of Kosciusko), he by Sir Archy.

Breeders will please remember that this horse is not owned by me. I have only leased him for two years for the benefit of the State and breeders on account of the speedy lines and blood that this State is in need of, and no stallion now in public service can show a pedigree with such fast records as enrich the blood of NOONDAY.

I will also handle and train a few horses for gentlemen at fair terms. Address

ELECTIONEER STALLION

EROS,

Standard No. 5326.

Electioneer, his sire, has more 2:20 trotters than any living horse, and more 2:30 trotters than any stallion LIVING OR DEAD.

Eros has a record of 2:29¾, made in the fifth and deciding heat against a field of eight horses in his maiden race, and with only four weeks preparation after coming out of the stud.

Progeny.

Eros had last fall but three colts trained; the oldest a three-year-old trotter, an exhibition mile during the San Jose Fair in 2:34, last quarter in 36½ seconds. A two-year-old (timed by the judges) made a mile in 2:46½, and the other two-year-old in 2:47. Newminster by Touchstone (winner St. Leger 1831), dam Beeswing (winner of 54 races out of 64 starts) by Dr. Syntax (winner Doncaster Cup 1837, 40, 41, 42, the only horse that ever accomplished that feat.)

THREE CHEERS is bred in the speediest and stoutest lines. His dam, Young Fashion was the dam of Surprise, Scotland (the only horse that ever beat Asteroid a heat), Liverpool, Columbia and Bonnie Kate, the dam of Little Buttercup and the flying Bonnie Lizzie. His grandam, Fashion, was the greatest race mare of her era, defeating Boston in that historical match at four-mile heats, that is recorded as one of the greatest events in the annals of the turf. He is thoroughly sound in wind and limb, his family on both sides being noted for their exemption from curbs, spavins, roaring, or any other hereditary unsoundness. Horsemen, who can appreciate the highest type of the thoroughbred, are specially invited to inspect Three Cheers.

TERMS: $75 for the season. Mares not proving with foal can be returned the next season free of charge. Good pasturage at $5 per month. Mares cared for in any manner owners may desire, and fed on hay and grain, either or both, at reasonable rates. None but competent grooms employed, but no responsibility assumed for accidents or escapes.

N. B.—Mares sent from a distance in care of J. W. Morshead City Front Stables, San Francisco, will be forwarded without delay.

Thoroughbred Stallion

RATHBONE.

RATHBONE IS A VERY HANDSOME SHADE of brown, the only white a small star in forehead. He is of almost unexceptionable form. 15 hands 3 inches in height, of immense power and substance, and also of the highest quality.

He was never in "order" to run, and yet he has shown well, better by far than could have been expected under the circumstances.

March 11, 1886, on the Bay District course, carrying 5 pounds over-weight (115 lbs.) he defeated, in a stake for two-year-olds, Voltigeur, C. H. Todd, Notidie and Leap Year, the h. If mile being run in 49½ seconds. He has shown quarters in 23 seconds, and is so stoutly bred that he could hardly fail to go a distance at a high rate of speed.

His blood lines could not be improved. His sire, Young Prince, is the only stallion that I can recall imported from England to the United States with near strains of Stockwell and King Tom blood, these noted horses being the paternal and maternal grandsires of Young Prince. The family of his dam, Lady Amanda, ranks high among the noted clans of America. Malcolm, Regent, Ontario, McWhirter, Lady Middleton, etc. The following is a tabulated pedigree:

RATHBONE.

- Young Prince (imported.)
  - Knowsley — Stockwell / Orlando mare.
  - Queen of Spain — King Tom / Ma Mie.
- Lady Amanda
  - Hurrah (imported.) — Newminster / Jovial.
  - Lady Lancaster — Monarch, (imported.) / Lady Canton.

Lady Canton, by imported Tranby, and running from there through the noted race-mare Mary Randolph, by Gohanna, to Lord Egremeret's Highflyer mare.

Stockwell, King Tom, Newminster and Monarch, the best sons of The Baron, Rataplan, Touchstone and Emilius, and the dams of the same remove, by Orlando, Jerry (a St. Leger winner), Bay Middleton and imported Tranby, present such a combination of ultra fashionable blood as is rarely equalled. Young Prince was bred by James Smith, England; foaled 1870. See English Stud Book, Vol. XIII., page 363.

With proper mares there is no question that RATHBONE will get race-horses, with a certainty of getting, from any good mares, valuable horses for harness and saddle, with a fair show of a fast trotter, as RATHBONE is a capital road-horse and shows a good gait without any trotting practice further than occasional drives on the road. He is one of the "best disposed" horses imaginable without trick or vice of any kind.

In order to place his services within the reach of those who feel that they cannot pay the high price demanded for fast trotting sires, his services are put at the exceedingly low price of $25 the season.

JOS. CAIRN SIMPSON.

2111 Adeline St., Oakland, Alameda Co.

THIS CELEBRATED TROTTING STALLION WILL make the ensuing season from February 15th to June 15th, 1889, at 2,111 Adeline Street, Oakland.

Terms.

One hundred dollars the season for mares engaged before May 1st, and one hundred and fifty dollars the season after that date. The object of this is to shorten the time in the stud so as to give a better opportunity for training before the Fall Circuit commences. Last year it was the first of August before he was through, and consequently he could not be got into condition in time even for the State Fair. In this connection it will be well to state that there is no deviation from the price, and emphatically no free list. The terms are certainly low for a horse of the class of Antevolo, and there were several applications where the applicants expected an increase of price.

Form and Color.

It is rare to find a horse of such high form, and I am not alone in considering him as being as nearly perfect a type of equine form as was ever seen in a trotting-bred stallion. He is sixteen hands and half an inch in height, 60 inches from point of shoulder to point of buttock, and weighs, in ordinary condition, 1,150 pounds. He is very muscular, limbs as good as the most critical could desire, and as highly finished as a great majority of thoroughbreds. In color he is a rich seal brown, with lighter shading in flanks and muzzle, black legs, mane and tail, small star in forehead and off hind pastern white.

Performances.

He has been eminently of the improving kind. As a yearling he trotted in 3:42; two-year-old in 2:41; three years old in 2:29¾; four years old in 2:19½, the fastest record for a stallion of that age up to that time, and in his five-year old form he trotted in from 2:16¼ to 2:17 in all of the four heats of the big trot which Harry Wilkes won. As he only made one break in this race, notwithstanding the great speed of the contestants, he must be credited as remarkably "steady," almost phenomenally so for a horse of his age. Had it not been for an accident which temporarily disabled him, it can be stated with confluence that he would have trotted in 2:15 or better while he still ranked as a five-year-old.

In 1887 an injury to his left hind leg, first hurt when a two-year old, incapacitated him from trotting. That injury was below the ankle, and last year when apparently entirely recovered from that, and when he gave promise of doing better than ever before, owing to the track being harrowed very deeply he sprained the suspensory ligament, so that it was slightly bowed about midway between ankle and hock. This was on the 21st of August, and he was walked and jogged, at times being quite lame, until September 19th, when after short brushes, he was, on the 22nd given two easy heats in 2:28 and 2:25, "worked out" twice a week, giving two heats at each working in time ranging from 2:17 to 2:23. On the 6th of October I gave him three heats in 2:28, 2:19, 2:17 (several watches made it 2:16¾) the last half 1:07½, and going so easily that I felt sure he could trot several seconds faster.

Although I worked him carefully, it was obligatory that he should have some fast work to trot on the 20th, and on the following Saturday I gave him three heats, in 2:24, 2:18, 2:14¾, and the next Tuesday 2:26, 2:19, 2:22. He did not show as well in that as before, and though he made a good showing in the National, a wonderful exhibition after the drawbacks, and also his first race for nearly two years, he was evidently "not at himself." I have so much confidence in his speed and endurance that I will name him again in the National if it is gotten up, and will match any stallion heats of two miles for one or two thousand dollars a side to trot in October or November next, and take the chances of his leg standing.

Progeny.

He has only four colts, which were foaled in 1886. Dr. Lillencrantz has two fillies on his ranch at Aptos, D. T. Sexton of San Francisco has a filly, and C. R. Lewis a colt. It was the intention to train the colt, but having hurt his fore leg when a yearling he had to be thrown out. He is quite promising, and though Sunol and other cracks remain in, third payment was made on him in the Stanford Stakes and Occident Stakes. There are quite a number of foals of 1887, several of which have been broken lately, and every one gives good promise of trotting fast. There are also a number of foals of 1888, and, in my estimation, for form, size, and beauty they cannot be excelled by the get of any trotting stallion. That others share in this opinion is evident from the following quotation; "R. E. Bybee says J. B. Haggin has got a last spring colt by Antevolo, son of Electioneer, dam Mabel, sister of Beautiful Bells, that is as much superior to other colts as the Jersey Lily is to a Umatilla reservation squaw."—RURAL SPIRIT, Portland, Oregon.

Nearly everyone who owns an Antevolo colt thinks that he has the best, which is a token of their uniformity.

Pedigree.

The most exacting critic, if moderately intelligent, cannot find fault with his blood lines. His sire Electioneer is, beyond question, the greatest trotting sire of any age when all things are considered. His dam Columbine is the only mare which has two entire sons which have beaten 2:20, 2:16½ by a six year-old, 2:19¾ by a four-year-old. Antevolo stands in the same relation to the thoroughbred as Maud S, Jay-Eye-See, Sunol, Nutwood and many others of first celebrity. In Stud Book form the pedigree is as follows:

ANTEVOLO, brown c. foaled May 12, 1881 bred by Jos. Cairn Simpson, Oakland, California, by ELECTIONEER.

First dam Columbine by A. W. Richmond.
Second dam Columbia by imp Bonnie Scotland.
Third dam Young Fashion by imp Monarch.
Fourth dam Fashion by imp Trustee.
Sixth dam Reality by Sir Archy.
Seventh dam by imp Medley.
Eighth dam by imp Centinel.
Ninth dam by Mark Anthony.
Tenth dam by imp Janus.
Eleventh dam by imp Monkey.
Twelfth dam by imp Silvereye.

Pasture at $5 per month on the Oakland Trotting Park. Mr. Hinchman having resolved to pasture the field inside the track this season. It cannot be excelled, the herbage being alfillerilla, wild oats and burr clover, a living stream of clear water running across the field, and being enclosed by an inner fence. The gate of the latter shut at night; the animals are as safe within the enclosure as it is possible to have them in a field. In fifteen years which I have known it, there has not been a serious injury to mare or colt.

LONDON,

Printed by Tho. Milbourn, in the Year 1667.

in Corvets; for it is of no Use (saith he) and such Delighting Toyes of Prauncing up and down they will do, when they should go upon the Ground: For first, There is nothing makes a Horse Better upon the Hand, than Corvets, and that's Useful; then, there is nothing puts a Horse so much upon the Hanches, and Firms him there, as Corvets, and that is Usefull too; and Mr. Blundevil is mightily Deceived, to think, that he will go in Corvets, when he should go upon the Ground; for the Helps are several: And let a Horse be never so Apt, or Perfect in Corvets, and made upon the Ground too, (which is the First thing must be done) I dare say he shall never offer at Corvets with me, but go just upon the Ground as I would have him; because the Helps are several.

He sayes, That in five or six Months he can make a Horse to Gallop the Field, (a Necessary thing for a Souldiers Horse); which is no more, as he Understands it, than in an Acre of Ground to Gallop and Change, still upon a Gallop; and that I will Undertake to make a Cart-Horse do in three Dayes

Besides, they Dig out Rings, and Entrench themselves (which is a Horrible Folly); but I desire no more for Stopping than a Plain place, without Hills, or any such Toyes; and will Dress any Horse perfectly there, by the New Method of my French Book: which I Refer you to.

For Mr. Blundevils Bitts, They are very Ridiculous; the Eyes are Naught, the Cheeks as ill, and the Mouths Worst of all; with Catts Feet, Up-sets, Portes, and Broken Portes; Catts Feet, and Up-sets, with a Revet Nayl; and his Comp'eat Bitts, are compleatly Abominable, with their Water-Chain and Trench, the Mouth of the Bitt too being as Bigg as my Wrist, and the Branches as Long as my Arm; and the Curb as Bigg as a Chain for a Horse Nose, with some Stories flying Trench, which is a Snaffle tyed to the Bitt, and such other Tormenting ignorant Follies: The Leggs are so Loose, as if they were Broken, in the Knees, and are to Help up and down, as if they were Wind-Mill-Sayls.

He would have Us to Strike a Horse with a Cudgel, or a Rod, between the Ears, and upon the Head; which is Abominable, though he thinks it a Rare Secret. And thus much of Mr. Blundevils Riding, which is Grison Translated into English.

Mr. Blundvils Breeding, To turn the Stallion loose to the Mares, is indifferent Well, but not Right; and to put him to them again at Holland-Tide, stark Naught. To Cover in Hand is Unnatural, and you shall not have half of them (so Covered) prove with Fole.

To have a Horse-Fole, or Mare-Fole, by Tying his Right, or Left Stone; to Observe the Moon, and the Wind, to fail to Procreation, or get a Fole by the Almanack, is very Ridiculous, and to put Painted Clothes before the Mares, to make the Foles of what Colour you would have them, is no less Ridiculous.

That, if the Horse, as soon as he hath Covered, come Down on the Right Side, it is a Horse Colt; and if of the Left Side, it is a Filley: And if, so many Dayes after the Mare is Mounted, her Coat look Sleek, and Shines, then she hath Conceaved; if it do not shine, she hath not Conceaved, are all Tales to Tell to Children, rather than to Men of Reason and Discretion; all Mountebank-ship and Fooleries: and to make the Horse Lusty, and the Mares, there is little or nothing in it.

Mr. Blundevil Reasons thus: That for as much, as all Mares do Fole Standing. Wherein certainly he took his Note out of some Learned Author, as Aristotle, or the like; for I will Assure you, That never any Mare in the World did Fole Standing: If she did, the Fole would break his Neck; For, he comes into the World with his Head first, and his two Feet on both sides of his Head. No! The Mare is in too great Pain to Fole Standing, and therefore she Lies Down, and Foles so.

Mr. Blundvil sayes, There is a thing Growes in the Foles Fore-head like a Figg, which the Mare commonly Bites off, which is called Hippomenes; and if it be Taken, it doth Miraculous Things in Love-Matters, which he was Loath to Write of. Truly he was Over-careful, with his Old Writers; and, in my Conscience, if it could be Got, it would do Miraculous Things, not only in Love, but in every Thing e'se. But the Truth of this Business, is, That never any such thing did Grow upon any Foles Fore-head; and therefore could never be Bitt off by the Mare. No doubt but that Mistake is caused by the Secondine, or Clean, or Bagg, in which the Fole Lies, whereof all the Strings meets at the End, which looks like a little Knot, and that hangs Loose upon the Foles Head; but when the Fole is Foled, That, and the Bagg, goes together; for it is all one Thing.

Mr. Blundevil bids us take Heed, That the Mare do not Eat that Bagg, or Secondine, Because the Country Wives Kye do so. But I have Enquired of the Country-Men, and they say, Not one Cow in a Hundred does do it: And for Mares, I will assure you, They Never do it: And if you Ask, What they do with it? I say, They let it Lie there, and trouble themselves no more with it.

Mr. Blundevil condemns those that Take the Foles, to be taken Off at Martlemas; Because, according to his Old Learned Authors, he would have them Suck two Years at least: That is, he would have them Heavy, Flaby Jades, besides the Loss of the Fruitfulness of his Mares; wherein his old Authors are very much deceived.

Then he sayes, That the Foles Leggs are as Long when they are Foled, as ever afterward; wherein he is very much Deceived: Does he think, that the Body only Grows, and the Leggs not at all? A very Ridiculous Opinion! For, look at the Foles Leggs, and the Mares, and you shall find the Mares Leggs are Longer a great deal. Can any man think, That a Gray-Hounds-Whelp, as soon as he is Whelpt, hath his Leggs as Long as when he is a Dogg? It is Ridiculous.

To know, Which Fole will have the Best Spirit, by Running fore-most, and Leaping of Hedges and Rayls; is quite contrary to the Experience I had once of a Colt, that Nothing would keep in, Leaping over all things he came near; and when he came to be Ridd, the Dullest Jade that could be.

To know by their Feet, and much of White, That they are not Long-Lived, is as false a Rule, as any He hath set down.

His Reckoning Horses Teeth, is beyond the Number of what ever any Horse had; and that every Horse hath two Tushes Below, and two Above, is, I assure you, True. Some Horses (say they) have no Tushes at all, and they commonly ill-natured, being something of the Mare; but as there is not One in a Hundred but have Tushes, so there is not One Mare in a Hundred that have Any; and those that have ill-natured, participating too much of the Horse; and both are a kind of Hermaphroditical Compositions.

Mr. Blundevil says: The Sorrel is of the Element of Fire, and therefore is full of Mettle, Hot and Fiery; but I assure you, I have Known more Sorrel Horses dull jades than of any other Color. That White Horses are Flegmatick, and so participate of the Element of Water, and therefore are Dull and Heavy jades: but I assure you again, I have known white Horses to be fuller of Spirit, and Livelier, than of any other color; and so his Elements are Wrong in Every thing: Your best Way is, To Try your Horse; which Philosophy will hold to Know him best.

Mr. Blundevil speaks also of the Marks of Horses, That there are Four good, and Seven bad; such a Foot of the Far Side, and such a Foot of the Near Side, and which Fore-foot, and which Hinder-foot; and not too much White in his Face, nor his Legs to be very high White; and Feathers, and I know not what a kind of Conjuration: All false and ridiculous Lies.

When once I hear a Man Talk of Marks and Elements, I have done with him, and Know no other Philosophy but Trying; for, there are Good and Bad of all Colors, and of all Marks; but there are more Bad Horses than Good of any Color or Mark, as there are of any thing Else, even of Men in all things: Therefore Marks and Colors are foolish and false toys, only to abuse simple People withal.

Of the Perfect Shape of a Horse.

Mr. Blundevil speaks so of the Perfect Shape of a Horse, That such a Horse as he Describes, was never of God's, and Natures Making, but of his Own, or some Foolish Authors he hath Read; for he takes several Parts of several Horses, and Puts them Together, which is a Horse of their Own making; for there was never such a Horse Foaled.

Every Country hath a several Shape of Horses; As the Turk, the Neapolitan, the Spanish Horse, the Barb, and the Dutch Horse; All very Fine in their Kinds.

In a Word, I will show you the Ridiculousness of Setting down the Perfect Shape of a Horse. For Example, Who can set down the Perfect Shape of a Dog? A Mastiff is not a Grey-Hound; nor a Gray-Hound, a Lancashire-Hound; nor a Lancashire-Hound a Little Beagle; and yet all very Fine Dogs in their Kinds: And so of Horses: Which shows the Impossibility to set down the Perfect Shape of a Horse.

Mr. Blundevil says, a Spanish Horse is Pin-Buttock, narrow and slender Behind: I believe he would have a Spanish Horse to have a Dutch Horse's Buttock; which would indeed be very correspondent to the Rest of his Shape: Some Spanish Horses have Oval Buttocks, which is the Finest Buttocks of all.

He says they have ill Feet: It is true, some have, and so have Horses of all Countries; Dutch the Worst, and some of the English very Bad: He says also, Spanish Horses are Weak; but there are more Weak Dutch Horses than Spanish.

I have Had many Spanish Horses with good Buttocks, good Feet, and Strong; and if some should be Weak, yet their Spirits make them go much Better, than any other Horses that are Stronger.

He says, They are Gentle in their Youth, and grow Vitious in their Age: But I assure you, there is no such thing; for they are as Gentle in their Age, as they are in their Youth, and very Loving Horses: So Mr. Blundevil is very much Abused by his old Authors whom he Reverences so much.

San Mateo Trotting Stock.

Mr. Wm. Corbitt's trotting stud, at San Mateo, Cal., has always been regarded as an ambitious one. He has not hesitated to pay large prices for stallions that commended themselves to his approval. During the past few years he has also been a liberal payer for brood mares. He seems to have made a most decided stand on the breeding of his brood mares, as relates to their possession of the blood of prominent trotting strains, than most California breeders. This perhaps came about in a large degree from using stallions of that character, and then turning in their fillies as brood mares as soon as they were old enough, instead of holding them for sale; but he has also purchased freely and with discretion.

The stallions now in use are Guy Wilkes, 2:15½, the fastest entire son of George Wilkes, and his son Sable Wilkes, whose 2:18 leads the three-year-old record, and is the fastest four-year-old stallion record. The latter has not only the prestige of the fastest record of his class, but reflects great credit on his sire, Guy Wilkes, being the first of his progeny trained, and then to reach the highest mark ever achieved at the age of three, and the highest stallion mark at four, was a credit even to a sire whose individual prowess had given him the fastest stallion record in the great Wilkes family. As the pedigree of Sable Wilkes contains that of his sire, I herewith tabulate it in order that the why and wherefore of the power of both may be the more readily apparent.

			Daut of Henry Clay
		Lady Bunker.	Mambrino Patchen	Mambrino Chief.
				Lady Thorn's dam.
				Capt. Roberts' mare.
	Sable.	The Moor.	Clay Pilot	Neaves' Cassius M. Clay.
				Daughter of Pilot Jr.
			Belle of Wabash ...	Bassinger.
				Daughter of William IV..
		Gretchen ..... (3 in the list.)	Mambrino Pilot.....	Mambrino Chief
				Daughter of Pilot Jr.
			Kitty Kirkman.

Sable Wilkes offers to the public a new combination of families, as far as regards his position as a stock horse, although the families thus united are really off-shoots of older tribes that have in past years combined in the production of numerous great sires. A glance at the back lines of the pedigree show two crosses of Mambrino Chief, two of Pilot, Jr., two of Henry Clay, one of Seely's American Star, and one of Rysdyk's Hambletonian. To get down nearer to the animal in question, or to the subdivisions of these tribes, we have as the most conspicuous features: George Wilkes, Mambrino Patchen and The Moor, all of which are recognized as remarkably potent factors in modern pedigrees. Add to these the second dam in the above table: Gretchen (dam of Romero, 2.19¼; Del Sur, 2:24½; Inca, 2:27; and Neluska, 2:30½ at two years), and the producing force in close crosses is remarkable. The mare Lady Dunn (second dam of Guy Wilkes) by Seely's American Star, bred to George Wilkes, produced Joe Bunker, 2:19½, and united with Mambrino Patchen produced the dam of Guy Wilkes. From many indications that have cropped out in the past ten years, it has long been a theory of mine that had the blood of Mambrino Chief and Seely's American Star been located near each other, so that frequent direct crosses might have occurred, a great hit would have been the result. The power that Guy, 2:12, showed last season, confirms this view. Whether the theory may or may not hold good, we have at least in this case a harmonious blending, for George Wilkes, in covering Lady Bunker, had, through her, two lines with which he had in other cases hit remarkably. Not only did he get Joe Bunker out of her dam, but from other daughters of her sire he got such notables as Baron Wilkes, 2:18, Alcantara, 2:23, Alcyone, 2:27, Rosa Wilkes, 2:18¼, Wilkes Boy, 2:24½, Georgiana, 2:26½, Anglin, 2:27½, and Simmons, 2:28. Perhaps, under the circumstances, it was little wonder that Guy Wilkes should have filled the mission of his blood, and proved as fast as he is harmoniously bred. The sons of George Wilkes, out of daughters of Mambrino Patchen that went into the stud earlier than Guy Wilkes, are likewise proving remarkable sires. Though none of them have yet got as fast a representative as Guy Wilkes offers in Sable Wilkes, yet his full brother, William L., has shown in Axtell, 2:23, the fastest two-year-old ever bred outside of California, which is another significant indication that the trend of the family is toward very extreme powers. Alcyone, also a brother in blood to Guy Wilkes, has turned out a very rich list of performers this year, having no less than four that fall into the record list from 2:22 to 2:26½. These, with previous ones, brings his number up to seven. Alcantara, another brother in blood, has six. Simmons, another brother in blood, has this year put in his first claims to consideration, and in Gossiper, 2:29½, and a trial against time in 2:22½ (lost) at three years old, and Bon Bon, 2:26, at four years, makes a beginning that foreshadow a brilliant career. Thus by harmonious blood line, by individual speed, by premonitory success already achieved in the stud, and by analagous instances of stud success, Guy Wilkes has every voucher that any horse can have so early in his career, that he will prove a sire of the highest order if he lives and has health and opportunity. The bow of promise is as evidently symbolical of his present standing, as the garnered sheaves are emblematic of the wealth that followed the impress of his remarkable sire. It is a great thing in a sire that all his blood is made up of harmonious strains, in which every cross is a nick, and no obstruction intervenes to check the power of the united currents.

And what of Sable Wilkes, the black son of Guy Wilkes, out of Sable, daughter of the swarthy Moor? His speed marks the highest notch on the three-year-old stick, and that proves his individual claims. The blood of his sire flows in harmonious lines, and is great in achievement, as we have shown. Unlike his sire he has no brothers in blood yet tested in the stud wherewith to note the trend of his family as progenitors, nor has the cross been tried enough to point as yet to other fast trotters from it. He is himself the first-born and the pioneer of his kind. But as coming events cast their shadows before, so are the signs most encouraging. The harem of Guy Wilkes is warm with the daughters and grand-daughters of The Moor, and his progeny from them makes the heart of their owner glad. Yet, while the cross is but new, we are not altogether without our parallels to judge of its prospective power. Analyze the pedigree of that brilliant Palo Alto family that sprung from Beautiful Bells, daughter of The Moor; comprising Hinda Rose, 2:19½ at three years, Bell Boy, 2:19¼ at three years, St. Bel, 2:24½ at four years, and Chimes, 2:33½, at two years. How wonderfully like Sable Wilkes they are in breeding as you run the lines back to the mother tribes. Electioneer, who got them, is but the counterpart of George Wilkes. True, the Mambrino Patchen Cross comes into Sable Wilkes through the dam of Guy Wilkes, but a kindred cross through Bay Chief comes in through Minnehaha, the dam of Beautiful Bells. With but slight divergencies the two pedigrees are but a different distribution of the same blood. But this is not the only parallel. Analyze the pedigree of the mighty Stamboul, whose 2:14¾ marks him a veritable king of speed, and how like the component parts are to those of Sable Wilkes. Their order is reversed, it is true, but they hark back to the same source. So it may be assumed with safety that the blood of The Moor, which has united so happily with Guy Wilkes in the production of Sable Wilkes, will prove in general a harmonious cross for him as it has already proved so great in crossing with lines that are kindred to him.

The mares to which Mr. Corbitt is breeding these two stallions are by The Moor, and his sons Sultan, 2:24, Del Sur, 2:24½; by Electioneer, and his son Anteeo, 2:16½; by Almont, and his son LeGrande, trial 2:24; by Alexander's Belmont, Nutwood, 2:18¾. Arthurton (by Hambletonian, dam by Seely's American Star), and his full brother Irvington; by Steinway (2:25½ at three-year-old), Director, 2:17. etc. It is not alone that his mares are by such good sires, but their dams are fortified as well; so that in the second cross we find daughters of Arthurton, Clark Chief, Gen. Taylor, Belmont (California), Rysdyk's Hambletonian, Pilot, Jr., The Moor, Bald Chief, Whipple's Hambletonian, Culver's Black Hawk, Almont, Sweepstakes, George Wilkes, Signal, etc. In his broodmare list Mr. Corbitt has full sisters to Beautiful Bells, Stamboul, 2:14¾, Adair, 2:17½, A. Rose (two miles in 5:22¾ as a two-year-old), and other notables.

While the above are the most generally interesting features of the San Mateo establishment, in view of present "booms and fashions" one cannot fully realize the grand work that has been done here without reference to other matters. Many years ago Mr. Corbitt bought in New York State the two stallions Arthurton and Irvington, full brothers, by Rysdyk's Hambletonian, out of Imogene, by Seely's American Star. Arthurton was least valued of the two when purchased, but in the stud he proved a fine breeder, his progeny showing much of the Star quality. The fastest of his get is Arab, 2:15, but there is evidence that his daughters, a large number of which were turned into the San Mateo Stud as brood mares as soon as old enough to breed, are destined to prove a great find in the breeding problem, and this brings us to the matter of the third stallion in use at this establishment.

Le Grande is a bay horse, 17 hands high, by Almont, out of Jessie Pepper, by Mambrino Chief. When five years old he showed a trial of 2:24, and his dam produced Alpha, 2:23½, Iona, 2:22, and Iola, trial 2:27¾. As Almont's dam was by Mambrino Chief, it follows that Le Grande in breeding, as indeed in conformation and impress, is essentially a Mambrino. He has been bred upon daughters of Arthurton quite freely, his oldest foals having appeared in 1885, among which the three-year-old gelding Grandee during the past year took a record of 2:23½, winning all his races, as he also did in his two-year-old form, in which he took a record of 2:31½. This promises well for the Le Grande-Arthurton cross, and in my study of pedigrees I have often fancied that where Mambrino Chief and Hambletonian blood are united the chances of success are greatly enhanced by the presence also of the blood of Seely's American Star. I saw Grandee trot some of his races, and one morning in his work I caught him a quarter in 32½ seconds. He is one of the biggest-gaited horses that I ever saw trot, his action being very low, and with a sense of reaching for more ground than it would seem possible for him to take without tiring, until he gets well up to his speed, when the illusion disappears, and the power of the propelling parts seem equal to driving him on to his stride and to any limit that a horse can go. Lady Thorne had similar action when she first appeared on the turf. Grandee is of the greyhound type, with deep, powerful quarters and no waste lumber about him. Le Grande's fillies will also be turned in as brood mares in cases where they show satisfactory speed.

It will therefore be seen that in all branches and departments the standard of blood and performances maintained at the San Mateo establishment is very high. In breeding for public competition only the best material is permanently successful—the rest is nowhere. Mr. Corbitt's stud catalogue will not be published until after the foals of this year are dropped, but the catalogue of his sale to take place in New York in March is now being compiled by Peter C. Kellogg & Co., who have already published an informal list.—HARK COMSTOCK, in N. Y. Spirit of the Times.

State Agricultural Association.

The State Board of Agriculture held their annual meeting last Friday evening, with the following named members present: Messrs. Shippee, LaRue, Chase, Green, Shafter, Swan, Singletary, Hancock, Cox, Perkins and Carr.

Secretary Smith read a long and detailed report, which was ordered spread upon the minutes, The following refers to the society's

After the consideration of business relating to the year just closed the Board adopted their report, and elected the following officers unanimously, for the ensuing year: President, Hon. Chris. Green; Superintendent of the Park, G. W. Hancock; Superintendent of Pavilion, H. M. LaRue.

The following committee on speed programme was named: Directors Chase, Shippee, Hancock, LaRue, Swan and President Green.

The Board resolved that the pooling privilege be opened to competition at the proper time.

A man named J. A. Coleman having secured possession of a subscription receipt book for the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, is soliciting subscriptions and collecting payments for same. He sends to this office neither names nor money. Persons are cautioned against paying him money as his receipts will not hereafter be honored.

Petaluma Two-Year-Old.

The crop of two-year-colts around Petaluma is very promising for this year. Of course everybody has the best one—or at least it will be considered the best until the supreme moment arrives, says the Petaluma Argus, and that will be when the colt's nose reaches the wire. There will be lots of horse talk until after the fair. It has set in already in good earnest. You hear of "fashionable strains," high form," "good conformation, docile disposition and natural speed." One man relies on his colt on account of its relation to prominent trotters. Another thinks well of his colt because it is from a strain on the sire's side that is noted for "breeding on." Still another will say that his colt was sired by Windsplitter, and that it also "had a mother," that "great men have great mothers, and great horses great dams." Since the heavy rains set in and the gates of Agricultural Park were closed, the speeding is done on the Lakeville road, in grave yard-lane, on the street east of Harvey Hayne's Chicken Rancho, on some back streets, and wherever a piece of sand road can be found. John Harrison is up behind a fine looking lot of Dawns, belonging to A. L. Whitney and others. A. N. Burrel is driving several of J. H. White's colts that we have heard a good account of—by Hernanni and McClellan dams, and also one by Marco, a son of Elector, that is said to be very fast. Sid Sperry has a big filly from Anteeo and a Sultan mare that we like very much, and we frequently see her moving along in a smooth, graceful way. John E. Gwinn has a Dawn from an Alexander mare that is said to be fast, though we have never seen it moved. It may be that its fast work is done on the sly. Walter Frost is driving some young ones for J. R. Rose, down at the ranch, which are probably being broken for sale. This scribe was pretty well satisfied with his big Dawn filly, from an Elmo and Lodi mare, until he saw a small boy driving a little bay filly in the grave-yard lane that had the speed of a ghost. The boy was not inclined to be communicative at first, but he finally loosened his tongue and proved a good talker. He said in substance: "The sire of this one has been under a cloud for some time, but after the fair the banner of Rustic will float proudly in the sunshine." "Then you have faith in your trotter?" "That's what I have, for she's by Rustic, and he's a Hambletonian and a Belmont. Her dam is by Alexander, and though he's dead, he's coming back through Alex. Dutton, Yolo Maid and this filly." She is the property of Dr. G. M. Saul of this city, and although a little under size, has speed, smoothness, finish and quality that will be recognized and called beautiful—after a public performance. These are two-year-olds, and a promising lot, but then, like many of their predecessors, may not be heard of after this year. Wilfred Page has some good colts, but don't favor the idea of trotting them at an early age. Capt. George A. Allen has a Dawn colt from a daughter of Ethan Allen that is a big strong fellow, and as well bred as any, that takes kindly to his work but will not be driven for speed till he is five years old. It is too soon to say anything about the yearlings. In fact, none that we know of are at work.

Well Bred Horses for California.

C. W. Aby has purchased from W. Easton of New York, for Mr. Frederick Gebhardt, the following horses, and they will be shipped to Lake county at once. Mr. Aby is expected here within a day or two. Friar Tuck is one of the best bred horses in America to-day, being by Hermit—Romping Girl, a full sister to Isonomy, the sire of Gorgo.

Greenback, br h, 14, by Dollar—Music, by Sackwell.

Peri, b m, 3, by Holmby—Fairy Belle, by Wingrave.

Lizzie Hampton, ch m, 5, by Hampton—Dynasty, by Sterling.

Los Angeles Items.

Mr. K. D. Wise is an enthusiastic sportsman, and is fast gathering together a select lot of trotters. He owns Rajah, who has a record of 2:29½, but he was barely beaten in a race last season in 2:22. Rajah is by Sultan, out of Kitty Wilkes. Besides Rajah the doctor owns Semi-Tropic, by Sultan, dam Lady Mackay; Glendine, by Judge Saulsbury, dame Tempest. He also possesses a nine-months-old foal by Guy Wilkes, out of Tempest. The doctor several days since refused $2500 for the youngster. The doctor is also fortunate in owning such a good brood mare as Tempest.

Brant G., the property of George Gard, Jr., and Billy Hammel, has been placed in charge of "Knap" McCarthy. "Knap" expects to drive the horse a quarter in 37½ seconds. Brant G. was foaled in 1884, and is by Anteeo out of Belmontine.

"Knap" McCarthy now owns a solid silver trotter. It is attached to a clock, and was presented to him on New Year's day by Mr. Seamans, the owner of Bell Boy.

There are two new arrivals at Rosemeade. One is by Stamboul out of Highland Maid, and the other is by Alcazar out of Bon Bon. They are both colts.

Death of Three Times Three.

Some friend has sent us a copy of the Field and Farm of Denver, Col., from which the following is clipped:

Maitland, a grand stallion owned by Col. J. W. Dwyer and used at his Padraluna horse breeding ranch in Colfax County, New Mexico, died on Christmas day. The horse had been injured by another stallion. Maitland was sired by Virginius, he by Lexington, and was twenty-two-years old at time of his death. Col. Dwyer also lost by accident his stallion Three Times Three. He was sired by imported Hurrah, and was out of Wauanita, and she by imported Bonnie Scotland. Wauanita was the granddaughter of Old Fashion. "Three Times Three," writes the colonel, "had an eventful career. Was bred by John Reber of Lancaster, Ohio, on whose farm is buried Old Fashion, and over whose grave is a nice monument. At two years of age Three Times Three was sold by Mr. Reber to Mr. Simpson, editor of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN of San Francisco, California. While in training and considered one of the most promising colts on the Pacific slope, he broke his leg. Failing to get good veterinary service there, the horse was placed in a sling on board of a car and taken to Chicago, where damages were repaired. He subsequently fell into Mr. Reber's hands again, and from him I purchased him in 1879, and have been breeding him here ever since."

There is a slight mistake in the above, as the editor of this paper, bred Three Times Three and sold him to Mr. Reber.

Australian Horses.

As Seen by an American.

Capt. Thomas Merry, of Portland, Oregon, is no longer young, but he certainly looked a picture of ruddy health as he entered our sanctum last Monday morning, and extended his hand.

"Australia has evidently agreed with you," we said, as we motioned him to a chair. "How long have you been back?"

"A week ago last Saturday," replied Hidalgo, "my wife was none too well when we landed, and she has since been dangerously ill, which has prevented my calling on friends as much as I should have liked."

"The voyage has evidently agreed with you," we remarked.

"Very much indeed. I left here weighing 217 pounds, and have dropped down to 204, which is a blessing in itself."

"Did you travel much about the country while you were in the colonies?" we inquired.

"Yes, about three thousand miles by rail, and some by water. I saw some large sheep stations where the men were slaughtering the lambs to save the ewes from death by starvation, which was not a pleasing spectacle to contemplate. I also visited several large horse-breeding farms."

"Which pleased you the most?"

"Well, that's hard to say. I was equally well treated at each of them, and those fellows are the very soul of hospitality. I never saw a farm conducted in better shape than the St. Albans, owned by Mr. John Crozier. It is about forty miles from Melbourne, on the old road leading from Geelong to Ballarat, and is divided up into some twenty paddocks, in which not only distinctions of sex are observed, but age as well. I never saw more perfect system in everything."

"The old horse that gave his name to the farm died last summer—did you see him?"

"I did not, much to my regret. Mr. Chapman, of the Australasian, was to have taken me down there, but before I was ready to accompany him the old horse had died. He was not the horse that won the St. Leger of 1860, but one of the same name. He was by Blair Athol, and imported into Tasmania as a yearling. He was the only horse that ever got two winners of the Melbourne Cup—Malua and Sheet Anchor. The latter was an in-and-out sort of horse, and won it with a very light weight, although the field was the largest that ever started for it—thirty-four. This year the field was 28, the same as in Malua's year. Malua I regard as the most consistent performer ever saddled up in Australia, not even excepting Darebin, by whom they swear. Malua won the Melbourne Cup with 135 pounds up in 3:30¾, beating Commotion and Plausible, and carrying thirty-six pounds more than Sheet Anchor, who ran it a second faster. When Malua was beaten it took kings like Sir Modred and Nelson to do it."

"By the way, how did people seem to regard Sir Modred down there, Mr. Merry?"

"As a phenomenal race horse, though hardly equal to Darebin. He was run also by a very crooked party and got the rope very often when he should have won. He was the cause of the incarceration of Holt, the cashier of the New Zealand Bank in Sydney."

"How did that come about?"

"It's too long a story to tell just now, but some rainy night when I get home in Portland, with my slippers on and a pipe in my mouth, I will write it up for you. I think," continued Capt. Merry, "that Sir Modred was quite as good a horse as Malua if he had been run as honestly. He beat him the only time they ever met."

"What has Mr. Crozier, the owner of the St. Albans stud, done to replace their old horse?"

"He has Robinson Crusoe, the sire of Trident and Navigator, both Derby winners. Crusoe is a handsome brown horse and was a Sydney Derby winner himself. Then there is First King who won the Champion Stakes, three miles, in 5:25¾ with 129 pounds up, and the Australian Cup also in fast time. He also has My Lord, a beautiful chestnut, 5 years old, by Epigram out of Olive. He won six races out of eleven starts, all in fast time, and broke down in training for the Caulfield Cup. I tried to persuade Mr. Crozier to import either Hanover or Emperor of Norfolk for his mares but he seemed to think he had stallions enough."

"Did you think his mares equally good?"

"Yes, although I prefer some that Mr. Gardner has at Bundoora, where Darebin was foaled."

"Oh, you went there, did you?"

"I did and was never more cordially received. The old gentlemen invited King O'Malley, Stratford Strettle and myself out there to lunch on his birthday; and a more typical British feast you never saw. He is a princely host and a very fine breeder, but his stallions, always excepting little Suwarrow, are not equal to his mares.

"What was Suwarrow?"

"The most exquisite little gray horse I ever saw. He is barely fifteen hands one inch high, and is as highly formed as old True Blue. He carried 128 pounds in the Melbourne Cup of 1879, but was third to Darriwell, who carried 102 and Sweetheart 108. He was the greatest horse for his size that ever ran in Australia. The other sires are The Hook, by Fish Hook, son of the renowned Fisherman; and Precious Stone a very pretty black horse. He showed us a gray filly by Suwarrow, out of Lurline, the dam of Darebin, that ought be a second Miss Woodford."

"Did he show you Lurline as well?"

"He did, and I have seen but one such mare in all my life—Seline, owned by Major Doswell. And even she was inferior to Lurline in size and power. I tell you that such mares as Lurline and Calumny are to be found about once in a century. Those mares were bred in New Zealand, and got by Traducer, who was also the sire of Sir Modred. When they got over into Australia they began to win races, right and left. The handicappers popped the weight to them, but it took 146 pounds to stop Lurline and 144 to down Calumny. For some cause or other, Calumny has not bred as well as Lurline. Calumny won the Hawkesbury handicap at three years old, with 119 pounds in 3:35, and held hard at that. Lurline won the Adelaide cup, two miles in 3:33 with 128 up, giving as high as 32 pounds to some horses in the race. I got a tape line and measured her across the hips 25½ inches, and around the girth 75½ inches. Such mares a man sees about once in a lifetime."

"What race-horse most took your fancy down there?"

"I liked the Australian Peer best of all," said the captain, after a moment's hesitation. "He is hardly as handsome a horse as Whakawai, but a good deal more substantial. Mentor can beat either of them after they have gone a mile and a half, however."

"By the way, what sort of a looking horse is Mentor?"

"A very plain-looking horse, with a Roman nose, and no particular pretensions to beauty, but a more serviceable horse never wore a saddle. He is about such a looking horse as old Norfolk—a light bay, but not marked like Mr. Winter's old horse. His dam, Nightmare, is own sister to Commotion, one of the best all-round horses in the world. I do not base my opinion of Mentor so much on his performance in the Cup (though he beat 27 horses), as in the Royal Park stakes four days later."

"And what was that, Captain?"

"It was a dash of three miles, two whirls of the track, with weight for age; Cyclops carried 134 pounds, being six years old; and Mentor and the Australian Peer, being four years old, carried 128 pounds each. The first mile was very slow, but they got nearly abreast of the Maribyrnong stand, and then came such a fight as I never saw. I timed the second whirl in 2:35½, and started my watch on the Peer and stopped it on little Mentor. My fellow-commissioner, Mr. Wheeler, made it 2:35¾, so I could not have been far out of the way. It was the greatest performance I ever saw. Power eased the Peer up, when he found he could not catch Mentor, and let Cyclops get second money."

"Did you see Abercorn while you were there, and what did you think of him as compared with the Australian Peer?"

"Yes, I saw him frequently, a beautiful, golden chestnut, with a narrow blaze and three white feet. I deem him the fastest horse I ever saw when he can run at all. He got lame just before the Melbourne Cup and was scratched. As compared with the Peer, my opinion of him is just this: You let the pace be set very hot from the start and Australian Peer will be the victor. But let them begin by cantering for the first part of the race, with three-quarters of a mile more to go at a strong clip, and Abercorn can beat any horse in the world. He comes of a very speedy family. His half-brother, Carlyon, would be my preference over him, to be imported here as a stock-horse."

"In a general way, how did Australia impress you as a racing country?"

"It is the greatest handicap racing country in the world, but the stakes for two and three-year-olds are inferior to ours. Why, just think of it, the Victoria Derby had 124 subscribers, of which seven only came to the post; and of these not a singly entry was either bred or owned in the colony of Victoria. In the Maribyrnong Plate of 97 subscribers, 19 came to the "Post." This is the great two-year-old race of Australia, as the added money is £1000. In the Derby it is only £650. The Derby was founded in 1860 and the Maribyrnong in 1871, and in all that time no Maribyrnong winner has won the Derby."

"How are the Australian horses for size and substance?"

"Far and away ahead of ours. They have more size and a good deal more bone, this being especially true of the horses produced on the limestone soil within fifty miles of Melbourne. Mr. Crozier's yearlings had hocks and knees as big as many of our three-year-olds. Well, I reckon I'll have to be going, as I have an appointment at the Oakland Ferry. Good-day, and good luck to you. Come up to Portland next August, and have some fly-fishing with me on Trask river."

Orrin A. Hickok's Stable.

One has no idea what a pretty sight can be seen at the Bay District Track any nice clear day when the numerous trotters now there are being put through their paces. The inside track is devoted entirely to the thoroughbreds, numbers of them being constantly exercised, while the outside course is devoted to the trotting class, and their kindred, the pacers. A few days ago, while on a visit to the stables, Orrin A. Hickok kindly laid aside all cares for a time and showed a representative of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN through his stable, and expiatiated on the merits of each horse. There is hardly another horseman in America that the average reporter can glean so much information from, in such a short space of time, as he can from this veteran driver. He seems to understand just what is wanted, and does not wait to be asked a multitude of questions, but tells all that is to be said so concisely and to the point that no time is wasted whatever. Naturally the first of the stable shown was the redoubtable Arab, who looked "fit as a fiddle," and seemingly happy in the consciousness that all beholders were aware of the fact that 2:15 is no measure of his speed. His sleek, glossy coat shone like a mirror, as the groom walked him up and down, and the look of affection that passed frequently between master and horse was token enough that each was satisfied with the other. Mr. Hickok has a game and speedy gelding in Arab, and if perchance he take the horse back East this year his record will be lowered beyond question.

In Adonis, 2:14¼, a pacer of no mean quality is found. It would be needless to recite over again the eventful history of this horse, as it is known to everyone, but it still is a mooted question how fast he can go. That he should have made the time he did in one season was marvellous, but it is an open secret to frequenters of the turf that he can knock several nicks from his present notch.

The next horse to attract attention was Charles Derby, a high-spirited, but level-headed four-year-old, the property of Mr. Cook, of the Cook Stock Farm. This colt has no record, and Mr. Hickok is too conservative a trainer to prophesy wonders for him, yet still the quiet "I like him very much," was enough to convince the reporter that Derby will be heard from on the circuit. Derby is bred as follows: by Steinway (2:25), he by Strathmore, sire of Santa Claus, 2:17½; Tucker, 2:19; Skylight Pilot, 2:19; and many others in the 2:30 list. 1st dam Katy B by Electioneer, 2nd dam Fanny Malone by Niagara, and so on back to the beginning of stud books.

Three fine blood like fillies, all three-year-olds, were then led out, these also being the property of Mr. Cook. The first has a very appropriate name, which she does not belie, "None Better," and if looks amount to anything in trotters she will prove herself worthy of the title. She is a beautiful bay by Allandorf, he by Onward, the dam of Allandorf being the celebrated Alma Mater (dam of Alcantara, 2:23; Alcyone, 2:27; and Arbiter, 2:30.) The dam of None Better is Bashaw Belle by Green's Bashaw, and she also has a string of granddams that would fill a column. The second was a chestnut filly, named Algerdelta, by Allandorf, 1st dam King Girl, 2nd dam by Wilson's Blue Bull. Of the third it is unnecessary to say more than that she is a full sister to Phil Thompson, whose 2:16¼ gives the hall mark to anything that has identical blood lines.

Next on the list came the handsome brown mare Lillie Stanley, who made a sensation last year in lowering her record to 2:17¼. Mr. Hickok justly says she is the best mare that trotted in California in 1888. In one of her races she won the fourth heat in 2:20½, the fifth heat in 2:19¼ and the sixth heat in 2:21, thus proving her speed and endurance. Lillie Stanley has made a name for Whippleton and it is fair to presume that this stallion will be worth a mint to his owner, Mr. F. W. Loeber.

In the string is a horse owned by Mr. Wilfred Page of Sonoma county, called Electric, by Electioneer, dam a full sister to Manon. Although by horse rule he has passed his third birthday, still he lacks several months of being three years old. A beautiful animal, perfect in figure, grand in gait and exquisitely bred, he should, bar accident, be a credit to owner and trainer.

A fine bay colt owned by Mr. Ariel Lathrop was next looked at, and as far as color is concerned he is perfect, there not being a white mark on him. He is three years old, sired by Electioneer, dam by Don Victor thoroughbred; second dam by Rysdyk's Hambletonian. Mr. Hickok has given him several trials, one-quarter being timed in 32½ seconds, while he has gone a half mile in 1:14. This horse has undoubted great speed and is a worthy representative of his illustrious sire. Mr. Lathrop may be congratulated on possessing such a magnificent specimen of Electioneer's get, and it is to be hoped the public will have a chance to see him at his best this summer.

Another very promising mare is one owned by Mr. A. B. Spreckles. She is six years old, and has already entered the charmed circle, having a record of 2:28¼.

Last, though far from being least, is the little beauty Peep O'Day, owned jointly by Messrs. Page and Hickok. This son of Dawn is as pretty as a picture, and as kind and gentle as he is good looking. While not yet twenty-two months old, he can show a gait that is surprisingly fast. Mr. Hickok had him out for a trial, but it would not be fair to the owners to tell how fast Peep O'Day did go. Mr. Hickok was asked if he had heard of the rumor that Stamboul was for sale, and he answered, "Yes, I have been negotiating with parties in the East for his sale, the price being $50,000, and even at that figure Mr. Rose will not give one cent commission, for he considers the horse worth every penny of the money. If he should sell, he would have to pay fancy prices for another to take his place, for while Alcazar is a great stallion, it would be necessary to have one other at Rosemeade." On asking Mr. Hickok if he had positively made up his mind to go East with his trotters and pacers this year, he replied, "I have settled nothing as yet, but there is a strong probability that I shall not go; of course I can not say for certain, but things look that way at present. If I do make the trip, I will take Arab, Adonis, Stamboul and two or three of the young ones."

The Rosemeade Sale.

Among the many one, two and three-year-old colts and fillies which will be taken East to the New York auction sales from J. L. Rose's Stock Farm, are the following:

Alcazar—Agnes Clark, filly; Stamboul—Astrione, filly; Stamboul—Choice, filly; Stamboul—Del Fay, filly; Alcazar—Funny Wise, filly; Alcazar—Flower Girl, colt; Stamboul—Georgiana, colt; Harvester, Lady Corbett, colt; Stamboul—Lady Graves, colt; Stamboul—Mary Arnold, colt; Stamboul—Luna, filly; Stamboul—Minnehaha, colt; Stamboul—Minnie Corbett, colt; Alcazar—Nana, colt; Stamboul—Nellie May, filly; Nehusta—Record 2:30, by Stamboul; Alcazar—Ruth Flint, colt; Alcazar—Unes, filly; Alcazar—Victoria, filly; Alcazar—Wiggle Waggle, colt; Stamboul—Young Josie, colt; Alcazar—Young Signal, colt; Steinway Zinfandel, filly; bay stallion by Alcazar; bay stallion by Stamboul dam, choice; Stamboul—Ednal, stallion; Stamboul—Minnie Corbett, stallion; Stamboul—Young Signal, stallion; Kismet—Ruth, mare; Sultan—Young Josie, mare; Alcazar—Clara Wall, mare; Alcazar—Gibson's pacing mare; Alcazar—Young Josie, filly; Alcazar—Fannie Wise, filly; Alcazar—Kate Barlum, filly; Stamboul—Astrione, filly; Stamboul—Lady Graves, filly; Stamboul—Kittie Ward, filly; Stamboul — Phallica, filly; Stamboul, Mary Arnold, filly; Stamboul—Posie, filly.

In addition to the above from Rosemeade, Mr. Corbitt will also ship at the same time and for the same sale eighteen colts and eighteen fillies by Guy Wilkes, with a record of 2:15½, also four colts and fillies by Le Grande with a trial record of 2:24.

Mr. G. Valensin's consignment includes fifteen colts and fillies by Sidney, with a pacing record of 2:19¾, and Antevolo (son of Electioneer) with a record of 2:19½.

C. A. Durfee's lot will include the stallion Del Sur, with a record of 2:24½, with three daughters, and two mares by A. W. Richmond, one of which is a sister to the pacer Arrow, with a record of 2:13¼.

Hancock M. Johnston will also have sold two sisters to Arrow, and several colts by Judge Salisbury and Monroe Chief. He will also sell two thoroughbreds, one two-year-old by Grinstead and the other a yearling by Hock Hocking.

Racing Rules of Olden Times.

Marvelous changes have been made in racing rules during the past two hundred years. The following will show what was then in vogue in England:

1. The horses are all to meet at Sparton hilltop between 11 and 12 o'clock, where the riders are to be justly weighed, the weight 10 stone down-weight, by the weight (as they call them) of "aver-du-poyse," the horses are to be bridled, saddled and shod. After the riders are justly weighed by such a gentleman as shall be deemed to be a just judge not only of the riders' weight but also to judge impartially who comes first to the stoup, another gentleman must be appointed to the twelve-score stoup, to judge what horse is rid out of distance, which is a main business, and a third must be desired to see them start fair. 2. The horses must be led down from Spartan hill to the starting-place, and there must be three heats, the first heat to Spartan hill, there to rub half an hour, and then the judge is to give them a warning to get up and½ start; but if in that half hour they relieve their horses with anything but faire water, or if they ride out of distance, or riders want weight, they must lose the cup; only there is allowed two pounds for wasting. The second heat is to end where they begin last, and two gentlemen must be desired to see not only who comes first to the stoup, but at the twelve-score stoup who rides out of distance and who not; and 'twere well to have a flag at the ending stoup of each heat to be let down as soon as the first horse is past the stoup for the judges' easyer discerning who rides within distance and who not; the riders must be weighed every heat, the relief is to be only water, the rub but half an hour, and then the judge is to bid them mount. 3. There being three heats, he that wins the most heats wins the cup, so he rides within distance, not otherwise, but that horse which is foremost the last heat; this will make them ride for it. The stakes are ten shillings a horse, and to be put into the hands of the judges, who are to deliver them to the second horse. 4. He that wins the cup saves his own stakes; the second horse shall have all the rest. 5. It is to be considered that if any rider whip another rider's horse on the face, or pull back another's bridle, he shall lose the cup. 6. No bystander must ride in with the horses, to face, stop or turn them over, or any other way to hinder them, but must ride aloof from them. If any such fault is committed, I must implore the gentry to help me in the legal punishing of the offenders.

Oats. Nor was he a Horse-man at all, but only took Notes of Medicines, and set them down Methodically.

After him comes De La Gray, which is but, Blundevil, with some new Medicines that are but Indifferent: And for his Breeding of Horses, it is the most Ridiculous thing that ever was known Writ.

The Best Medicines of Mr. Blundevil's, are those of Martine, who was Prime Marshal to Queen Elizabeth; And as, I take it, an Alman, and an Excellent Farrier: Yet, even he, was extremely Mistaken about the Glanders, and Mourning of the Chine, as by my Woeful Experience in Horses I know, and will better inform you, when I set out my Book of Marshalry, and Shoeing.

Mr. Blundevil says, That Barley makes a Horse Piss Red, like Blood; but he did not Understand it perfectly. It is True; In Italy, Spain, and Barbary, they Feed their Horses all with Barley; which is, Because they have no Oats: For, certainly Excellent Oats is the best Feeding for a Horse in the World. But you must Know, that of Barley there are Two kinds; The Common Barley, that they make Beer of, which makes a Horse Piss a little Red; and of that Barley they never Give to their Horses in Spain, but of the other Barley, which is called by the Name of Bigg, and that never makes them Piss Red, and is the best Feeding for Horses, where there Wants Oats: Rye Scoure's too Much, and Wheat is too Fatning, and Good Bread too Pursey, and Foggy. In Spain they give Barley-Straw (as my Lord Cottington told me); but first, they Tread it with Oxen, and then it is as Soft as Silk. And thus for our English Authors, of whom I have told you the truth.

The Opinion of a GREAT MASTER.

A great Master, held the most Excellent Horse-man beyond the Sea, being Bred four or five Years under the Best Horse-man there, and had Practiced this Art from his Child-Hood, d d me the Honor, To come to Antwerp of a Visit to me from Brussels, and Brought with him four or five Horses: I Treated him the Best I could, and showed him my Horses, both Led Out, and Rid.

He had a Young Man with him (his Nephew) who had rid under him for the space of Seven Years: And though he had seen Rid, before him, the Day afore, Three of the Readiest Horses that ever I had, yet when he Rid them, he could not Encounter them, or make them Go at all; and truly, to my Thinking (I might say to my Knowledge) he had neither Hand, Heel, nor Seat, as he should have had; and so it was impossible to make them Go Right.

His Master told me, He had found a New Method for Dressing of Horses: Which was; first, Never to Trot a Horse, (that was his Maxim): Next, Never to Use the Cavezon, nor pull the Horses Head into the Turn. This is, What he would Not have Done: And, What he would have Done, is; To put the Horse to the Single Pillar, with a Long Rope, and there Pinch him with the Spurs, which, says he, Puts him upon the Hand: Then to Whip him About with the Shambriere, to make him Go half Terra a Terra, and half in Corvets, and then to make him Go in Corvets; which settles him on the Hand: And this is the New Way of Dressing; Indeed, of Not Dressing Horses.

To take in Pieces, and Anatomize this New Way: And first, of what he will Not have Done; which is, Never to Trot a Horse, and Stop him; which is certainly the Foundation of all Things in the Mannage, either to settle him on the Hand, or to put him on the Hanches. Next, Never to Use the Cavezon, without which no Horse can be Drest, for many Reasons. Then, Never to Pull the Horses Head into the Turn: By which means the Horses Legs, and Body, shall never go Right, or supple either to Hand or Heel.

Now, of what he will have done to Work his Horse: First, To put him to the Single Pillar, with a Long Rope, and there Pinch him with Spurs; which will do Bravely with a Colt, that never knew the Spurs; he will surely Throw him rather than be put upon the Hand: Nay, a Horse that knows the Spurs, will never be put upon the Hand with that Invention.

Then to Whip him about with the Shambriere, to make him go half Terra a Terra, and half Corvets; which is impossible, for they are two several Actions with his Legs: Besides, this excellent Lesson is in Pluvinel's Book; which he never used, but to a Horse that was Almost Drest; and it is naught, then: Put him in Corvets, to settle him on the Hand, says he, which is in La Broues' Book, only for a Horse that is near Drest, and not for a Colt: Besides, some Horses will never go Corvets, do what you can: So this Method may Spoil Horses, but shall never Dress them, I assure you; and you may take my Word for it. He will (by his New Method) never Trot, Gallop, or Walk a Horse; but no Horse in the World can be Made without These Three, nor without a Cavezon, Stopping, and having his Head Pull'd into the Turn.

A strange Conceit of a GREAT MASTER.

There was a Great Master, that would Ride his Horses Twice a Day; saying, That if he could Dress a Horse in Six Months, Once a day Riding of them, he was sure he could Dress a Horse in Three Months, Riding them Twice a Day; Wherein he is much Deceived: For a Horse being Flesh and Blood, cannot endure perpetual Travel with little Rest; and no Exercise is more Violent for a Horse than in the Mannage. Nay, of Necessity, Riding so much One Morning, he will not Recover it of a Day or Two: And if a Horse Oppose the Man, which all Horses will do at First, and are Vitious, one must Correct him Soundly; and, How will you Ride him in the Afternoon again? Dull him you may, and take off his Spirit, make him Hate the Mannage, and train him like a Vaulting Horse, rather than like a live Horse. Nor can you ever Give him his Meat, Water, or Rest, in Order; the Want of which must make him Sick, and subject to many Diseases; and Shortly after, Death will follow: and there is your Twice a day Riding him, which Makes him fit for the Hunts-Man to Dress him for his Dogs.

Some say again, That they will Ride no Horse Twice a Day, but Horses that are very Vitious, and of great Strength: I have seen many Horses that are Vitious, but few of such great Strength. For, if the Horse be very Vitious, you must Correct him Soundly, and Ride him so long until he Obey you, in some small Measure; and then I am sure you have Rid him so Violently, and so long, as he will hardly be to be Rid the next Morning; and Less, to be Rid any more that Day: And if the Horse be so Docile as to Obey you in Every Thing, certainly the Best way is to take but a Little of him that Morning, to Encourage him to do so again; and the more to Encourage him, not to Ride him until the next Morning again: so he will be Pleasant, Lively, and in the Lust, and take Pleasure in you, and the Mannage; and Learn more Thus in a Month's Riding him but Once a day, than he shall in three Months, Riding him Twice a day.

Have not all Scholars Play-days? and certain Hours of Rest in their days of Study? All Trades-Men, Holidays to Rejoice themselves in? States-Men, Divertisments from Business? And Good Preachers Preach not every Sunday? Have not Lawyers also their Terms, and Vacations; and even Carrier's Horses Rest Christmas, and other Holidays; and so Cart-Horses, Brewer's Horses, Coach-Horses, Hackney-Horses, Running-Horses? And shall only Horses of Mannage be Galley-Slaves? There is no Reason for that. No, not dogs can Hunt every day, or Grey-Hounds Course every day, or Spaniels Range every day; or Hawks Fly every day; there are hundred Examples of it, but These are sufficient to let you see the great Folly, and Ignorance, of those that will Ride their Horses of Mannage Twice a Day.

Just let the Polander, being Sick, whose Physician gave him Nine Pills to be taken, Three every Night, for Three Nights together; who very Wisely considered, That if Three Pills every Night, for Three Nights together, would Recover him; That then, taking All the Pills One Night, would Make him Well Presently. And so did, and had Almost Purged himself Out of this World.

So any Horse-man that will Venture to Make a Horse as well in Three Months, with Two Lessons a Day, as another in Six Months with one Lesson a Day, may be sure to Kill his Horse, sooner than Teach him, and to show himself Ridiculous in his undertaking.

Solano and Napa Agricultural Society.

This flourishing district society have announced the opening of five colt stakes, and liberal additions are offered by the directors. There are so many good colts in the State, and the Napa meeting is such a popular one, that beyond doubt the entries will be very large. The first event is for two-year-olds, free for all.

$50 entrance, of which $10 must accompany nomination; $10 payable May 1st; $15 payable July 1st, and remaining $15 payable ten days before the race. $250 added by the society. Fleet barred.

No. 2 is for three-year-olds, free for all.

$100 entrance, of which $20 must accompany nomination; $20 payable May 1st; $30 payable June 1st, and remaining $30 payable ten days before the race. $400 added by the society. Sunol barred.

No 3 is for yearlings, and is a district stake only, comprising the following counties: Solano, Napa, Sonoma, Marin, Lake, Colusa, Yolo and Mendocino.

$40 entrance, of which $10 must accompany nomination; $10 payable May 1st, $10 payable July 1st, and remaining $10 payable ten days before the race. $100 added by the society.

No. 4 is for two-year-olds, a district stake, comprising the same counties as race No. 3.

$50 entrance, of which $10 must accompany nomination; $10 payable May 1st, $15 payable July 1st, and remaining $15 payable ten days before the race. $200 added by the society.

No. 5 is for three-year-olds, another district stake, comprising the same counties as No 3.

$50 entrance, of which $10 must accompany nomination, $10 payable May 1st, $15 payable July 1st, and remaining $15 payable ten days before the race. $300 added by the society.

W. H., San Francisco.

Would you please tell me how and where I can become a jockey. I am a young man, 19 years old, and I weigh 130 pounds.

Answer.—At your age and weight hardly one in a thousand could become a successful jockey.

Matt.

Please let me know how many races Old Boston ran and how many he won.

Answer—If you mean Boston, he started in forty-five races, winning forty, of which thirty were at four-mile heats (including five walk-overs), nine at three-mile heats (one walk over), and one at two-mile heats.

Will you kindly tell me what was the height and weight of Flora Temple, and also of Goldsmith Maid?

Answer—Flora Temple was fourteen hands two inches in height, and weighed about 850 pounds. Goldsmith Maid was fifteen hands one inch high, and weighed about 840 pounds.

J. A. W., Fresno.

Will you please let me know, 1st, the name of the dam of Iowa Chief; 2nd, dam of Marrian; 3rd, dam of Green's Bashaw; 4th, Pedigree of Golddust; 5th, Pedigree and performance of Mountain Maid?

Answer—1st, Topsy by Prophet; 2nd, there is no such mare. You probably mean Marian, if so you will have to give us what data you have in relation to the one you ask about, as there are quite a number of the same name. 3rd, Belle by Webber's Tom Thumb. 4th, foaled about 1855, got by Vermont Morgan, son of the Barnard Morgan, by Gifford Morgan; dam represented to be by Arabian Zilcaadi, g. d. by imp. Barefoot. 5th, which one do you mean, there are ten of them?

Franl: Savage.

Will you please let me know through your columns what the weight of Shelby Barnes, the colored jockey, is?

Answer—On the question being asked him one day, at Saratoga, last summer, Pikey (as he is usually called) informed a correspondent of the Breeder and Sportsman that his weight was seventy-nine pounds. On the first of last month, however, his weight was 95 pounds.

A subscriber.

A few weeks ago a gentleman requested us to give him the history of Walnut Bark. Not being able to shed any light on the matter, we requested our readers to send in any information they might have on the subject. Mr. A. E. DeCamp, of Los Angeles, kindly forwards the following answer:

Walnut Bark was brought to Oregon near Eugene City, about 1864. He was a quarter horse without breeding, and took his name from his peculiar color. Some six years ago a man named John Adams had a stallion, s t b, by the above Walnut Bark. He was a bay, and was likewise a short horse. Nothing further is known of him.

An Australian.

Will you please inform me through the columns of your valuable paper what allowances are made in Australia for English or American-bred horses when entered in races there?

Answer.—Rule 44 of the A. J. C Rules is as follows: In all races in which standard weights for age shall be carried, an allowance according to the following scale shall be made to all horses sired north of the line, and foaled between the 1st of January and the 1st of August, viz.:

Two and three years old	10 lbs.
Four years old	7 lbs.
Five years old	3 lbs.

Name Claimed.

Widden & Schware, of Pleasanton, claims the name of Cheerful for a bay filly foaled April 21, 1888, by Three Cheers, dam Queen Emma by Woodburn.

Fine Horse Dead.

On Monday of last week, the 14th instant, the fine old stallion Index retired from a long and useful life, says the Phoenix Herald, A. T. He was brought to this valley by Dave Balsz, from Oakland, California, eleven years ago, and though he has been in various hands since then Dave has always been his owner. Index was a fine specimen of the trotting stallion, and opened our race tracks here on the fairgrounds, and gave it a record by making a half mile in 1:18, driven by Schofield, two years ago, when he was 26 years old. He died at 28, and leaves numerous colts that show his fine breeding and speed, among which are Index Jr., the fastest trotting stallion in the southwest to-day. Dave Balsz mourns the demise of his favorite horse as of an old and faithful friend.

Joe Courtney has been receiving many congratulations from friends on account of the fine showing that the Australian colts are making under his handling at the Sacramento Track. I saw Mr. Newton, their owner, a day or two ago, and he expresses the utmost confidence in his Antipodean purchases, and no wonder, for finer blood never ran in horses veins than through those of his late importations.

Mr. W. Thompson, of Franktown, Nevada, has two exceedingly fine two-year-old colts sired by Three Cheers, which he will put in exercise shortly and determine their worth. The grandsons of old imp. Hurrah are becoming extremely fashionable of late, their extraordinary speed placing them among the most favored ones.

C. J. Hamlin has been asked by Washington persons to sell Chimes, his famous young stallion, and has replied that he will sell him for $50,000. Chimes was bred by Leland Stanford, was foaled April 4, 1884, has a two-year-old record of 2:33½, was sired by Electioneer, and is a full brother to St. Bell.

I don't think my hand shake with Dr. Geo. W. Eckstein, of Philadelphia, was quite as cordial as I extend to most people, for he was the gentleman sent out by R. Steele, Esq., to purchase Antevolo, and when I found that the grand stallion was really going to leave California, I somehow felt that the Doctor had done the State an act of injury. However, before he left for his far Eastern home, I found him a genial companion, and so wish him God speed.

Grim's Gossip.

Well, Antevolo is sold.

Jockey Barnes has not so good an opinion of Proctor Knott as Sam Bryant.

Salina, the dam of Salvator, will be bred this season to Guadelope, a son of imp. Prince Charlie.

J. G. Sanchez of Hollister, has sold the trotting stallion Billy Mathews to a party in Los Angeles.

There is a rumor current that Senator George Hearst is negotiating for a fine stock farm in the neighborhood of Pleasanton.

A match has been arranged in Los Angeles, for a race between Welcome and Niacho B., the stake said to be for $200 a side.

J. C. Wolfskill has taken "Dick Taylor" from Sacramento to Sonoma County. Taylor is a fine iron gray stallion, by Steinway, dam a Belmont mare.

J. H. Hamilton of Fresno, one of the prominent breeders of that section, has lately purchased another farm fifteen miles east of Fresno.

Plunger Walton, who ran his pile up to millions on the turf a few years ago, is now offering his last horse, the imported stallion Richmond, for sale.

Tuesday of this week Col. Younger of San Jose and Mr. A. P. Whitney of Petaluma were at the Bay District, looking at horses and attending the cattle sale.

Victor Von Bismarck at T. E. Moore's, Shawhan, Ky., was the most successful sire of trotters, of from one to five years old, in Kentucky the past year.

D. J. Kramer, of Haywards, Alemeda County, has purchased from H. C. Gade, of Anaheim, a two-year-old Norman Stallion, by Papillien. His weighs 1900 pounds.

The Rural Spirit of Portland announces that a match race has been arranged between the trotting mares Susie S. and Lady Maud, best three in five, for $500 a side.

Jim Nave b g by Lucifer—Ginger Pop was started in sixty five races last year, of which he won three. This is a greater number of races than any other horse started in in 1888.

The new Monmouth race track will have a straightaway course of 1¾ miles, a circular track of 1¾ miles, and an exercising track of a mile. Each will be one hundred feet wide.

There is a rumor afloat that a trotting match has been arranged to take place to-day at the track, for $250 a side. What grounds there are for the rumor I do not know, being unable to find the parties who are supposed to be interested.

Several fine colts have been missed lately from W. H. Abbott's ranch near Olema. A few days ago the partially devoured carcass of one of them was found, which indicated that it was the work of California lions.

Already quite a discussion has arisen in reference to which is the best bred horse, Three Cheers, or the new purchase of Mr. Gebhard's, Friar Tuck. Both horses have warm friends, and the dispute waxeth hot.

Preciosa, who has been for a long time at the Elmendorf Stud Farm, has been relegated back to the brood farm of Mr. Haggin. This first class mare, than whom there is no better bred in America, will probably be bred to Darebin.

On Wednesday, January 23rd, Charles Durfee drove the bay pacing mare Ellwood a mile in 2:20 at Los Angeles. Hancock Johnson offered a purse of a hundred dollars, if she could beat 2:23½, and the mare had no difficulty in winning easily.

Harry J. Agnew has shipped to Honolulu, per ship S. G. Wilder, a fine filly, which he has named Angie Wilkes. She is by Guy Wilkes, 2:15¼, dam Maud (pacer), 2:20. He has also shipped Millie, a trotting mare, and a young colt by Gladiator.

The latest sporting gossip from Paris is that the French Jockey Club have decided to raise the stakes in the Grand Steeplechase d'Antueil from 60,000 francs to 120,000 ($24,000). The mania for large stakes seems to have broken out even in the land of the Grand Prix.

Mr. J. I. Case of Racine, Wisconsin, is rusticating in the Southern portion of the State. He is confident that his celebrated trotting gelding Jay-Eye-See is as good as ever he was, and has sustained no permenant injury from the accident that happened two months ago.

Jim Guest, who thinks he is one of the greatest fools in the country, for ever selling Terra Cotta, now thinks he has a colt in Heron that can beat Proctor Knott. Perhaps Guest will think he never did know any thing, when the two three-year-olds meet at Chicago.

I had a pleasant chat a few days ago with Mr. C. L. Mansfield of St. Louis, who is combining business with pleasure while on a visit here, as he intends purchasing some California trotting horses before he returns. Mr. Mansfield is already the owner of several fast ones, but wishes to add to their number.

Mr. L. U. Shippee has eight or ten youngsters at Sacramento, which, under the able management of Ab Stemler, are creating a sensation among those who have seen them work. Report hath it that Mr. Shippee will, before long, have a stable second to none in the country.

There seems to be a very strong belief in the minds of many Eastern turf writers that at the coming meeting of the Turf Congress, to revise the rules, an amendment will be passed relative to the bookmakers' alliance, in accordance with the suggestion of the American Jockey Club.

There are trainers at Jerome Park who say that the great unbeaten French Park cannot stand training, and that he will never face the post. Mr. Hyland, on the contrary, thinks he can fit him for two or three races at least, but in all probability will not try to prepare him for any of the races prior to the Withers stake.

Mr. E. J. Baldwin told me some time ago that the report about R. W. Thomas having a stable of his own had no foundation in fact. I find now that he was correct, as Thomas will train for John Carter, Esq., of Nashville. In the stable are Kasson and Almera, both of which are engaged in the Two Thousand and the Kentucky Derby.

"We don't know who 'Grim' is on the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, but we know that the paper has improved wonderfully since he commenced."—Rural Spirit. Many thanks, but Grim's Gossip is only one of many new changes contemplated by the management. It is proposed to have such a paper that no horseman can get on without it.

Mr. L. J. Rose has, or rather had, a magnificent two-year-old colt by Stamboul, dam Minnehaha, which he prized very highly, but temptation in the shape of a check for $12,500 from Mr. Bradshaw of Butte, Montana, has caused the Los Angeles breeder to dispose of the finest colt ever raised at Rosemeade.

It is now thought that the Pacific Coast Blood Horse Association will have to sue the estate of the late David McClure. The suit, if brought, will be a friendly one, and is necessary, to protect the administrator, as he can do by court order what he is unwilling to take the responsibility of doing, unless the courts so decree.

Mr. T. H. Buckingham, of Vacaville, is about to build on his farm a half mile track. This becomes necessary on account of the large number of young colts which the gentleman has this year. J. M. Bassford, Jr., a near neighbor of Mr. Buchanan, will challenge the latter for a colt race as soon as the course is finished.

Some years ago a picture of Anteeo appeared in the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, a copy of which was enlarged by the order of W. B. Sanborn of Santa Rosa. Since it has become known that the stallion is going East shortly, Baker and Rose, Main Street, Santa Rosa, are having a large oil painting of the horse made from Mr. Sanborn's crayon.

Theodore Winters is busily engaged preparing his horses for a hard season's campaign. I have heard that in addition to Carillo, he has also engaged the services of Casey Winchell, at least this clever light weight jockey is at present in the Washoe Country looking after some of Mr. Winters' stock. The stable is being trained under the supervision of William McCormick.

Jim Brown, formerly of the Haggin stable, has been engaged by Mr. C. V. Tupper of Santa Rosa to train his horses. In addition to Al Farrow, Mr. Tupper has a fine-appearing colt called High Jack, by Three Cheers, and another very promising one by Double Cross, who has been named Guido. At the same track, Enoch Yates has two good ones in Oscar Wilde and Ito.

The proposition of George Rye to Sam Bryant to bet $1,000, play or pay, that Long Dance will beat Proctor Knott in the Kentucky Derby, is not seriously considered by the turfmen, says the St. Louis Republic. The majority of them says that Rye simply wants to bet that Proctor Knott will not start, since no one thinks Long Dance is anything as good as Bryant's colt.

I once heard a man order a lemonade, and he said, "I will take a faint suspicion in it." Judging from the writings of Eastern turf journalists, I think it possible to detect a "faint suspicion" of doubt as to the three-year-old form of Proctor Knott. Two months ago he seemed to have a mortgage on all the stake events, but now other favorites are being pushed forward, the Californian nominations being most prominent.

The Interior Journal of Stanford, Ky., gave tips on races last year, receiving its information from the well-known turf correspondent, L. M Lasley, who has sent Kentucky letters to the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN for some time. The Journal enthusiastically says that Mr. Lasley was more accurate than any tipster in the whole union. As he has just started a stable of his own, the B. AND S. sincerely hopes he may train many a winner.

Mr. Whitney, of Petaluma, informs me that he will not have Dawn in stallion service this season, either public or private. This well known son of Nutwood injured himself slightly last season while in the stud, and his owner has determined to reserve him for trotting purposes exclusively this year. A well known horseman in the Eastern States has tried to buy Dawn, but Mr. Whitney will keep him until he is satisfied how fast he really is.

While on a visit to San Francisco lately, Mr. Linscott, the owner of Jim L, met Mr. Gonzales, who owns Junio, and naturally the question of who had the best horse came up again, and Mr. Linscott wanted to make a match then and there, to be trotted over the Salinas track, but Gonzales would not give way to that proposition, and insisted on the race taking place on the Bay District course. As they parted Linscott said: "Well, I will meet you on the circuit." "That is where I want to meet you," was the reply.

Now that the full list of entries have arrived for the Great American stake, to be run at the spring meeting of the Brooklyn Jockey Club, I fancy that the first money will go to either the Dwyer stable or to that of Senator Hearst. While I have a certain amount of faith in the King Ban colt, still it seems to me that Tournament, by Sir Modred—Plaything should be unbeatable. The Dwyers have several good ones, a full brother to Kingston being noticeable, well backed up by Sir John and Last King.

Many Eastern turfmen are disappointed at the small number of entries made by Mr. Haggin this year, but when it is taken into consideration that he paid over $50,000 last year in forfeits at Monmouth and Sheepshead alone, without speaking of the other meetings, it is hardly to be wondered at that he should proceed with more caution than formerly. This course of procedure will enable the Rancho del Paso stable to show a profit this year, instead of a large loss, and plenty of glory, as in 1888.

Many explanations are offered why the youngsters on the Pacific slope make such extra fast time compared with Eastern bred horses of the same age, says Reins and Whip. The climate undoubtedly has its effect, but the main cause, we think, is the systematic manner in which the California horses, especially those at the Palo Alto Ranch, are handled. Here, in the East, a trotter, to be warmed up to his work, is jogged mile after mile, while there they simply give him a fast half before starting.

The Rev. J. C. Smith of Otis, a small town in Berkshire County, Mass., has brought himself into considerable prominence by addressing an agricultural meeting at Pittsfield in favor of horse trotting. Mr. Smith is a Congregational clergyman who has preached in Otis for several years. He owns a good farm and keeps several fast horses, which he drives on the track in horse races. He has driven in races at Pittsfield, North Adams, Westfield, Great Barrington and other towns, and he always tries to win.

While in Solano County last week, Mr. J. M. Bassford showed me a sorrel horse which, when he was purchased, was called Gen. Knox. The horse was brought to this State some years ago, and was reported to have a record made in the East. If any reader should know aught of this horse it will be taken as a favor if the information be sent to me. Sam Bones of Alameda is said to have owned him once.

Racing at Portland, Or., is at a rather low ebb if all rumors heard are to be believed. The last number of the "Rural Spirit" goes after the stable thieves in the following fashion: "If Billy Ayers of this city, a turfman in whom the public has the most implicit confidence, would lease City View Park, the cry of jobs would soon be a thing of the past. It would not take Mr. Ayers thirty days to regain the confidence of the public." It is a pity that we have not a great many more men of the Billy Ayers stamp on the Pacific Slope, for if we had, "rotten races" would soon be heard of no more.

Taking into account the advance in the scale of weights says Black and Blue, "it would not be out of place to make the top weight in the Suburban 133 or 135, and in the Brooklyn Jockey Club Handicap 128 or 130. This would give the handicappers a little more room for discretion in assigning the weights to the top and middle divisions. There does not seem to be any chance for the light weights in the coming handicap. The other company is too good for them." I am inclined to believe that if the above suggestions is carried out, the race had better be made Welter weights and done with it. At the weights given above no first class horse would start for this now classic event.

It seems from present indications that a small spring circuit will be built up, with the Blood Horse Meeting as a nucleus. The San Jose Jockey Club will give a week's racing, commencing probably on April 8th. The B. H. Association will begin their season about April 20th, lasting nine or ten days. They will be followed by the Capital Turf Club of Sacramento, who will give a week of the royal sport, in which many of the horses from San Francisco will take part. Mr. Sanborn, the new lessee of the Agricultural Park, Santa Rosa, will shortly announce a meeting to follow the Sacramento spring races.

The English Racing Calender for 1888 shows that 2,123 horses contended in the 1,589 races run in England during the year. This is an increase of forty races over the year 1887, and with the exception 1871, when 2,483 horses performed, the largest number recorded in the English calendar of any year. As in this country the majority of the races run were at short distances. There were 759 scrambles of five furlongs and under six furlongs, 262 races at three-quarters of a mile and under one mile, 333 at one mile, 184 over one mile and under two, 50 at two miles and under three, 7 at three miles and under four, and 4 at four miles.

The Cleveland "Plaindealer" has the following good words to say about Mr. Valensin's horse: Sidney, by Santa Claus 2:17½, dam Sweetness 2:21½, by Volunteer, must be acknowledged one of the most remarkable stallions living. After a season of seventy patrons last year, he was given a pacing record of 2:19¾. His yearling daughter Fleet took a trotting record of 2:36. His three-year-old son Memo trotted in 2:20¼. A three-year old daughter got a pacing record of 2:14. Mr. J. J. Crawford, proprietor of Ashland Stock Farm, Belmont, is the owner of the two-year-old stallion George N., full brother to Memo.

The feats of our modern plungers are occasionally worthy of chronicling as examples of daring speculation. The French plunger, M. Brazier, laid £6,600 to £200 on Seabreeze for the Newmarket Oaks, the taker who accommodated him being Mr. R. Fry. The English professional's feelings must have been in remarkable contrast to those of the Continental visitor on seeing the desperate struggle that ensued in the finish of that race. For the last half mile Robinson had to use every ounce on the St. Ledger winner to keep the slight lead he had acquired, and it was only after a terrific and well-sustained effort that the head verdict was secured. So close and exciting was the finish that the rider of Seabreeze did not know after passing the judicial box whether he had won or lost.

Billet, who died in Kentucky last Friday, says the N. Y. Times, probably had his death hastened, certainly might have lived a few years longer, but for the fact that a dentist got at him. A pretty sure sign of dissolution in a horse of his age is the rapid decay of the teeth, which get so bad that the animal has difficulty in masticating his food. Billet's teeth became troublesome and a couple of verterinary dentists undertook to correct the trouble. The old horse didn't like the dentists. He fought them, and ropes and pulleys had to be rigged so that he could be slung and operated upon. Billet continued to fight against the men of forceps and files, and is supposed to have seriously injured himself in his struggles some way that resulted in his death.

The pick of the horses at Monmouth will, of course, be found in the Haggin Stable, says "Black and Blue" in the Mail and Express. Matt Byrnes has them in charge. Many persons call on him for permission to see Firenzi and Salvator, which are by all odds the cracks of the stable. Byrnes, acting under orders from Mr. Haggin, will not hurry his horses, no matter how fine the weather may be, and for this reason they are not likely to participate in any of the spring race meetings until the Jerome Park gates are open. Firenzi will have a try at one of the handicaps there, and Fresno will be got ready for the Withers Stakes, which Byrnes thinks he will win. If nothing happens to Firenzi, she will be a starter in the Suburban if she is not unjustly treated in the matter of weight.

The b c Fugato, now five years old, and a son of Glenelg and Felicia, is to be added to the list of nominations to the Suburban, says the "N. Y. Times." He was not announced in the original list because the Coney Island Jockey Club people did not know exactly what Nick Finzer, who owns the colt, meant by his letter entering Fugato for the "Toboggan Stake." A letter sent to Louisville brought out this explanation of the queer entry for the Toboggan Stakes. Mr. Finzer lives just outside Louisville, and on the afternoon of December 31st, telephoned in to his clerk to have Fugato entered for the Suburban. The clerk was not one who was up in racing lore, and so it came about that the horse was entered for the Toboggan instead of the Suburban Stakes. The clerical error having been made evident, Fugato's entry has been accepted. But it is probable he would be more prominent in a Toboggan Stake than he will be in the Suburban.

Profits of Breeding.

Senator Stockbridge, of Michigan, in a recent interview with a New York Tribune reporter, gives the following information, which demonstrates that the raising of trotters is not unprofitable: "Raising trotting and running horses is not a very unprofitable business," said Senator Stockbridge a few days ago. The Senator had just returned from Michigan, where he has a stock farm a few miles from Kalamazoo. "One fine day I arranged with my partner, Mr. Browne, to go out and look over the stock. We started about nine o'clock in the morning, and when we arrived at the farm the horses had all been fed and groomed. We got out the pedigree book, and then carefully examined every young animal on the place. Mr. Browne would tell me the name of a colt, and after we had gone over his good points I would put his value down on my inventory book, and then let him run off into the field. Well, after I had entered all the horses, and set a moderate value upon them, in no case exceeding the price which they would bring in any open market, I found we had just $103,600 worth of horseflesh. Now see what a nice profit that represents. We bought the farm three years ago, and organized a stock company with a capital of $75,000. We owe a few thousand dollars for running expenses and things of that kind, but this is more than offset by the value of the farm. So that, deducting the amount of capital we put in, the profits in three years, without any particular effort to run the farm as a money-making concern, were more than $100,000, which, you see, is more than a Senator's salary. Some horses raised on the Kalamazoo Stock Farm have turned out to be very valuable and very fast. Bell Boy, which was purchased of Senator Stanford for $5,000, and sold as a two-year-old for $35 000, has just lowered his record so that he is now in the 2:20 class, and he is only four years old."

Prices Paid For Yearlings.

The average price paid for yearlings at the various sales last year, are given in a concise and easily understood manner, in the current number of the New York Spirit which we copy below. It will be seen that Mr. Haggin's lot brought a much larger average than any of the rest, as much probably from the first class breeding of the youngsters, as from the fact that he did not wait to have customers come to him, but sent them where purchasers were plenty, money easy and first class horses appreciated. It would not surprise us if the average paid for horses at the coming spring sales should be even much larger than that paid last year.

CATTLE.

Mr. S. N. Straube, owner of the Poplar Grove Breeding Farm, near Fresno, as a result of years of raising the Polled Angus and Short Horn cattle, finds them both well adapted to the conditions of climate, soil and feed characteristic of the great central valleys of California. They are hardy, grow rapidly, make very salable beef, and fine milkers.

The great sale of shorthorn cattle, offered by Messrs. Prewitt & Goff on Tuesday last, at the Bay District Track, did not meet the expectations of the owners. Buyers were few, and such as were present did not offer anything like adequate prices. Gentle Annie, 29th, in calf to 7th Duke of Crethmere, 65,744, was sold to Mr. Martin for $90. The rest of the cattle were withdrawn, and were sent to Sacramento on Friday, where they will remain in charge of Edwin F. Smith, for private sale. No better opportunity has been offered to secure good stock of the breed, and Mr. Smith will gladly extend all facilities to interested persons.

Mr. C. W. Sturtevant of the Spanish-American Mercantile Agency, of this city, informs us that there is a marked movement in the way of fine stock to Mexico. A shipment, including two Durham bulls, three pens of Berkshires, and two of Poland-China's went to Guatemala via the S. S. Grenada two weeks since. One of the Berkshires was a son of Redwood Duke, No. 13368. The government of Guatemala has offered a premium to importers of fine cattle in the shape of a reduction of taxes on their stock for the term of five years. Stock, except geldings, steers or barrows, may be imported free of duty, and it is expected that San Salvador and Costa Rica will soon adopt similar laws.

The Cattle Industry of New Mexico.

To one of the great interests of the territory, the stock industry, has come some measure of disaster that has been common to that industry in all the Western states and territories, though far lighter here than elsewhere—while our mining and agricultural industries have taken on a condition of development that has far more than compensated the apparent and temporary declension of the stock industry.

The rigid enforcement of the quarantine law of the last session of the legislative assembly, while its operation has been an apparent hardship in some respects, has effectually protected the live stock from disease, and the equable climate of New Mexico has prevented the serious losses from the rigid climatic conditions that have occurred elsewhere. At the same time the enterprise and intelligent foresight of New Mexico stockmen is revolutionizing and localizing that industry and bringing it into harmony with the interests of settlement and development of the unoccupied lands of the territory. Forage grasses are being more generally cultivated, to the manifest improvement of the quality of beef, and the efforts of stockmen have been directed to the attainment of a high standard of excellence, till they have produced a grade of stock that ranks among the highest in the West.—From Governor Ross's Message.

How to Kill Beeves.

An animal is best killed with a rifle ball, shot midway of a line drawn from one eye to the opposite horn; but it may be killed by a blow on the same spot with a sledge hammer or the head of an ax, first blindfolding the animal. As soon as it falls, cut a gash square across the throat back of the jaws, deep enough to reach the spinal column. The animal may be run at once, or not until skinned, or it may lie until the entrails are removed, as may be preferred. Cut the hide from the throat along the brisket and central line of the belly, between the thighs to the tail; and from this cut along the inside of the legs at the knee joints and the hind ones three inches below the hock joints. If the animal is on the ground, remove the hide from the upper side of the carcass to the backbone; then turn the animal over and skin the other side. If the animal is hung up begin above and work down. Be careful not to cut any gashes in the hide. Use the thumbs wherever it is practicable to do so. To remove the entrails is not difficult. Open along the middle of the belly and brisket, cutting from in outward, running the fingers along ahead of the knife through the belly. The animal should have had nothing to eat for twelve hours before it is killed. Its entrails will not then be distended, and the carcass will cool better. As soon as the entrails are out, wash the inside thoroughly with cold water, using a cloth where necessary to take off blood. Stretch the slit in the belly open by setting in short sticks to keep the carcass open and facilitate cooling. As soon as the carcass has cooled, divide it in halves by splitting the backbone, working from the inside. First cut through the flesh and then saw through the bone. Do not cut bones—saw them.

A Short-horn calf may be white, roan or red, for these colors have been obtained as far back as the breed has been known, but no amount of explanation could satisfy an expert than a black or brindle, or a line-backed was a full blooded Short-horn; that a spotted animal was a Devon, a red-and-white was a Polled-Angus, or that anything less than a white face was a Hereford. Certain characteristics always go with the full blood of any kind, and the continued breeding together of animals of the same blood and the same characteristics give them the potency or power to transmit that makes the full-blood desirable for crossing on stock not having equally destiable qualities; for this reason among stockmen the bull is considered one-half the herd. The foolish practice prevalent among farmers of using bulls of miscellaneous breeding can not be too warmly deprecated. So many farmers persist in the notion that they want a good-looking animal and care but little about its blood.

A cross-bred animal is often in itself better than the parent on either side; for instance, the progeny from the pure-bred Short-horn bull and the native cow may, and should, get shape and quality from its sire, while the vitality and instinct of the dam may give it activity, hardihood and power of assimilation, so as to render it more profitable than either ancestor for other than breeding purposes, while it would be but little better than a scrub for breeding purposes, the tendencies in nature being to go backwards rather than forward, unless there be a continued infusion of the good blood. This breeding back shows the importance of pedigree, it being apparent that the animal should not only be good in itself, but all its ancestors for many generations back. Every part and quality can be improved by judicious breeding and handling; so, on the contrary, by bad handling and bad breeding they will gradually be bred out, so that the breeds are only maintained by selecting the best, and the breeder who makes the most judicious selections for this purpose is the safer and better man to buy from.

A third point we have insisted upon, especially in the sires used in the herd, has been—that the distinctive Shorthorn character is essential to the reproduction of the highest point of excellency in the progeny.

A good level carcass on short legs with even distribution and depth of flesh may be obtained without character, which the intelligent breeder also looks upon as indicating descent from ancestry of high ranking blood. Indeed, all the above mentioned points of profitable excellence are often found in grades or non-pedigreed Shorthorns; but the presence of these desirable points, will not assure uniformity of excellence in the progeny; without the approved blood, the character and the "quality" which we always desire to see in connection with this high breeding.

Dutch Belted Cattle.

The cattle are black, except for a band of white extending completely around the body, and in breadth including the whole sides. The Dutch Belted Cattle were first brought to this country fifty years ago, yet it is only within the present decade that any organized effort has been made to obtain for them the recognition to which their merits entitle them. These cattle doubtless sprung originally from the same stock as the black and white cattle known in this country as Holstein-Freisian; but they now form a distinct breed, with the type so firmly fixed by centuries of careful breeding that their grades of even one-eighth blood retain the peculiar and conspicuous white belt which is the distinguishing characteristic of the breed. They are known to have been bred in Holland in the sixteenth century, and have always been regarded there as a rather fancy breed, mostly owned by the country gentlemen, who have always been reluctant to sell them. The belted cattle are remarkably uniform in shape and markings. In general they resemble the Holstein-Friesians, but are not as large. The heads, however, are of similar form, rather long, with fine muzzle and somewhat dashing face. The horns are fine and waxy, the necks moderately thin, the bodies wedge-shaped, with ribs well sprung and deep chests, udders very large, milk veins large and tortuous, legs clean, short and fine. In color they are black, with a white sheet or belt entirely around the middle, embracing one-third or more of the body. A comparison between the Belted and the Holstein-Friesian cattle is by no means disparaging to either breed. The latter have for centuries been kept on rich food and carefully bred, with a sole view to developing milk or beef qualities, without regard to color marks. The former have been bred with equal care, mainly to preserve their peculiar markings, and at the same time make a general purpose and family cow. While they have no such phenomenal milk records as the Holstein-Friesians, they are deep milkers, docile and kind in disposition, hardy and easily kept. When dry they fatten easily, and their beef is of fine quality. These cattle were brought from Holland to Orange Co., N. Y., in 1838. Subsequent importations have been made until they and their grades are the prevalent style of cattle in that famed dairy region. They are also found in Montgomery County, in various parts of New Jersey, Eastern Pennsylvania and Illinois. An association of Dutch Belted Cattle breeders has been organized, of which H. B. Richards, of Easton, Pa., is Secretary. The first volume of the herd-book was published in 1886. It contains the records of forty-six bulls and one hundred and seventy-seven cows and heifers. The association is made up of enterprising and intelligent men, in whose hands this choice and unique breed will be kept up to the full standard of excellence.

Is Bovine Tuberculosis Communicable to Man

From the nature of the case, we cannot expect direct experiments to be made on man with tuberculous matter from other animals, but so many cases are on record which seem to prove that human being are frequently with infected tuberculosis, through the milk or flesh of cows, that it seems like madness to disregard them, says a Bulletin of the Massachussetts Agricultural College. It is more than probable that when children are fed with milk from tuberculous cows, serious intestinal disturbances, or even tubercular meningitis, may occur.

Dr. Anderson of Seeland reported a case of a calf, which received tuberculosis from the milk of a cow with the disease in the udder. The wife of the owner, who had previously been considered healthy, soon developed a cough, with other symptoms of the disease. Her child, born before the appearance of the disease, was fed with milk from a tuberculous cow, and died with the disease within six months. Dr. Anderson believed that both the mother and child contracted the disease from the cow's milk.

Dr. Bang, in a paper before the Medical Congress at Copenhagen, in 1884, said that the danger of transmission of tuberculosis from the lower animals to man lies chiefly in the use of milk from diseased cows, because it is largely used in an uncooked condition. In one case which he examined, he estimated that the bacilli of tuberculosis were so abundant, that in drinking a glass of such milk a person would introduce into his system millions of these disease-producing germs.

Dr. Nocard read a paper on the "Danger of Tuberculous Meat and Milk" before the Medical Congress held in Paris in July, 1888, in which he said that "so far as milk is concerned, everybody agrees. The milk is not virulent except when the mammary gland is tuberculous, but the diagnosis of this localization is difficult, and often impossible, and one must treat all tuberculous cows as if the gland was always invaded."

Prof. Walley stated, at a recent meeting of the British Medical Association, that if there was no direct evidence of the transmission of tuberculosis from animals to man, there was a vast amount of indirect evidence. He said he had not the slightest hesitation in saying that it was communicable from animals to man, and back again from man to animals, in every possible shape and form. He also expressed the opinion that it might be transmitted from tuberculous hens through their eggs.

The numerous experiments which have been performed thus far prove that when lower animals are inoculated with the tuberculous products of man, the results are precisely the same as when the products of other animals are used, and strained sections of the diseased parts exhibit the same bacilli in each case.

Dr. Blozozzera read a paper before the International Congress held in Turin, in which he gave it as his opinion that human and bovine tuberculosis are identical, because they have the closest anatomical affinity; and Dr. Johne states that nearly all the authorities admit the identity in construction of the tubercles in man and the lower animals.

The Tenderfoot Cowboy.

If there is anyone man in the world who knows less about more things than Mr. Bill Nye, his name has not been made public. He recently gave vent to long nurtured malice in this fashion:

Cowboys are born, not made. Some men are born cowboys, and others have cowboys thrust upon them; but the genuine genius is born to bestride the barbarous pinto in pursuit of the fleet-footed maverick. History is replete with instances where men from other walks of life have sought to become cowboys and failed. The shores of time are white with their bleaching clavicles. They did not have the afflatus. They were not en rapport with the Texas steer. They thought that to be a cowboy they only needed to let their hair grow long and tie it with a blue ribbon at the back.

The gentle reader may not believe it, but I saw an amateur cowboy land in the far west whose long and waving hair was tied with a knot of pale blue ribbon, and who wore a new suit of buckskin that had never been wet.

A meeting of "Kavveyard No. 2" was at once called to take action in the matter of entertaining the new and beautifully picturesque terror. In calling the meeting to order, the most exemplary Bedouin of the lariat stated that there was an apprentice at the outer gate of the corral who desired to become a free working knight of the quirt.

A programme was then arranged by which the young man was to be entertained and fully instructed in the signs of distress, grand hailing signs, grips, pass-words, explanations and signals of the order.

The name of the apprentice was Claude. Anybody would almost know that to look at him. He wanted the pure air of the plains to fan his brow, he said, and fill him with vigor. He wanted to learn how to rope a steer and conquer him and make him subservient. The entlemen of the "kavveyard" said that his morbid curiosity should be gratified.

First, however, he must wet the new buckskin clothes. They went into a gilded hell and drank a great deal of common cooking whiskey at Claude's expense. Then they took him to an irrigation ditch and saturated him with moisture. After that, under the auspices of "Kavveyard No. 2," he was kept out in the hot sun till his buckskin clothes began to dry and shrink.

Slowly as the sun rose higher Claud's pantaloons proceeded to ditto. He began to attract attention. With his hair looped back and festooned with a pale-blue ribbon with grease on it, and a suit of buckskin that was getting so tight that it might crack down the back at any moment, people began to gather round him and express an interest in him. Boys stopped in crowds to ask where it came from, and business men halted and said it was queer what funny things we could run across when we didn't have a gun.

Finally they took Claude out to the stock yards to "rope a steer." They didn't dare to turn him in with a real sure enough wild steer, but borrowed one off a man who kept wild steers to let on such occasions.

Claude chased the ferocious beast around the yard nearly all day before he threw his lariat so as to catch on. The loop went over the steer's neck, but unfortunately the fierce young solitary horseman got his own neck tangled up in the other end of the string. Those who know the habits of the steer, even when domesticated, will remember that it takes a man with a very muscular neck to outjerk him when he is in good spirits.

This steer jerked Claude head first across the arena, the ambling steer bringing up the rear. It was an exciting scene. The steer had one end of the lariat, the horse the other, and Claude was suspended between them in the hands of his friends.

Sometimes the steer would jerk, and then the horse would retaliate. Then they would allow Claude to get his breath, and the exercises would be renewed. Finally the secretary of the society for the prevention of cruelty to Texas steers came in and cut the lariat.

Claude went home in a few days after this episode wearing a look of chastened disappointment and human clothes.

At the Academy of Design at Cheyenne there may be seen a shrunken and emaciated suit of buckskin clothes, with short sleeves and knickerbocker pantaloons; also a soiled knot of blue ribbon. They are mementoes of Claude.

ROD.

The salmon season has opened with but ordinary prospects. An average of ten to the boat per drift is thought very good.

A large shipment of white fish eggs has been made to Oregon, 5,000,000 having been sent. They will be placed in Coeur D'Alene, Pen D'Oreille and other lakes.

A splendid showing of salmon taken with rod and line was that made by J. Lemmer and C. Green at J. Bergez, 332 Pine Street, on Monday last. Twelve clean run fish from seven to nineteen pounds in weight were laid out to tantalize the unfortunates who cannot get away to the creeks. The fish were taken on salmon roe and shrimps, from Salmon Creek, and afforded the rarest of sport to the fishermen. One of them, turned over to a man we wot of, was as fine a piece of meat, stuffed and baked, as any Waltonion need invite a friend to share. Slightly pink, fat and hard, the fish was all that a game fish should be.

Among the Redwoods.

CHAPTER XII.

ENTER RACHEL AND THE BROWNIE.

Miss Rachel Wells, fourth daughter of Hon. David Wells, successful banker, eminent legislator, and so forth, was recognized in the select and cultured circle where she moved as a brilliant free lance whom it was good to call friend, and evil to name enemy. Her wit had energy enough to get itself remembered in every quarter where the route of fashionable travel made existence necessary, and even in some remote corners where circumstances had compelled her to take refuge. And a free, impulsive, good-hearted nature made her a favorite even with those who looked askance on some of her undertakings.

In person she was of medium height, round and well proportioned, and carried herself with an unstudied erectness which always added a distinguishing quality. As to whether she was beautiful or not there existed two opinions. One side (composed chiefly of members of her own sex) contending that her mouth was too large, her nose too long, and her complexion too pale for such distinction; the other claiming on indefinite grounds such as expression and mobility no praise could be excessive. From both these categories, perhaps by accident, her chief beauties were eliminated. For it was only in relief against her heavy auburn hair that her complexion reached its perfection of tint, as if nature had intended the clearly perceptible tracery of blue veins for contrast with the ruddy bronze frame. And the condemned length of nose suited well a pair of large brown eyes. Not eyes of the soft beseeching kind, but full of alertness and daring, and gifted with wonderful capabilities of expression.

There was a quizzical laugh in their depths as Philip and his fish basket approached the verandah, although her lips remained quiet. This was a pity, since the strong white teeth added materially to the beauty of the mouth, which truth obliges me to confess was formed after a model given by Venus rather than Minerva, although the upper lip bore also some trace of Cupid's handiwork.

"Welcome, Prince Idle," she said, when her brother had dismounted, holding out both hands and putting up her lips to be kissed. "Welcome. Shall I scold you for not having been to see us before?"

Philip kissed her, gave his horse in care to Jack, who was always ready to perform such services when the greater attraction of fishing did not lure him away, and asked Rachel what she meant.

"Just what I say," she answered, "we have been here since yesterday."

Philip sat down on a chair with the back in front of him, and stared at her, finally getting enough of his wits back to inquire how he could have been expected to know they were there.

Rachel looked vexed for an instant and then laughed.

"I see plainly that like the Landgravine in the German tale I shall have to protect somebody with my mantle," she said. Did not Mr. Foote say anything to you about having seen us?"

"Dick? no. He acted like a riddle this morning, and went off by himself."

Philip was beginning to guess at the cause, and to exonerate Dick, his loyalty being only too glad to find such an opportunity.

"Perhaps I may be able to explain why," Rachel said. "Last evening about six o'clock Mr. Cummings and I went down by the bridge to get a glimpse of the stream, and had almost determined to walk up to Mr. Selden's house and apprize you of our arrival when we saw Mr. Foote coming along. Immediately after the greetings Mr. Cummings and he began to talk fishing, and the first thing I knew our clumsy little Brownie had invited himself to go out the next day with Mr. Foote. If he had been anything but utterly obtuse he would have detected how unpleasant the arrangement was to your friend, although as you know perfectly Mr. Foote is not always careful to say just what he means. That is, he has a habit of crediting every one with large and delicate perception. So far as we were concerned he thought a day would not matter, and that my message would be as acceptable to-night as twenty-four hours earlier."

Rachael tried to look careless and indifferent, but her eyes revealed deeper feeling.

"Oh Frogs of Styx!" exclaimed Phillip, probably moved by indistinct recollections of Aristophanes, "what a small matter to roll up into a tragedy. I can't understand it now He kept talking the whole time about when the Brownie would be here,"

"From that, I should have inferred at once that the Brownie was already here. Mr. Foote, Phil, is very sensitive to ridicule, which may account for his diplomacy in this case. There is no harm done, anyway. Mamma cried last night as usual, and Natalie thoughtfully trotted out all her dear little maxims, and I cruelly absconded, retired and went to bed. Phil, is that Miss Selden over there alone?"

Something about this conference annoyed Rachel, and she chose the first way out of it.

"Yes, Ray, I wish you would go over and talk with her while I am convincing mother that I am still in the land of the living."

Since the time he excelled in childish mischief Philip had depended on this particular sister to help him out of difficulty, principally because she never undertook anything except with the idea of accomplishing it, and always forgot a service immediately after it was rendered.

She did not hesitate now, any more than when she was younger, but said if he would introduce her she would do her best.

"From here the girl looks quite like a picture. Seeing her pure face reminds one of Spenser's fancies." Rachael sighed, noting the rapt look in her brother's face while she was speaking.

"You think so too, Phil, do you not?" she asked.

"I think only one thing just now," he answered, reaching out his hand to help her down the steps, "that you are the best sister a graceless chap like me ever had."

In truth, he did not know half how good she was. Despite her merry note—written to be read and approved by their mother—she would rather have started on a pilgrimage to China or Japan than to have come down here. Not because it was quiet, or lonely, or rough, for she was scarcely of the kind susceptible to such things, but because her coming might be misunderstood or misconstrued by her brother's friend, Mr. Foote. Two years before, when spending a summer on what was now Philip's farm, in the Santa Clara Valley, she had met him for the first time. It seemed only right that they should be good friends, if the rule of opposites guides, or even more than friends, if his frequent visits and open expressions of regard could be counted. But the season wore away, and she went back to her home no wiser respecting his feeling than a few subtle intimations might make her. And such intimations were, to a woman of her character, nothing to be counted or remembered. Three extremely short and formal calls were all she knew of him after, except as Philip raved of his ability and good fellowship, when she usually had strength of mind enough to maintain a discreet silence. It was commonly remarked among her friends that Rachael had never appeared quite the same since that summer on the farm, and Mrs. Wells, in consequence, was thoroughly given over to the idea that Cherry Wold reeked with malaria. Rachel took no trouble to disturb this belief; she was too happy that anything interfered with frequent visits and long sojourns where memory seemed to do her so much wrong.

I do not know why, but all of this appeared to her as she walked by Philip's side across the road, and down a short way to a shady spot, where Erl had dismounted and stood awaiting them.

"My sister, Miss Wells, Miss Selden," said Philip, without any preliminaries.

Rachel held out her hand and watched the warm, beautiful color steal swiftly to Erl's cheeks, and firmly detaining the one placed in hers, she turned to her brother and said:

"Go back and see mamma now, Phil. We shall get on better without you."

Philip hastened away, not at all sorry that he was accorded the privilege of conferring with his mother alone, for Rachel, though an excellent ally, was also a noted tease.

"Perhaps you would like to sit down," said Erl in a low voice, and with the slight touch of self-consciousness in her manner that an isolated life had bred.

"I must pat your horse first. What a charming little fellow he is not to cut up at sight of me. But dare you trust him so alone?"

Rachel laid her hand on Wolfgang's glossy black neck.

"Oh, yes! Nestor and he would wait together wherever I left them."

To Erl's surprise Nestor obeyed the imperious summons, although doing so with some misgivings, and, after what he considered the proper amount of petting, finding his way to her side.

"They both like you, I see; and together you seem quite a part of the forest. Was this hillock the one you had chosen for our seat?"

"Ridiculous, is it not?" she said, with a quickness born of training. "But then I am altogether a ridiculous person. Did you tell me your horse's name?"

"Wolfgang," said Erl, feeling the attraction of Rachel's person and manner more and more.

"I might have known you would have named him for a poet. I wonder if the shade of Goethe watches over you both?"

"That would surely be a hard penance for the soul of a poet, and papa is always scolding me because I cannot like Faust. Not really scolding, but—"

"Reminding you that the artistic is not enough developed in your—what shall I say?—composition?" Rachel laughed lightly, and picking up Erl's long hand went on. "For some natures it is necessary to live before comprehending; to others understanding seems born of an intuitive sympathy. Why can you not like Faust?"

Erl hesitated.

"I scarcely know," she said, as if finding reasons were an unpleasant task. "It is always difficult for me to analyze anything. Something in me seems to say when good is so easy, evil should not be chosen."

There was nothing Pharisaic in this answer: it came as simply as water gushes from a mountain source. Rachel felt its largeness and sat a moment silent, feeling as she often did at Easter tide, listening to the "Gloria" and looking on a chancel filled with lillies. Then she wondered if a nature ignorant of temptation could guage the force of evil, and asked:

"Dare we call an inward hunger, choice? If a man's body were starving, would it be choice only that bade him take bread? And might he not even take bad if the good were exhausted?"

"Again I do not know. I think it would be better to wait in the hope that good might come."

"But if patience had been denied you?" Rachel was annoyed at herself instantly this question left her lips, and doubly annoyed when she saw the perplexed, terrified expression that appealed to her from Erl's clear eyes.

"Absurdity of absurdities!" she exclaimed laughing and turning aside. "Do not mind me at all. How fortunate that my brother is coming! And whom has he with him, your father?"

"Yes," said Erl. She was her own non-contemplative self again, now that there seemed no immediate necessity of answering the question concerning patience, about which there was great doubt in her mind.

Mr. Selden and Philip walked slowly, leading their horses and discussing the cultivation of cherries with an earnestness of manner seemingly out of all proportion to the matter under discussion. From long indulgence, man has ceased to appreciate the value of having a wide range of subjects constantly open to his intellect, or to understand the great amount of nervous force stored up and preserved by it. Distance shortens, disease loses its aggravating qualities, and even love, that great disturber of rationalism, assumes a subservient aspect when confronted with this diversity. And although neither of the two men crossing the road so leisurely were burdened with anything unusual, one at least was easier that he could state how much water to allow for proper irrigation of a half-grown cherry tree.

It was not possible for Philip to outline half his ideas on ditching and ploughing before he was obliged to stop and present Rachel whom Mr. Selden liked at once, and welcomed in his quietly sincere manner, saying he hoped she would find her stay enjoyable.

"I shall rely on you and your daughter to bring back all my belief in the simple and the true, for I strongly suspect that you are a wise man in your day and generation," said Rachel, extending her hand and looking taller than nature intended in her white draperies.

"Not wise, I fear, but weak. He is only a poor soldier who keeps to the rear ranks."

"Are not those in front often so blinded by smoke that they waste strength and valor, and need reinforcement from the rear. It would not be well for all to desire one place."

"That's why I am modest and stick to the commissariat," said Philip laughing. He was feeling merrier since he had seen his mother, and succeeded in convincing her that his stay here was building him up after the malarial influence of Cherry Wold. This admission of itself deeply gratified Mrs. Wells, for Philip had always said there was no such thing as malaria anywhere about their farm. The more he thought of it the happier he felt, and before his open declaration about the commissariat he had been amusing Erl with the story of a man who was stopped so often on his way home from a fishing trip that the fish baked in his basket.

"And what I told you about that man, Miss Selden, will certainly happen to us," he said after the laugh occasioned by his last remark had subsided, pointing down the road. "For here comes Dick and the Brownie."

"Is that what you call Mr. Cummings?" asked Erl. "Poor man he walks as if half the life had been taken out of him."

"Yes, that's his name. I know Dick's had more fun with him to-day than would do to tell. His gait is a little awkward isn't it, Ray?" Philip contemplated his own length of limb and was pleased that nature had not treated him as she had poor Cummings.

Rachel forebore to answer Philip's question, and instead asked Mr. Selden what she should do to Mr. Foote for abusing her friend so. Mr. Seldon replied that a woman of her wit should not be at a loss how to punish a man who professed such fears of the gentle sex as Dick did.

In the meantime the fishermen drew nearer and Mr. Cummings' appearance caused even Mr. Selden to smile, and to agree that Rachel's name was appropriate. Everything about the little man was so brown; hair, eyes and side whiskers, that Erl wondered she had not noticed it before, and thought, perhaps, the peculiar copper color fixed on his face by the day's sunshine enhanced the general effect. Dirt too, and perspiration conspired against the beauty of his countenance, and excessive fatigue robbed him of whatever animation was natural.

"Oh, ho, ho!" said Dick, as he reached the group, looking not in the least disconcerted. "So you found one another."

"Yes, thanks to you," replied Rachel, with a look that made Dick's eyes veil themselves immediately, but in a tone as sweet as though he had exerted himself to the utmost in her cause. "Mr. Cummings, do you know Mr. Selden and his daughter?" The tired little man exchanged greetings, and pouting his lips after a fashion he cultivated when particularly pleased with himself, said to Philip:

"You don't look much as if you'd been fishing."

"Perhaps my basket may tell a different tale," said Philip, opening it. He detested what he called "Cummings' fuzzy way."

The Brownie's round eyes gained new prominence while he looked, but his disposition was not of the conciliatory kind, so he turned to Erl and said:

"Isn't that your basket, Miss Selden?"

"Indeed not; I am quite behind today."

"Miss Wells," said Dick, following his usual impetuous course, "don't you want to learn how to fish?", He was seated on the hillock from which they had risen, and Rachel was obliged to notice that his eyes were clear and bright, and his face glowing with health.

"Mr. Foote," she answered, imitating his tone at first, but giving it up as she proceeded, "when Adrian asked Erasmus to come to Rome, the brilliant but careworn student replied, 'You might as well say to the crab, "Fly."' So it is in regard to my fishing. I fear I should be always tormenting myself with this mathematical problem: If it takes a stout man like Mr. Foote one hour to catch three small trout, how long will it take a thin man like Mr. Cummings to catch ten large trout?"

"Then you refuse to be instructed?"

"Absolutely. Yes, Phil, dear, I know you are anxious to be gone. Mr. Cummings, will you permit me to assist you and your coat and your basket up the hill?"

Mr. Cummings turned at this, and made a little joke of his own, and so with laughter and jest they parted, after Mr. Selden had gained from Rachel a promise that she would visit them at Myrtle Heights. PETRONELLA.

Solano and Napa Colt Stakes for 1889.

The advertisement which first appeared in the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN of last week, notifying those interested, of stakes which were to be decided at the Napa and Solano Fair of 1889, are well worthy of attention. There is one change which we would like to see made, that being the removal of "bars" in the free-for-all stakes for two and three-year-olds. Fleet is "ruled out" in one and Sunol in another. Now in the Stanford Stake for this year, in which Sunol is named, there were seven others to make third payment, and in the Occident of this year nine others made third payment. Fleet is named in the Stanford and Occident Stakes to be trotted in 1890, and in the Stanford nineteen stay in, and in the Occident forty-three say content.

This is an assurance that the Napa Stakes will have plenty of nominations without resorting to bars, and in fact it is our opinion that there will be more without prohibition. Although without authority to make the statement, we believe that Palo Alto will not enter if the bar is retained.

On our part we shall make nominations either way offered, though should prefer that it was in reality free-for-all.

An Additional Section.

Since the matter already written was in type we have received from Sacramento an additional section to the bill before the Legislature, which overcomes one objection we have advanced. It is as follows:

Sec. 5. This act shall not be construed or held to forbid or prevent the making of any match or stake outside or beyond the grounds or enclosure of the race track by the principals making such match or stake, upon any race."

While this may take away the presumption of illegality attending the getting up of stakes or making matches, we are still of the opinion that the changes recommended in the article under the head of the title of the bill now before the Legislature would satisfy all concerned. There are advantages in pool-selling the night previous to events coming off, among which may be named that the revenues are increased and an interest awakened which would not be felt were pools prohibited on any other place excepting on the grounds, or within the enclosure where the contests are to be decided. The revenues of the State and District fairs would be materially reduced were the sales of the preceding night stopped, and in San Francisco the speculation anterior to that on the track effects a double purpose by increasing revenue and attendance. When that plan is observed there are no regular rooms in which the business is transacted, the place for selling being selected for the special occasion. It is manifestly apparent that rooms of a size necessary to accommodate an assemblage such as a race-meeting or fairs attract, will cost too heavy a rental to warrant more than temporary occupation, and the danger of illicit business or surreptitious pool-selling and bookmaking do not figure.

It is far from our intention to endanger the passage of a bill through delaying the consideration, although extremely anxious that an act may be passed which will be beneficial to the breeding interests of the State. We may be in error in thinking that a brief act will serve the purpose, and that a mass of words, mainly repetitions, are necessary to give legal force. Still, as deeds, wills, etc., are now drawn in so few words that brevity is a startling feature when compared with the huge documents of early days, we cannot see why a law which is fully expressed in one or a few sentences, should be invalid.

All that is necessary to cover the question at issue is to declare it illegal to sell pools, make books, or keep a place for wagering on contests which take place outside of the boundary lines of California.

Another sentence will provide the penalties and manner of punishment for breaking the law. The consideration both in committee and Legislature will be shortened, and with little to wrangle over, its passage would be assureed in a short time.

Popular Support.

In this country, at least, a law to be effective must have the support of the public; by that it being meant, that if an enactment is thought by a majority of people to be over strict, that it will be a dead ordinance.

Were the old Blue Laws revived, or the Criminal Code which prevailed a century ago, when what are now considered trivial crimes were punished by death, it would be nigh to impossible to get a jury to convict. A bill to regulate poolselling and bookmaking must be framed so that there will be little incentive to violate the conditions, and that violation will not awaken sympathies in favor of the transgressor; in short, a law which will have the "backing" of a major part of the community.

The population of California is peculiarly cosmopolitan, and in all probability there is not a State in the Union which can equal it in this respect. Very many are from countries in which the Sabbath is not observed as strictly as it is in regions which are still influenced by traditions of the Reformation, and they cannot understand why such rigid rules should be enforced as were held to be obligatory by the followers of Knox and Calvin. Some of our most worthy citizens are of the opinion that amusements which do not trench on the rights of others should not be tabooed on one day in seven, and were the attempt made to coerce them into a contrary course, rebellion would follow, or rather an opposition difficult to subdue.

This can scarcely be termed laxity of morals, as in every other respect the people referred to are exemplary in their conduct. While some of the Sunday picnics present an assemblage of disorderly people, there are others in which the strictest decorum is observed, and an Eastern visitor who may be surprised that there should be such a general exodus from San Francisco on a bright Sabbath day, will also be struck with the evidence of respectability which dress and demeanor give an appearance of being a characteristic.

There is a still larger class which cannot be made to believe that a wager is one of the seven deadly sins, or that so long as speculation on racing and trotting affairs is kept within bounds that great harm can result. Should a law be passed prohibiting all speculation on contests to test the physical superiority of men and animals, the voice of the general public would be raised in opposition thereto. Were everyone arrested who made a wager, a big station house would be needed in each block in the city, and policemen posted in every hotel, saloon, and other place where men congregate. Over-severity defeats the object, making martyrs of men and thereby arousing a feeling that their punishment far exceeds their deserts.

Antevolo Sold.

The sale of Antevolo to Robert Steel of Philadelphia was consummated last Saturday, the consideration being eighteen thousand dollars. We have written a good deal about him, though excepting in advertisements only in connection with illustrations of the effects of shoeing, and divergences from the usual methods of training and stable management. Having sold and delivered to Mr. Steel the horse (though he will not start on his Eastern trip until Mr. Knox is ready to take Anteeo), we can give our opinion more freely than when that could be ascribed to pecuniary interest. When that is presented with the fullest belief that he is entitled to all the encomiums bestowed, the question will arise, What are the reasons for selling him so much lower than the amount reported in sales of high class trotting stallions? Easily answered, the main reason being the pressing need of a good deal of money; another, that in our circumstances there was a constant anxiety which compelled personal attention, and which interfered with other affairs.

In the case of any high-priced horses, a poor man is under a great disadvantage. Buyers, very properly, bring into their negotiations the pecuniary standing of the owner, and base their offers with that as an element to their advantage. Had our means been such that we could have escaped from under the harrow of debt, were we in a condition to take the risk of loss, twice the amount would not have bought him; in fact, with something to "fall back upon," it is doubtful if he would have been sold, were the purchase money in excess of a sum which has ever been paid for a horse.

We have seen many horses, owned a few, and in our long experience never saw a trotting stallion which could equal him in all the points which give value and create affection akin to what we feel for kindred and friends. We have owned two which united, combined the qualities of Antevolo, "Old" Blackbird and Double Cross; the former possessing form, speed and endurance, Double Cross the mental qualifications of docility, sense and abundant good nature.

The excellences we claim for Antevolo are high form, breeding as nearly similar to the fastest trotters, without near relationship, as can be obtained, or rather a mixture of the blood of the greatest progenitor of trotters, with a thoroughbred grand-dam, the same combination that has produced Maud S, Jay-Eye-See and Sunol; good size, faultless in disposition, and, withal, beauty in an eminent degree. "Led out by the bridle," and he will attract attention from the most passive observer, elicit admiration from experts, as well as those who are not up in all the mysteries of points. His action is perfect, his speed, when he was free from ailments, so great as to warrant the belief that he could capture the fastest stallion record, and game and endurance which justified our opinion that two miles well within 4:40 were in his power to accomplish. For uniformly good looking colts he cannot be surpassed, and so far as can be predicted from the gait and "natural speed" of his colts, expectations that his progeny will equal him in speed are not without solid foundation.

When Anteeo and he areput in the same car, a parallel cannot be found in the United States. Two "own" entire brothers which have beaten 2:20, and it is perfectly safe to say that two finer-looking specimens of the highly bred American trotter will be difficult to obtain.

Not the least of the qualifications of Antevolo are those which come from being a good member of a great family, and with Electioneer, acknowledged to be at the head of all stallions when great speed is the basis of comparison, A. W. Richmond, Bonnie Scotland, imported Monarch, imported Trustee, etc., what more could be desired on that score? The only betterment a nearer cross of thoroughbred, provided action and speed in like degree accompanied the stronger infusion.

The brothers will not part company until after their arrival at Chicago, and we hope that our old friends in that country will take the opportunity of seeing what we have done in the way af breeding since we left the "City on the Lake."

I wonder if the P. C. B. H. Association will adopt the latest style, and have a bugler at the spring meeting. It is a vast improvement on the ringing of a bell, and much more pleasant to the ear. Better try it.

Goodwin's Official Turf Guide.

Now that the hurry and bustle of the late racing season is over, the lover of turf sports can find time to review calmly the doings of the equine cracks, and leisurely scan the results. To be able to do this intelligently, it is necessary to have a copy of the Racing Guide just issued by the Goodwin Bros., at 241 Broadway, New York. It is a complete resume of the racing season of 1888, showing the performances of each and every horse. Time, weight, jockey, pedigree and betting are given, thus enabling the seeker after information to learn everything necessary to be known. In addition thereto is the scale of weights for the United States, fastest time made in 1888 at all distances, fastest time on record, list of horses whose names have been changed, number of mounts each jockey had last year, to whom the jockeys are engaged for 1889, interesting turf events, betting rules, and in fact so much information useful to the sportsman, that to be without a copy will leave one at a serious disadvantage. Orders for the Guide should be sent to the publishers, whose address is given above, the prices being two, three, and four dollars, according to the binding.

Impersonality.

There is one advantage in using the somewhat cumbersome editorial "we," as that takes away the direct personal bearing which the singular pronoun gives. Although articles which are classed as editorials may be an embodiment of the views and opinions of the person having the power to guide the course of the paper which is under his charge, there are shades of differences well understood by a majority of readers. It may be said that one is a broad stream, the other a rapid current, the first flowing with a sort of dignified tranquillity, the other leaping from crag to boulder, flowing along in places with irresistible impetuosity, then breaking into spray when the obstacle is beyond its force. The editor speaks for the public, the correspondent presents individual views. An orator's main dependence is on swaying the feelings, as well as influencing the judgment; the writer's aim is to convince by logical reasoning. Patrick Henry, Henry Clay, S. S. Prentiss can be cited as examples of oratorical force, Benjamin Franklin as, par excellence, an embodiment of sound reasoning.

In presenting our views of the question which is now paramount in interest to the breeders of horses in California, we shall endeavor to divest it of all personal considerations, although there is a direct personal interest. With only a few horses, and a small number of city lots for a "breeding establishment," we have received since the spring of 1882 over $75,000 from the sale and earnings of a small number of horses. The tracks of California, and the interest taken in the "exhibitions of speed" have been the cause of making that return, and without that aid one-tenth of the sum would not have been realized. To breeders who have one hundred dollars or more invested to each hundred cents of our capital—and there are many such in this State—the question is one of the greatest magnitude. Whether these interests are jeopardized by adverse legislation, or threatened by the continuation of public betting rooms, in either case it is our manifest duty to take all honorable means to guard the interests at stake.

Believing that rooms where pools are sold and bookmaking carried on nearly every day in the year, the main business being on races which are decided to the eastward of the Missouri river, is a decided drawback to the horse-breeding interests of California, and also inimical to other interests, we favor a bill which will divest pool-selling and bookmaking of their objectionable features.

Believing also that pool-selling, and in a less degree bookmaking, when restricted to their proper spheres are so intimately interwoven with racing and trotting affairs, and so essential to the prosperity of turf and track, and consequently that separation is next to impossible, and were it possible to effect that end there would result such a depreciation of value as to be an effectual estoppel to that branch of business, one of the great resources of the State "squelched," and a source of reasonable recreation to thousands of people abolished; therefore we are not only in favor of a law which will protect depending interests, but also feel in duty bound to do all in our power to aid in obtaining legislation which will be of service.

We do not believe in legislation which seeks to force mankind into a course that human nature rebels against following. That idea belongs to an era long past in enlightened countries. It is a relic of the days when despotism was thought to be the proper method of government, the outgrowth of a feeling that a privileged class were the owners, body and soul, of all those who differed with them in opinion, when racks, thumb-screws, and all the paraphernalia of torture were brought into requisition to compel belief in doctrines however absurd to a mind with sufficient capacity to arrive at a conclusion on evidence presented.

While advocating the fullest liberty, we are far from wishing to see all restraints removed, so that guilty passions may have full sway, and human society has such numerous ramifications that due care must be observed that while granting entire freedom to conscientious belief, and all the individual liberty compatible with the rights of the whole people, there must be a restraining force, a system which will tend to prevent crime as well as punishment for crimes committed.

As has been stated before, the grounds of our opposition to public betting rooms is the effect which they have on horse interests. Others can argue on a high morality plan, and so far as removing temptation from young men, and those who are entrusted with money which is not their own, we coincide in their views. In many respects pool rooms are no worse than what are considered legitimate fields of business. For one man who has been ruined by indiscreet speculations on horses, thousands have succumbed to the blandishments of stock boards and "exchanges," but to reason that the comparatively small injuries which are due to the establishment of such boards are an offset to the unbounded advantages obtained is so puerile, that the rationcurator who presented the argument, it is safe to assert, is too contracted in his undertaking to gain much of a following. On a parity with this reasoning is that which is based upon aspersion of the men who conduct the business in San Francisco,

There is not a man of our acquaintance at all prominently identified with pooling and book-making in this city, who is not trustworthy. That the evils which are due to unrestricted pool selling and book making are curtailed as much as possible while under their management, is beyond question, but it does not follow that the evils are entirely removed. Were the business in the hands of unscrupulous men the disease would cure itself, or rather its course would be short, and a few months bring a crisis.

"An Act to Restrict Gaming."

As was stated last week we did not see a copy of the bill, under the above heading, until the foreman was locking the forms, and the only paragraph glanced at was "Section 1," and that only to learn that it was not to operate within the track enclosure or buildings in which contests were to be decided. Now that we have had an opportunity to read the whole bill, features are discovered which renders it peculiarly objectionable, and which, if not remedied, will ensure its defeat. Literally construed if a match is made or a sweepstakes gotten up in the Palace Hotel or the office of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, all parties, including the owner of the building, are subject to fine and imprisonment.

To a person who is not conversant with legal phraseology, or the tautological nonsense of legal documents, it seems a simple matter to frame an act which will meet the exigency. The desire of ninety-nine of every hundred men interested on either side of the question is that pool-selling and bookmaking shall be so restricted as to benefit the whole of the great number of people interested, and not to the general detriment and the interests of a few individuals as is the case at present. Our idea, presented in plain language, is that all pool-selling and book-making shall be restricted to the grounds of bona fide associations, fairs which are regularly organized, club-rooms, in which athletic exercises are conducted, adjacent to where rowing matches, aquatic, or other events are taking place, and in localities where associations, Agricultural societies, clubs and managers may designate, the day preceding that fixed for the event to come off, providing such penalties as may be deemed sufficient to effect the purpose. In fact, a still more simple act will be efficient, and a law which will prohibit pool-selling or public betting on any race, contest, pastime or event which is to take place outside of California, cover the whole ground.

We will leave it to men trained to mystify people with a lot of verbiage, to put the idea in technical language; at the same time believing that plain statements are superior to the often-times repeated words in vogue in the days of Blackstone and other grand luminaries of legal erudition.

For instance, that all that is necessary is for "People of the State of California, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:" That whoever sells pools, engages in book-making, issues tickets or checks, records wagers, or in any manner become a party to public betting on events transpiring beyond the limits of California, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and punished by fine not exceeding $——, imprisonment not longer than — days, or by both fine and imprisonment. The manner of enforcement will be readily agreed upon, and when put in proper shape, we believe will receive the support of so large a majority of the people of California who are interested in the question as to be practically unanimous.

Advertisement Notices.

Mr. John Trestail of Melbourne, Australia, brought over on the last steamer six as fine Clydesdale stallions as were ever imported into the United States. They are from two to six years of age and in the pink of condition. Those of our readers who incline to the heavy draught horse should by all means visit the Bay District Track and inspect these specimens of the celebrated Scotch breed. Any information desired will be cheerfully given by Mr. Trestail at the track, or by Killip & Co., 22 Montgomery street.

There is no country in the world where J. A. McKerron's famous horse boots are not known and appreciated. It cannot be wondered at, as it is a proven fact that there is no boot made which equals them in durability and elegance of finish. McKerron's boots are synonymous with "the best," and those who use them are satisfied that there are none better. Read the new advertisement in this issue.

The owners of high-class brood mares will read with interest the Mambrino Wilkes advertisement on another page. This justly renowned son of George Wilkes has proved himself a sire worthy of the old horse, his get showing great speed and unlimited endurance. His owner has placed the season fee at a very low figure, which will enable breeders to avail themselves of this opportunity, and for this year only, as the price will be raised materially next season. Mambrino Wilkes has the reputation of siring large, stylish and handsome colts, his well-known son Balkan being pronounced by many the finest-looking colt at present on the turf.

Mr. Gormon, of Oakland, California, has a well bred stallion in Grover Clay by Electioneer, and will make the season with him at the Oakland Trotting Park. As this is the only Electioneer who will stand in Alameda County, he should have a bountiful supply of approved mares. Gentlemen desirous of securing this great blood line should read the advertisement.

Balkan, a son of Mambrino Wilkes, has been placed in the stud, as will be seen by reference to the advertisement, with the number of mares restricted to ten, and they must be of the highest approved strains. Balkan is too well known in California to need lengthy mention at our hands, his performances during the past season stamping him as a fitting representative of the Wilkes blood. His dam, Fanny Fern, is noted for having among her produce five fast trotters, all of whom were sired by different horses. Mr. A. L. Hinds, at the Dexter Stable, Oakland, will furnish particulars.

One of the very best stallions, offered for sale in many a day, is at present in the market, and can be purchased at a bargain. His breeding is of the highest order, and must be read to be appreciated. The advertisement will give the owners address.

Among the many celebrated stallions announced in this issue, there is not one more deserving of mention than the Sidney colt Memo, whose trial of 2:20½, as a three-year-old, while suffering from a strain of his fore fetlock, proved him one of the fastest horses of the year. It would be superfluous to say more about this horse, the advertisement giving his discription, pedigree and performances.

Mr. N. K. Fairbanks of Oakland, has a stallion called Longworth, which for finish, style, and form cannot be excelled in the State. He is only four years old, by Sidney, Grey Dale, and has shown very fast time. Longworth is a half brother to the wonderful Adonis, whose 2:14¼ as a three-year-old, proved him the phenomenal pacer of 1888. The horse will stand in Oakland, the address being found in the advertisement.

Mr. S. N. Straube, of the Poplar Grove Breeding Farm, Fresno, offers for sale a quantity of thoroughbred polled Angus cattle, and also has choice short horn breeds, all with A 1 pedigrees. Mr. Straube has not confined himself entirely to cattle, but makes a point of breeding high class trotting horses. Mr. Straube sends in a new announcement this week, informing the public where his three well-known stallions will make the season. The first is Clovis, a highly-bred Sultan, the peer of any horse in the State, and one whose book is bound to fill in short order. Pasha, another representative of the great Sultan, is spoken of very highly; he is a fine, handsome horse, far above the average, and will, beyond question, win laurels for himself in the stud. Still another is Apex, a noble son of Promptor, and those who fancy the blood of Blue Bull can find in this stallion all that is desired. These choice horses speak for themselves, and need no commendation at our hands. Read the advertisement, and write for further particulars to Mr. Straube.

Dates Claimed.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—A few of the active members of the Capital Turf Club have made arrangements to hold a five day's race meeting at Agricultural Park, and desire to claim May 7th as the opening day. The work has been carried to such an extent that we are confident of the movement being a complete success. We offer $4,000 in purses, besides various other interesting features. The committee now engaged on the speed programme will complete their labors in a few days, when we will send you a full programme for publication. If you can furnish us with the address of Miss Myrtie Peek, we will consider the information a favor. Yours respectfully,

T. A. JONES.
Sec't'y Capital Turf Club.

SACRAMENTO, January 28, 1889.

Two of the gamiest horses in America have been "nerved" Hanover and Egmont. They may possibly stand hard work for one season, but it is hardly possible.

THE KENNEL.

Dog owners are requested to send for publication the earliest possible notices of whelps, sales, names claimed, presentations and deaths in their kennels, in all instances writing plainly names of sire and dam and of grandparents, colors, dates and breed.

By an oversight the name of Mr. Albert Peri of Marysville was omitted from the list of those elected to membership in the Pacific Coast Field Trial Club at its last meeting. Mr. Peri is now in Europe looking up a good English setter and we hope may procure a world beater.

The London "Shooting Times" has issued its customary Christmas Annual, with a very appetizing table of contents. The Annual has usually drifted to our table, but we have been lost in the shuffle this year.

An advertiser wishes to procure the services of a thoroughbred Gordon setter bitch. He owns a desirable dog and will share the litter or pay a fee. It is a favorable opportunity for fanciers of the high-headed, beautiful black and tans.

During field trial week, a deposit of $50 a side was made to bind a one-day's race between Mr. J. Martin Barney's pointer Galatea and Mr. Thomas Bennet's English setter Sirius. On thinking the matter over Mr. Barney decided that he could not handle Galatea against Mr. Walter's handling of Sirius, and forfeited. The match was the outcome of heated talk, and was best declared off. Private races of the sort are prejudicial to field trials, make enemies and do no good.

The Secretary of the Pacific Coast Field Trial Club desires to call especial attention to the fact that entries to the Derby close on May 1st next. The club was never in so good condition, and its trials in January next will be equal both in size and quality to any in America, if owners of young setters and pointers but stand with it, for the improvement of the dogs. The Derby should have seventy-five nominations and thirty starters. A little reflection will convince any reader that field trials are a good thing. The forfeit is but $5, and it is hoped that entries will be made promptly. Blanks will be sent out during the month, and should be filled out and mailed to the Secretary, H. H. Briggs, 313 Bush street, San Francisco, with the forfeit.

Mr Wm. De Mott contemplates establishing himself as a dog trainer, somewhere near San Francisco, very soon. He is a careful, conscientious man, and will soon learn the art of training.

Mr. Allender remains at Watsonville, and will receive dogs to be prepared for next year's trials.

Mr. Walter is looking for a location in Kern county, and may set up a training kennel there.

Colonel Sam Beaver, of the bank of California, may be a pretty good sort of a man, but he is a sad wag, as witness the following lines on Mr. Linville's setter Donna, which died a few months ago:

"Here lies the body of Linville's Donna.
Step aside and don't tread on her;
Bred too high to wet her toes,
Or wander where the thicket grows,
She'd better been, the naughty hound,
If boiled to soap within the pound."

Mr. L. J. Rose, Jr., goes to England and the Continent for a few months visit in March. While abroad he intends to examine the best pointer kennels of England and to purchase one or more of the best youngsters he can find. Mr. Rose's judgment on form is very good, and he is also a critic on field work, so that his purchases may be expected to be as good as can be had.

Judge C. J. Peshall of Jersey City, N. J., the most readable of Kennel writers, and curiously learned in all that pertains to the dog, has presented to Mr. J. Martin Barney a young pointer bitch by Jimmie—Daisy of Naso. The bitch will be sent out in whelp to Nick of Naso, Judge Peshall's fine stud dog, and the puppies will have a double cross of Nick's blood, which ought to insure their field performances. The bitch is solid liver like her sire, except that she has a white star in brisket and some white toes.

A good story is told of Mr. Charles Mason, who as most of our readers are aware, holds a prominent position in the American Kennel world. Mr. Mason was judging, and an exhibitor who had been repeatedly asked to leave the ring declined to do so. After the awards had been made, the "kicker" approached Mr. Mason and addressed him: "Say, judge, will you just now tell me what's wrong with this dog?" No answer. "Now, look here, judge; can't you just tell me what's wrong? Give me one fault in him." "Well," at last replied Mr. Mason, "His chief fault is, that he will live too long!"

Friend Sherman of the "Kern County Californian," mixes things a little when he says that "Mr. Schreiber's Mountain Joe was one of the handsomest of the dogs, and lack of training only prevented his getting a prize. But he will grow to it." Mountain Boy is anything but a handsome dog, although he has lots of quality. He is a thoroughly trained field dog, and won first in the All-Aged Stake in 1885. Probably Mr. Sherman, to whom the Field Trialers are indebted for many kindly services, had in mind Mr. Schreiber's Nestor, a grand young dog, that needed only experience to make him about right. So good a judge as Mr. Joe Bassford thought Nestor to be about as good a pointer as he had seen at any of the meetings of the Club.

The California Kennel's notice of the whelping of nine puppies by Harold—Miss Druid noted elsewhere is worth especial remark, not only because of the peculiar excellence of the puppies, but because of the misfortune which destroyed six of the litter. The sire is a splendidly bred and fine looking son of the best English setter that ever lived. The dam is by Druid—May B., a cross so strong in the blood of Duke and Rhoebe as to make it invaluable. The litter, eight dogs and a bitch, was evenly marked and very handsome, but the dam laid upon and smothered all but the three dog puppies. It need not be said that the survivors will be sedulously watched by Judge Post. Each one is worth a good many times its weight in silver, and all should make first class field dogs.

Those who took their dogs down to Bakersfield some time before the field trials to put them in condition, unite in according credit to certain gentlemen living near that city for a generosity that is rarely equaled. Mr. Barney was entertained by Mr. Connor, Mr. DeMott by Mr. D. M. Pyle, Mr. G. W. Bassford at the Peter's Ranch, Judge Post by Mr. Andrew Freligh, Mr. Allender at the Wible Ranch, and Mr. Walter at the Kinney Ranch. They were all given comfortable quarters, their dogs were well fed, the trainers had the use of teams when they wished them, and when settling day came the entertainers to a man refused to receive any recompense, and invited the dog men to come again. Such thoroughly sportsmanlike treatment could only come from true men and lovers of the dog and gun, and is worthy of general note.

After the conclusion of the recent fields trials, those who had been in attendance divided into shooting parties and put in a day on game with the trial dogs.

One party, L. J. Rose, Jr, and his dog Point, W. W. Foote and his setter Dick, William Schreiber and his pointer Mountain Boy, W. DeMott and Geo. T. Allender with Laddie, Old Black Joe, Bob and Royal Duke II, Mr S. D. Meriweather and D. M. Pyle had a great day. The chief interest laid in the comparative excellence of Point and Old Black Joe, and the opinion of most of those who saw the work was that Point beat Joe badly in pace, range, and nose, although both did nice work.

The Wible Ranch was hunted over, the cover being sagebrush, birds plenty but rather wild. All of the dogs did much better work than in the trials, probably because there was more deliberation and less excitement. The hunt lasted for five hours and a huge bag of quails and cottontails was brought in.

Another party took out Sirius, Sirocco, Sunlit and old Sweetheart. Messrs. W. E. Houghton and wife, H. L. Borgwardt and wife, and several younger ladies were much interested in the shooting. Judge Post's old Sweetheart, headstrong as possible, yet showed much of her old-time fire, bird sense and snap, and was about the best dog in the lot. Such a bitch is a rarity.

Mr. Thomas B. Merry, Commissioner to the Melbourne Exposition, returned by the steamship Alameda two weeks ago. He is full of intensely interesting items relating to the genial and thoroughly sportsmanlike residents of Australia. On Christmas he dined in Sydney, in a darkened room, lighted by a profusion of tapers, the dinner being a hot soup, baked fish, bacon and greens, stewed chicken, roast goose, roast beef, and a huge plum pudding blazing in brandy. Mr. Merry is of the flesh fleshy. The thermometer stood at 98 degrees, and his notions about Christmas in the Antipodes may be imagined.

The Stock-Keeper and Fancier's Chronicle, a very skittish and interesting English exchange has these notes which will interest American readers. It says:

It would seem that at American field trials they give the dogs a fairer trial than they are given here. When the birds are flushed at our trials (it being the close season), only blank cartridge is used to see that the competing dogs are not gunshy. In the States the birds are killed over the dogs, and each in turn is asked to retrieve while the other is at down charge. This, then, is a more thorough trial, but a fashion that cannot be followed at spring trials. Then the question arises, would it not be better to hold fields here in September or, anyhow, as soon as the corn is all cut, which would, of course, vary with the seasons. What a dog was really made of could then be more easily seen.

The fifteenth field trial Derby of the English Kennel Club will begin on April 30th next. It is open to all setters and pointers whelped during 1888, and is more properly speaking a Derby than are the American stakes for young dogs. In the Pacific Coast Club a dog may be twenty-four and one-half months old and yet start in the Derby. The English Club has introduced a new rule which is most excellent. It is as follows:

"If any dog, beaten in the first round of a stake, has shown, in the opinion of the judge or judges, exceptional merit, he may be allowed to remain in competition. This must be declared to the secretary or stewards by the judges at once, or, on the conclusion of the round. A fresh draw shall then take place, at the direction of the stewards, and this order of running shall be no more disturbed in finishing the stake. The usual guarding to be practiced, and, in addition, those dogs drawn against one another in the first round to be 'guarded' in the second. The judges shall also have the power to throw out in the first round of a stake both dogs in competition, if, after a sufficient trial, they consider them exceptionally deficient in merit In this case the order of the original draw shall not be disturbed."

We commend study of the rule to our readers, in the hope that either its adoption or the adoption of some modification of it may prevent the burial of a superior dog early in a stake by the rules.

Two letters from prominent dog fanciers were received at Bakersfield during the field trial, which are worth publishing, as illustrating the general interest felt in the trial, and the unexceptionable standing of the promoters of the trial.

The first was from Mr. Ramon E. Wilson, President of the Pacific Kennel Club and an ardent sportsman. Mr. Wilson has made sundry attempts to be present at the meetings of the trial club but has never been able to attend. Next to his much-to-be-desired presence, such a note as that appended is appreciated. He wrote:

"Last Wednesday night, at the meeting of the Pacific Kennel Club, at the Palace Hotel, I must have sat in a draught, for I caught a most horrible cold. I thought I was certainly going to have pneumonia. Have thus far escaped, but I thought it unwise to undertake to go to Bakersfield, I had intended to start last night. I defer to my wife's judgment, but I believe she feels as badly about it as I do. Of course you know how disappointed I am. I hope you will explain my absence to the boys and say to them that I am with them in spirit and thought; that I think of them during the day, and actually last night I dreamed of dogs, guns, and all of you whom I believed present. I hope you will all come back well, and that you may say you had a good time and that the trials were a complete success."

The second letter was from Mr. H. T. Payne of Los Angeles, four English setter puppies of whose breeding were entered in the Derby. Mr Payne's kennel is particularly strong in that sterling old Duke—Rhœbe blood which originally gave pluck and stamina to the Laverack's, and we hope better luck may attend the efforts of the Los Angeles contingent during the coming year. Mr. Payne wrote:

"It seems a great privation not to be able to be with you at the trials, but business matters which I cannot neglect compel me to remain, at least for the present. Possibly I may get in the last day or two. The boys here were unable to do anything with their dogs, on account of not being able to get a trainer. They have been working them themselves this winter, but all being business men, they have had but little time. The dogs, however, are doing splendid, considering their work. The whole litter are natural pointers, and keen hunters. I believe the bitch will yet have the name of producing some of the best dogs in the State, if we ever succeed in getting a trainer in this section of the State. Certainly her pups show excellent quality. Give my regards to all friends, and express my regrets at not being able to attend."

Coursing at Casa Blanca.

Messrs. Lockwood, Bettner, Gilliland and Gaylord of Riverside recently organized a coursing meeting at Casa Blanca, near Riverside, and made it a very successful and delightful affair. A description of the event, from an unpracticed but enthusiastic participant, reaches us, and is so good, as illustrating the phraseology and notions of one not au fait in the sport, that we give it in full. The reporter says:

When the company had assembled at Casa Blanca, a scene was presented which must have excited the admiration of anyone with a particle of poetry in his composition, however indifferent he might be to the attractions of the chase. But to the lovers of such noble sport as practiced elsewhere, and under widely different conditions; to those who have experienced that thrill of joy which fills the very soul of a man when he feels beneath him the impatient and forceful stride of a spirited steed, and listens to the musical cry of a pack of fox hounds,—to them the novelty and beauty of the scene were indescribably delightful. Never did a "meet" take place amid more lovely surroundings than this. All the conditions were well-nigh perfect, worthy of the presence of Diana herself. The drive was filled with vehicles and well-mounted horsemen. Merry greetings and peals of laughter were heard on every side. Tall, lithe and slender greyhounds, some of them splendid specimens,—the embodiment of grace and speed,—moved here and there among the crowd. Above all, however,—the crowning glory,—was the bright presence of the ladies. Their lovely faces and brilliant costumes added the one element needed to complete the picture. Even "Old Probs" entered into the spirit of the occasion and furnished weather with which no one could find fault,—it was simply superb.

Leaving Casa Blanca at 11 o'clock, the party followed Magnolia avenue to its end, and turning to the right entered upon the open plain. Here a line of horsemen was formed, the vehicles placed upon an eminence in the rear, and the gentleman who had charge of the dogs took position slightly in the advance. At the word of command the line moves forward. Everyone was on the "tip-toe of expectation," but the suspense did not last long. The line did not proceed far when suddenly a rabbit sprang up before the dogs, a wild shout goes up along the line, and we are off. Sauve qui peut! Devil take the hindmost!

What a glorious sensation it was to be in the midst of this mad rush! The rabbit was large, able-bodied and extremely progressive, and if he did not share the general and oft-repeated opinion that "on such a day as this mere existence is a pleasure," he seemed to think that it was at least better than nothing. (All this did not strike the writer at the time, in fact nothing struck him so forcibly just then as the sand and gravel thrown by the horse of a young lady in his front.)

in zig-zag curves along the ground, while the nearest pursuing dog appropriately resembles the extended "tail" of dark-colored smoke following the some course. The pace is terrific, and it speaks well of the quality of California horses that they keep it so well in view.

Now the rabbit is pressed so closely by the leading dog that he is forced to change his course, very much to the advantage of his pursuers, who are now close on his heels. In vain does he try all the dodging tactics peculiar to his race. As he passes over the crest of a low hill a beautiful fawn-colored dog comes in with a rush. A few well-executed dodges and passes, and then bunny loses his presence of mind, turns the wrong way, is met in the midst of his curve and—"existence is no longer a pleasure" to him. In a second he and the dogs are surrounded by the huntsmen as they arrive at full speed, each striving to be before the other, and the first lady is presented with the brush as a trophy.

Then, after resting the dogs and horses, a new line is formed, and soon another chase, and so on through the morning, until all assembled for lunch on Mr. Lillie's beautiful green alfalfa field. Horses were unsaddled and fed, the events of the morning were talked over, and everything was as merry as a marriage bell.

The plains south of Arlington station were agreed upon for the afternoon sport, and there occurred the two most exciting runs of the day, both kills taking place midst the carriages and spectators, with neck and neck finishes in both instances for the honor of first place.

As the riders and spectators pursued their way homewards the scene of the morning was repeated, and all agreed that never had they passed a more delightful day. So much interest and enthusiasm has been awakened that it has been proposed to form a Hunt Club, with a regular meet every two weeks during the season.

TRAP.

The trap season will begin with a meeting of the Gun Club at Bird's Point, on February 22d. Most of the members have been active in field shooting during the winter, so that high scores may be expected at the initial meeting.

A reunion of the Cosmopolitan Club is talked of, and Capt. Ault will probably institute such an affair as he has done during the season last passed.

Messrs. Parker Bros. of Meriden, Conn., have sent to San Francisco a sample of their new hammerless shot gun. The weapon is well built, on clean, fine lines, hangs well, is strong and simple in system, and in every way a workmanlike and creditable production. We hope soon to be able to dismantle one of the guns and describe it more accurately. Mr. S. A. Tucker who will soon be on the Coast, will find no difficulty in placing large orders for the gun.

Miss Lillian Smith.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN: As I have a little time I thought I would drop you a few lines to let my California friends know where I am, and what I am doing. I am at home with my parents this winter, resting from my European tour, which was a great success.

I have just received from Westley Richards, of London, England, a first quality, hammerless, 12 guage shot gun as a Christmas present, and I prize it very highly, as it is a beautiful gun.

In a few days I am going to give an exhibition of rifle shooting, and I shall attempt to beat all records of rapidity shooting. I will break five hundred balls in 15 minutes.

I expect to come to California this coming summer.

Girl Champion Shot of the World.

CANOEING.

Mr. V. E. Scifferstein whilom sprinter and amateur champion of the world at 100 yards, writes that he has returned to San Francisco to stay. Strong inducements were offered him to affiliate with some of the Eastern athletic clubs, but he preferred to follow a home lead as a dealer in coal and a general insurance broker at 624 Market street.

Oakland Canoe Club.

The annual meeting took place last Saturday evening; the reports were most satisfactory, and the club in a prosperous condition. The officers of the past year were re-elected without exception, being W. W. Blow, Commodore; A. D. Harrison, Vice-Commodore; H. Landsberger, Secretary; and W. Morrow, Treasurer.

The Mayrisch badge race so long looked forward to and prepared for ended in a fizzle. The race was set for two o'clock last Sunday, and when the time arrived the light breeze which had prevailed during the morning had entirely dropped, it being dead calm. Most of the entries voted for a postponement, and anyway for a time limit of one hour or no race, but one or two who had hoisted skyscrapers insisted on the drift being made. The word was given and the canoes floated about like a flock of ducks. In half an hour they had made about 200 yards, when it began to rain, and a stampede for the boathouse ensued. No one, however, noticed the Shadow. Her skipper had been one of the hottest to advocate the time limit, and when he was overruled he very sagaciously resolved to take them at their word, and continued on his way. He got round the course in two hours twenty minutes, and returning found everybody gone, and his absence unremarked even by the judges, who were also invisible. He pulled in his boat and seeking the judges at their homes claimed the badge, which was justly awarded him. Altogether it was a pretty good joke on the boys, and will teach them that when they insist on sailing in a calm they must beware of the dark horse.

On Sunday, the 27th, the canoes went down the creek in force to see the Long—Griffin race. The Frolic started early and cruised to Alcatraz and across the channel, returning to Goat Island for lunch, and joining the fleet at the mouth of the creek. There was a lovely little breeze and the perfection of sailing was enjoyed. All returned on the flood tide about 2 P. M. The canoe club are to be the guests of the Corinthian Yacht Club on Washington's birthday, and several intend cruising over to Tiburon beforehand and enjoying some sailing in those waters.

CORRESPONDENCE.

BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN: I note an answer to my suggestion for a meeting to arrange dates for this fall and summer fairs. It is without the signature of writer. I can see no point or feel approval for such peculiarity, for honest endeavor for the most general good is all that should be desired. The fact yet remains that a meeting of all at interest should and no doubt would be of general advantage, and can do no harm, for even were it desired to have a Southern, Northern and Central circuit, even then an understanding would be an advantage, and I hope that a meeting will be called, and if there is no other agreement each association there can claim a date more intelligently than in the absence of all information. L. J. ROSE.

LOS ANGELES, Jan. 25, 1889.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN: Allow me to correct "on the Road" a little as to Terra Cotta's breeding. He was bred in this vicinity by the late J. Henry Bruce, and sold as a yearling by his administrator at auction, on the farm, with the majority of the stock. He is by Harry O'Fallon, dam Laura B, by Bay Dick; 2nd dam Laura G. by Lee Paul. Laura G's dam was a mare by imp. Scythian. He was a great horse and should get winners at all distances. The writer has leased the old Crab Orchard race track for training purposes, and is training a stable of six there, five of them two year-olds, and one three-year-old, the latter is that speedy colt Lincoln, by St. Martin, dam Olena by imp. Buckden. He is a full brother to Mr. Hankin's flyer Santaline. After winning two races, in which he made the best look small, last spring, he went lame, and was turned out, but appears to be sound now.

The two-year-olds are imp. Wood Moss by Creancier, dam Lady Nar by Macaroni. He is a fine fellow, all English, and has stood well his recent shipping from Columbia, Mo. So also has his stable companion, two-year-old b. c. Ballymena, by imp. Claudius, dam by Tipperary, bred by Dr. A. W. McAlister, of that city, who has since the 1st inst. been so unfortunate as to loose his imp. stallion Claudius. Another two-year-old is a rasping bay colt by St Martin, dam Cousin Judic, by Beacon. Then comes two fillies by St. Martin, one out of the granddam of Santaline; the other out of a mare by Assessor (son of Buckden and Ascension, by Daniel Boone). This entire six has been selected for individual merit and breeding, not taken to "fill up"—in fact I have declined to take many good ones. The old Crab Orchard course is an historic one; many celebrated horses of earlier days have competed there. The late owner, Mr. H. W. Farris, was a very careful man to preserve records of races and incidents of interest, and if they can be found will from time to time give some of them to your readers. His aged widow is still living there, as also are many of his children, one of whom is the widow of Capt. T. G. Moore, so well known to Californians and turfmen everywhere in America. Many of his and of Mr. Farris' narratives I can yet call from memory. One of the former's was how he managed to get imp. Glencoe and bring him to Kentucky, which provoked Col. Johnson into making an extravagant bet, and how he teased the colonel before he let him out of it. Mr. Farris bred and raised the great Jim Bell and Josh Bell, and never tired of talking of the former, who was the first horse to lower the mile record to 1:46. I have heard him frequently say that Jim Bell was foaled on the first day of June, and had no superior then nor since; that improvements in race courses—not in horses—had lowered records: and in this "Uncle" Wils. Tisdell agreed with him. In 1877 the last public meeting was held at the old race course.

Many of the turf journals are wrong in speaking of Heron as owned by George Hankins, he is the property of J. W. Guest, and the Chicago representative has no interest in him, unless he buys him this week from Mr. Guest, who is now in Chicago, in answer to an offer Mr. Hankings made him for Heron. Somebody will have "fun" beating Heron this season. J. M LASLEY.

Black Warrior.

Mr. E. A. De Camp has prepared a short history of the old-time stallion Black Warrior, which was originally published in the Los Angeles Tribune. As there were several mistakes in what has already appeared in print, Mr. De Camp has made the necessary corrections for the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN.

LOS ANGELES, January 25, 1889.

Early in the sixties Los Angeles was literally in the saddle—none so poor as to walk. Yet with all the old Don's horses—roaming over a thousand hills, in all their pristine Castilian purity—none claimed to know the blood lines of his favorite. With such a foundation it required frontier courage to attempt the roadster of to-day, which has made Los Angeles a household word in every breeding farm in the country. May 18, 1857, at the home of Jason Davenport, Middlebury, Vt., was foaled a jet black colt, sire David Hills' Black Hawk, dam by Gray Hambletonian, grand dam a thoroughbred imported Messenger mare. In those good old Green Mountain days there were good horses, yet this equine youngster was awarded first premium by the Vermont State Agricultural society for two years in succession (1859-60) for the best of his age; for style, action, graceful movement, mettle and endurance. His owner challenged the world to produce his equal. Even with the horrors of war to distract business, that prince of good fellows, S. B. Rockwell, purchased Black Warrior and started for the golden shores—a no ordinary adventure in those days—antedating the "palace horse car." He was first heard from in old Sonoma, and in July, '62, a patron writes to Los Angeles saying: "His colts here are numerous, and all are splendid looking and possess fine action. We would like to have him back here."

The grand horse was destined to temper the blood of the Manadas of Los Angeles in 1862, with what result little is known. August 1, '62, that enterprising horseman, Rockwell, offered colt prizes, to be awarded November 1, 1864, at the old Willow Grove Hotel, near El Monte. Quite an amount of enthusiasm was aroused, and a number of gentlemen—among other the Temple brothers Colima, Poyereno, Juan and Tomas Sanchez, Benito Wilson, and Wm. Workman, all since dead; and Messrs. Garey, Rowland, Gibson, O. W. Childs and others yet living—made a book of fifty mares, at $50 each, amounting to $2,500—a great sum in those days, but it was the means of selling him to G. P. F. Temple for $7500. Those were not days of the sulkey, hence we hear of but good roadsters only. Mr. Garey's prize was a game dark-bay colt, which for years was good for three minutes any day with two persons in a buggy. He is still living at 26 years, and does his daily work among the nursery trees—a little stiff, but till loves a brush on the road. Mr. Temple's prizes were satisfactory, so good, in fact, that Mr. Ferguson added several to his livery stock. Long trips were the order in those days, but the Warriors were equal to them.

Mr. Askins got one, a roan. She was a good one. He took her to Oregon, brought her back, used her for years in his livery stable, and finally she dropped into the hands of D. G. Whiting of San Bernardino. Another of the Temple colts reached Henry Herwig's stable. He used her in an express wagon. His business extended from Santa Margarita ranch on the South to General Beale's on the North with not infrequent trips to San Bernardino and the ocean.

These were the first stepping-stones laid by the old horse. Mr. Ferguson bred his mare to the Moor. The produce, along with an Overland, was placed with John D. Young at Ballona for pasturage on shares. Mr. Young took the Overland, a good looker, but that was all. Mr. Ferguson sold the Moor-Warrior mare to Mr. Rose at a good price. When Donitoan broke her, he remarked: "She is a stayer; good for 100 miles out, and every one better than 3:00."

Mr. Whiting bred his roan mare by Warrior to Inca, and got Inca Jr., 2:37, and good any time for 2:28; a two-year-old that trotted in 2:35, and a yearling in 2:50, and with little training. The Herwig mare, coupled with Gibraltar, produced that game little mare Dora, owned by Jacob Starr. Thus are enumerated a few of the marks, and all things being equal, what horse excels it? The hard times came, the days of 1877, the downfall of Mr. Temple and his household. Black Warrior, the pride of a New England home, a peer among horses, and who had trotted a mile in 2:38 at the age of 23, was sold for $20, and thrown into obscurity. The auctioneer excused the price by pronouncing him a failure. Was he? I leave the question to any lover of a trotter, or to those who may read the above.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY DOLLARS IN PREMIUMS.

To any person who shall rear the best colt from an American or half breed American mare bred to the trotting stallion Black Warrior, during the season of 1863, we will pay the sum of ($50) fifty dollars; also we will pay the like sum of ($50) fifty dollars to the person who shall rear the best colt from a California mare bred as above stated. We will further pay the sum of ($25) twenty-five dollars to each person who shall rear the second best colt in each of the two respective classes bred as above stated. The awards shall be made by a committee of three good judges chosen by a special committee of three men, which last—the appointing committee—shall be elected by a majority of the exhibitors of colts on the day of exhibition, which shall be holden on the first Saturday in November, 1864, at the Willow Grove Hotel, now kept by I. S. Thompson, in Monte, Cal.

For and in consideration of the services of the stallion Black Warrior, herein agreed to be furnished by Jones and Rockwell, and in further consideration of the sum of one dollar to each of us in hand, paid by said Jones and Rockwell, we the undersigned each for ourselves respectively promise and agree to and with said Jones and Rockwell and their assigns, that we will pay to them the sum of fifty dollars for the service of said stallion Black Warrior for the season of A. D. 1863, commencing the first week in march and closing during the first week in August, for each mare for which service is required.

The number of mares which we hereby agree to furnish for service being set opposite our respective names, and the said Jones and Rockwell agree to and with the undersigned that said stallion shall stand a portion of the time each week in Monte, and that they will furnish the services of said stallion to said mares as aforesaid, at the prices above mentioned. Payable in U. S. gold coin. JONES AND ROCKWELL.

Californian Entries.

One of the leading stakes at the spring meeting of the St. Louis Jockey Club, is the Brewers' Stallion Stakes. The race is a popular one and usually has a very large number of entries. Declaration day has passed and now it is known what entries are eligible to start for the $1,500 added by the Lager men. There is a peculiarity about those remaining in the list which will undoubtedly strike the reader as remarkable, and that is, that every horse still left in is a Californian. On asking a prominent St. Louis turf man, who is at present in San Francisco, why all the Eastern horses were declared, answered, "What is the good of us running our stock against you folk, we have no show on earth against the California youngsters. Why, just look, there is a full brother to the Emperor of Norfolk, do you think I am going to work my horse to death trying to beat him? Not much!" Below will be found the conditions and the list of horses still eligible:

ST. LOUIS BREWERS' STALLION STAKES.

Nominations for sires closed January 15, 1888; entries for colts and fillies to close January 15, 1889. For two-year-old colts and fillies (foals of 1887), at $50 each, half forfeit, or $10 if declared by April 1, 1889, with $1,500 added by the brewers of St. Louis, Mo. The winner of any two-year-old stake race of the value of $1,000 to carry five pounds, the second to receive $300, and the third $150 out of the stakes. Three-quarters of a mile.

The Thoroughbred Stallion

Judge McKinstry,

Will make the season of 1889, from March 1 to July 1, at San Felipe Rancho, near Gilroy.

PEDIGREE.

DESCRIPTION.

JUDGE McKINSTRY is a bright bay with black points, 16¼ hands in height, of a conformation combining power and speed. His breeding is one that cannot be excelled. The families on both sides being noted for their gameness and fleetness. Speakin of JUDGE McKINSTRY, Matt Storm, the well-known trainer, says: "He is the fastest race-horse I ever saw on the Sacramento track. He has shown me trials that were marvelous, one especially of a mile and a quarter that was ahead of the present record." He was started in several races when not in condition to run, and even then developed an amount of speed that is characteristic of the noted families from which he descends. His performances are too well known to need repetition here. Good judges of horses state positively that there can be no doubt of his sire, as he is a perfect picture of Grinstead, but rule compels us to name both sires.

TERMS: $75 payable when the mare is moved from ranch, or, $100, with the usual privilege. Good pasturage, $3 per month. Mares at owners risk. All communications must be addressed to

601 California Street, S. F.

MEMO.

The Fast Trotting Stallion, the Best Son of Sidney.

He was bred by G. Valerga at the Arlo Stock Farm, Sacramento County, California; foaled spring of 1885

By Sidney.
First dam Flirt by Buccaneer.
Second dam Mohaska Belle by Flaxtail.
Third dam by John the Baptist.

Sidney by Santa Claus, 2:17½, his dam Sweetness, 2:21¼. Strathmore, the son of Santa Claus, has 22 of his get which have trotted in 2:30 or better, and Volunteer, the sire of Sweetness, has 26 in the same list. Buccaneer is the sire of Shamrock, two-year-old record 2:25, and of Flight, 2:29, and in him are combined the strains of Long Island Blackhawk, Vermont Blackhawk, and the dam of Rysdyk's Hambletonian. Flaxtail figures prominently in both pacing and trotting descendants, and is the sire of the dam of Apex, 2:26, Flight, 2:29, J. H. McCormack, 2:29, and Shamrock, 2:25.

PERFORMANCES.

Memo only trotted in public in his two-year-old form, obtaining a record of 2:49, though he was close to Grandee in a race on the Bay District Track, the second heat of which was made in 2:33½, the first in 2:32. He exhibited phenomenal speed when three years old, and had it not been for a slight stream of his fore-fetlock there is little question that he would have shown in public very close to the best record. On the Oakland track he was timed a mile in 2:20¾, and frequently trotted quarters in from 32½ to 34 seconds.

DESCRIPTION.

He is nearly if not quite sixteen hands high, and of powerful build throughout. His color is a glossy black, with both fore-feet white and a touch of white on his off hind quarters. His disposition is all that could be desired, and his action superb.

TERMS: One hundred dollars the season, which will commence on the 7th of February and close on the 1st of July. Due care will be taken of mares, but no responsibility for accidents or escapes.

Mares taken and kept as desired by the owners, and at reasonable rates.

Pasturage at $5 per month within the track enclosure; feed first rate, and a living stream of water in the field. There is a double protection against escape, as in addition to a strong fence on the inside of the track, the gates of the outer fence are enclosed at night, which gives almost positive assurance of safety. Address

JOHN ROHN,
Oakland Trotting Park.

LONGWORTH.

High Bred Trotting Stallion.

FOUR YEARS OLD, 15½ HANDS HIGH.

Four Years Old, 15 1-2 Hands High Dark Bay, Black Points, Running well up on the Arm, White Crescent in Forehead.

For finish, style and form cannot be excelled by any four-year-old horse in the State. His gait is perfect; going low to the ground, with smooth, easy motion. In one month's work, when a two-year-old, he showed a 2:40 gait, and, as a three-year-old, he was worked but two months and showed trial 2:26, half mile 1:10. He could have been driven much faster if required.

LONGWORTH is the result of a long line of distinguished ancestry endowed with speed that follows back for generations.

Memo, three-year-old trial, 2:20¾.
Sister V., two-year-old trial, 2:32.
St. Nicholas, three-year-old trial, 2:27¾.
Ringwood, three-year-old trial, 2:30.
Miss Sidney, one-year-old trial, half, 1:38.
Brown colt, three-year-old trial, 2:40.
Sorrel colt, two-year-old trial, quarter, 34 seconds, and a number more that have shown remarkable speed; yearlings that have shown an eighth of a mile in 16 1-5 seconds, a 2:10 gait.

Longworth is by Sidney, record 2:19½, he by Santa Claus, 2:17½; grandam Sweetness, 2:21¼.

Longworth's dam, Grey Dale.

Longworth, first dam Grey Dale; Grey Dale by American Boy, Jr., by American Boy, sire of Belmont, second dam Grey Poll by Winfield Scott, by Edward Everette; third dam Sorrel Poll by Sir Henry; fourth dam Daughter of Printer.

All letters pertaining to the service of this horse should be directed to N. K. FAIRBANKS, Oakland Alameda County, Cal. Terms, fifty dollars, payable at the end of the season, which will close June 1st, 1889.

The best of care will be taken to insure mares with foal.

The number of mares limited to twenty-five.

GROVER CLAY,

Bay Stallion, bred by Hon. W. M. Traylor, San Francisco. Foaled 1883. By ELECTIONEER.

First dam MAGGIE NORFOLK by NORFOLK, son of Lexington.

Second dam by BILLY CHEATHAM.

Third dam by DORSEY'S GOLDDUST.

GROVER C is a very handsome shade of bay, 15¾ hands high and showing as much quality as a majority of thoroughbreds. He is as square-gaited a trotter as can be, and has shown a great deal of speed for the amount of handling. Has been worked very little, though he can show a thirty gait or better whenever called upon.

TERMS.

Fifty dollars the season, payable at time of service. Proper care will be taken, but no responsibility incurred for accidents or escapes. Mares will be pastured inside of the Oakland Trotting Park, which is especially safe, having two fences which give ample security against escape. There is a never-failing stream of water which runs through the field, and the food is good.

Season commencing first of January and ending the first of July.

This is the only son of Electioneer standing in Alameda County, and the high breeding on the side of his dam is a guarantee that his colts will inherit qualities already made famous through the mixture of Electioneer and Lexington blood. Ansel, 2:20, is from Lexington mare, and Sunol's granddam, two-year-old record 2:18, was by Lexington, both Sunol and Ansel by Electioneer, Lexington the sire of Norfolk.

THE WILKES STALLION

Sire of Gus Wilkes, 2:22; Alpheus, 2:27; Balkan 2:29¾, three-year-old; John O'Brien, lapped out the winner in 2:36 as a three-year-old; H. A. W.'s Black Colt, trial 2:29 with very little work as a four-year-old.

Will remain in the future at San Miguel Stock Farm, Walnut Creek, Contra Costa County.

DESCRIPTION.

MAMBRINO WILKES is a black horse, 16 hands high, and considerably longer than his height; has immense muscular development and weighs 1,260 pounds. He has the utmost symmetry of proportion and elegance of finish. No competent judge who has seen this horse has failed to pronounce him a perfect individual, and his breeding is certainly fashionable enough to satisfy the most fastidious His colts are large, stylish and handsome, and Balkan has been pronounced by many the most stylish trotter on the turf.

PEDIGREE.

Sired by George Wilkes, dam Lady Chrisman by Todhunter's Mambrino; second dam by Pilot Jr.

Todhunter's Mambrino by Mambrino Chief, dam Ripton's dam by Hunt's Commodore, son of Mambrino, by imp. Messenger; second dam by Potomac, son of imp. Messenger.

George Wilkes sired 65 colts that have beaten 2:30. Of these 39 have average records of 2:24, 14 of 2:19 and 12 of 2:18.

TERMS.

Mares from a distance will be received at the Dexter Stables, Oakland, or Livery Stable, Martinez, the owner notifying Smith Hill, Superintendent at the farm. Good pasture and plenty of water. For the purpose of placing the service of a Wilkes within reach of breeders, the same rate will be maintained as last year, to wit, $75 for the season. Although it is not admitted thereby that this horse is inferior as a producer to the horses whose fees are placed at from $150 to $500.

BALKAN,

Three-year-old Record 2:29 1-2; trotting many heats faster, when he did not obtain a record.

PEDIGREE.

Sired by Mambrino Wilkes, dam Fanny Fern by Jack Hawkins, son of Boston; second dam S. I. B. by Jim Crow.

It will be readily seen that this colt is from strong producing lines on both sides, Fanny Fern having produced Mollie Drew, May Queen, Onyx and Fred Arnold, all noted trotters and all by different sires.

This colt will be kept at the Oakland Trotting Park, and will be stinted to ten approved mares at $100 for the season.

Thoroughbred Stallion

RATHBONE.

RATHBONE IS A VERY HANDSOME SHADE of brown, the only white a small star in forehead. He is of almost unexceptionable form, 15 hands 3 inches in height, of immense power and substance, and also of the highest quality.

He was never in "order" to run, and yet he has shown well, better by far than could have been expected under the circumstances.

March 11, 1889, on the Bay District course, carrying 5 pounds over-weight (115 lbs.) he defeated, in a stake for two-year-olds, Voltigeur, C. H. Todd, Notidle and Leap Year, the half mile being run in 49½ seconds. He has shown quarters in 28 seconds, and is so stoutly bred that he could hardly fail to go a distance at a high rate of speed.

His blood lines could not be improved. His sire, Young Prince, is the only stallion that I can recall imported from England to the United States with near strains of Stockwell and King Tom blood, these noted horses being the paternal and maternal grandsires of Young Prince. The family of his dam, Lady Amanda, ranks high among the noted clans of America. Malcolm, Regent, Ontario, McWhirter, Lady Middleton, etc. The following is a tabulated pedigree:

RATHBONE.

- Young Prince (imported.) — Knowsley
  - Stockwell.
  - Orlando mare.
- Queen of Spain
  - King Tom.
  - Ma Mie.
- Lady Amanda — Hurrah (imported.)
  - Newminster.
  - Jovial.
- Lady Lancaster
  - Monarch, (imported.)
  - Lady Canton.

Lady Canton, by imported Tranby, and running from there through the noted race mare Mary Randolph, by Gohanna, to Lord Egremeret's Highflyer mare.

Stockwell, King Tom, Newminster and Monarch, the best sons of The Baron, Bataplan, Touchstone and Emilius, and the dams of the same remove, by Orlando, Jerry (a St. Leger winner), Pay Middleton and imported Tranby, present such a combination of ultra fashionable blood as is rarely equalled. Young Prince was bred by James Smith, England; foaled 1870. See English Stud Book, Vol. XIII., page 303.

With proper mares there is no quest on that RATHBONE will get race-horses, with a certainty of getting, from any good mares, valuable horses for harness and saddle, with a fair show of a fast trotter, as RATHBONE is a capital road horse and shows a good gait without any trotting practice further than occasional drives on the road. He is one of the "best disposed" horses imaginable without trick or vice of any kind.

In order to place his services within the reach of those who feel that they cannot pay the high price demanded for fast trotting sires, his services are put at the exceedingly low price of $25 the season.

JOS. CAIRN SIMPSON.

NOONDAY.

No Record, Foaled 1884.

Standard No. 10,000.

THIS CELEBRATED TROTTING-BRED STALLION will be limited to 40 mares the ensuing season at Oakland Trotting Park, Oakland, Cal., commencing February 1st and ending July 1st, at $100 the season, with the usual privilege of returning the mare next season if not proving in foal. The names of his patrons will be entered on his book in order of their application. He will be limited strictly to forty mares. Pasturage at five dollars per month, hay and grain extra.

NOONDAY, sired by Wedgewood (682), record, the fourth heat, 2:19, (sire of Favonia, record, fourth heat, 2:19, and Nugget, record 2:28, he the sire of Nettie Leaf, four-year-old record 2:23¾), and five others better than 2:26.

First dam Noontide, record 2:20½, by Harold (413), sire of Maud S., record 2:08¾, Mattie Graham, 2:21¾, and 17 others in 2:30.

Second dam Midnight (the dam of Jay-Eye-See, record 2:10), by Pilot Jr., sire of the dam of Maud S., 2:08¾, Nutwood, 2:18¾.

First dam (the dam of Woodford Mambrino, 2:21), by Woodford (thoroughbred son of Kosciusko), he by Sir Archy.

NOONDAY is well formed, evenly balanced and handsome; his color is dark seal brown, small star, right hindfoot white, 15 1¾ inches high, weight 975 lbs., strong back and good gaited, short and rapid, and will make a fast and game campaigner.

Breeders will please remember that this horse is not owned by me. I have only leased him for two years for the benefit of the State and breeders on account of the speedy lines and blood that this State is in need of, and no stallion now in public service can show a pedigree with such fast records as enrich the blood of NOONDAY.

I will also handle and train a few horses for gentlemen at fair terms. Address

ELECTIONEER STALLION

EROS,

Standard No. 5326.

Electioneer, his sire, has more 2:20 trotters than any living horse, and more 2:30 trotters than any stallion LIVING OR DEAD.

Eros has a record of 2:29½, made in the fifth and deciding heat against a field of eight horses in his maiden race, and with only four weeks preparation after coming out of the stud.

Progeny.

Eros had last fall but three colts trained; the oldest a three-year-old trotter, an exhibition mile during the San Jose Fair in 2:34, last quarter in 36½ seconds. A two-year-old (timed by the judges) made a mile in 2:46½, and the other two-year-old in 2:47. All of these trials being made without a single skip, and none of these colts had then been handled three months from the hitting harness.

TERMS: $50 for the season, from February 1st to July 1, 1889. Due at time of service.

THREE CHEERS

Will make the Season of 1889 at Oakland Race Track, Oakland, Alameda County.

Pedigree.

Newminster by Touchstone (winner St. Leger 1831), dam Beeswing (winner of 54 races out of 64 starts) by Dr. Syntax (winner Doncaster Cup 1887, 40, 41, 42, the only horse that ever accomplished that feat.)

THREE CHEERS is bred in the speediest and stoutest lines. His dam, Young Fashion was the dam of Surprise, Scotland the only horse that ever beat Asteroid a heat), Liverpool, Columbia and Bonnie Kate, the dam of Little Buttercup and the flying Bonnie Lizzie. His grandam, Fashion, was the greatest race mare of her era, defeating Boston in that historical match at four-mile heats, that is recorded as one of the greatest events in the annals of the turf. He is thoroughly sound in wind and limb, his family on both sides being noted for their exemption from curbs, spavins, roaring, or any other hereditary unsoundness. Horsemen, who can appreciate the highest type of the thoroughbred, are specially invited to inspect Three Cheers.

TERMS: $75 for the season. Mares not proving with foal can be returned the next season free of charge. Good pasturage at $5 per month. Mares cared for in any manner owners may desire, and fed on hay and grain, either or both, at reasonable rates. None but competent grooms employed, but no responsibility assumed for accidents or escapes.

N. B.—Mares sent from a distance in care of J. W. Morshead City Front Stables, San Francisco, will be forwarded without delay.

OSSIDINE

KALAMAZOO, Mich., Sept. 15, 1888.

GENTLEMEN:—We have used Ossidine for the past two years and consider it invaluable for Sprung Tendons, Curbs, Ringbone and Spavins; there is nothing equals it; and for us it effected a permanent cure where firing failed, although performed by one of the most successful veterinarians on the continent. We have recommended it to others with like success, and believe it has more merit than any blister ever used.

Very respectfully yours, S. A. BROWNE & Co., Prop's.

This scientific preparation is an absolute cure for all bony or callous lumps on horses, and is a more powerful absorbent than "firing," without creating the slightest blemish. After a few applications the excrescence is so palpably reduced that even the skeptical frankly acknowledge that it is by far the most valuable outward remedy for horses ever invented.

The ONLY preparation in the world that will remove a Bone Spavin after it has become ossified.

Price $3.00 per Large Bottle,

Sole Agents for United States and Canada.

Owner of Eole, St. Saviour, Eolist, etc, says; I have long used it in my stables, and find it to be all that is claimed for it in removing callous and unnatural bony growths, without leaving the slightest blemish. From my experience, I most strongly recommend the use of Ossidine, and feel that it is a necessary adjunct to every stable. Yours respectfully,

LONG BRANCH, July 28, 1888. F. GEBHARD.

How I Found Out my METHOD in the MANNAGE; And that it is The only WAY to DRESS HORSES.

There is but One Truth in anything; and that my Method is True, cannot be better Demonstrated, than by Experience. which will clearly show, That Mine never misses its End, as All Others do; and so Proves Mine True, and Theirs False. For, to say that some of them come Near the Truth, is neither Commendation, nor Excuse: A Falsehood within an Inch of the Truth, being as Bad, as if it were an Hundred Miles off.

I have Practised, and Studied Horse-manship ever since I was Ten years old; Have Rid with the Best Masters of all Nations, heard them Discourse at Large, and Tried their several Ways: Have Read all their Italian, French, and English Books, and some Latin ones; and in a Word, All that hath been Wr t upon that Subject, Good and Bad; And have Bestowed many Thousands of Pounds in Horses, have Spoiled many, and have been very Long learning of this Art of Horse-manship.

But all that while I thought still, All was Labor in Vain; and that there was something, not Found out, which They and their Books Miss: Whereupon I began to consider so Seriously, and Study so Earnestly, all the Particulars that concern the Mannage; that at last I Found this Method, which is as True, as it is New, and is the Quintescence of Horse-manship: For which I have Left all Others, as I had great Reason so to do, Making with it all manner of Horses whatsoever, of all Nations, and of all Dispositions; Strong, Weak; Full of Fire, Dull and Lazy; even Mares, Geldings, and Bidets; and all that ever comes to my Hands.

I follow not the Horses Disposition, as most do; but I Make the Horse follow my Ways, and Obey me: I seldom Beat them, or Punish them with either Rod, or Spur, but when I meet with a great Resistance, and that Rarely: And yet I must tell you, that I use Force, which they Obey willingly, for the most part; and, however, all Yield, and Render themselves at last, with much Satisfaction to me; which I with others may find in following their Ways.

But says One, Doth your Lordship think, that both your Books would Make me a Horseman? I Answer: That they are Written as plainly, and as clearly as Possibly can be: There is in my French Book, Circles, and the Prints of Horses Shoes, to show How his Legs should Go; there is also exact Figures of all Postures, and of all Actions, both of Man and Horse, and more cannot be. But whether my Books will Make you a Horse-man or no, though they do as much as Books can do, I cannot Tell; for you must have it all in your Head; and it may be you will not Understand it. But put the Case you do, yet Wanting the Practice, you cannot Ride Well; and yet no Fault at all in my Books, but in You.

There are some Nations that Think they can see Nothing, but they can do it; which must be by Inspiration, by which I never saw any Ride, though many Pretend to Preach by it. It is a Long Study, and Diligent Practice; a Long Habit and Custom, which doth All Things in the World, and nothing done without it: For there is cunning in Daubing.

Do you think, that an Ignorant School-Boy can be as Learned as a Doctor? Or, let a Skilful Musician Write the Rarest Book in the World, for Composing, or Singing; Can you Imagine, that as soon as you have Read his Book, you can Do what he Teacheth? No truly; and yet not the Book's Fault, but Yours, in being so Partial to your Self, as to think you can do Any Thing at the first Sight, without Practice or Study; which would be a Miracle I never saw, or any Body shall ever see.

In the same manner, if a Lutenist should Write a Rare Book, Can you Expect, that as soon as you have Read it, you can Play on the Lute; because, it may be, you can jangle the Strings?

But you say, You can Ride: Truly, just as you Jangle the Lute-Strings, and no otherwise. You have learnt in Italy and France; that's something indeed: So many Crowns a Month, and the Horse did not Throw you, and that is all.

Mr. Spenser, the Best Scholar in all the Academy where he Learned, and a fine Gentleman, who had been Two Years there; when he came to Ride one of my Horses, he could not make him Go: His Brother-in-Law being present, said to me; My Lord, you must Excuse him, he hath not Rid a great while. But Mr. Spenser said (with a great Oath) Brother, you are Deceived; for I know now, I could never Ride.

God knows how many Young Gallants come newly out of Academies; English, French, Irish, and Dutch Gentlemen, that are Famed for good Horse-men, and truly no Piece of a Horseman, and Rid the Woefullest that could be; and so did before me some Masters of Academies: And once two French-men Riding (God knows very meanly) were strangely Laught at, and that very Worthily, by two other French Riders that stood by.

But says One, I can Ride a Ready Horse; Wherein he is Deceived; for a Ready Horse is the Hardest of all to Ride, because the Least motion is an Absolute Command unto him, and an Ignorant gives him such Counter-times, as he puts him quite Out.

Mr. Germain, a Fine Genlteman, and the Best Scholar Du Pleffis had in all his Academy, knew well the Difficulty of Riding a Ready Horse: For, to Persuade him to Ride one of Mine, which he would not Do; I told him, If you will but Sit Still, I warrant you the Horse will go Well with you. But a Man (said he, with a great Oath) cannot Sit Still. Which was said Knowingly, and like a Horseman; for, to Sit Still, belongs only to a Great Master.

Another, because he hath Rid a Hundred Miles in a Day, (which a Post-Boy can do) thinks Himself a Horse-man; or, Because, he can Run a Match with his Groom, or Leap a Ditch, or a Hedge, in Hunting, and Hold by the Main, he thinks he is a Horse-man; but his Hunts-Boy doth as much. And my Lord Mayor when he goes to Weigh Butter, fits a Leg of either side the Horse very Gravely; An excellent Horse-man! And I have seen many Wenches Ride Astride, and Gallop, and Run their Horses, that could, I think, hardly Ride a Horse Well in the Mannage.

Are they not, in All Trades, bound Apprentices Seven and Nine Years; and many Bunglers of them too? And, in Higher Professions, Twenty and Thirty Years is not too much, before they are Great Masters in any One of them: And though Horse-manship be the Hardest of All, yet Many a Gentleman will Ride the First Day as well as the Greatest Master; but he is Deceived, as well as those that think to Buy, with their Money, any Quality: For if Good Qualities could be Purchased with Money, every Rich Citizen would be a Fine Gentleman. Of which Opinion that French Cavalier was not, who told me, commending my Method; Par Dieu, Il est bein hardi qui monte devant vous, that is, He is very Bold, that dares Ride before you. And to the same Purpose, Signor del Campo, an Italian Rider at Bruxels, after he had seen my Horses, said; Il faut tirer la Planche, that is, The Bridge must be Drawn up; for no Horse-man, so good as You, can come After.

There is no Horse-man but shall Make my Horses go, for his Use, either in a Single Combat, or in the Wars, better than he shall any bodies Horses else; and that's Sufficient: for, to make them go in Perfection in all Ayres as I can, were too much, and too great a Miracle: But let My Method be what it will, since every Man doth what he can; if any Pleases himself with his Own Opinions, though he Dislikes My Way never so much, and should Censure a thing he Understands not; and say, That the Mannage is a Foolish thing: It shall not Displease me at all.

OBSERVATIONS of HORSES. of the SPANISH HORSE.

You must Know, that of All Horses in the World, of what Nation soever they be, Spanish Horses are the Wisest; far the Wisest, and strangely Wise, beyond any Man's Imagination; but I must Tell you, they are not the Easlier Drest for that: Because they Observe too much with their Eyes, and their Memories are too Good, and so Conclude with their Judgments too soon, without the Man, Reckoning without their Host; whereas they should Follow, and Obey, his Hand and Heel; and that not by Roat neither, but by

If he be Well Choſen, I aſſure you, He is the Nobleſt Horſe in the World: Firſt, There is no Horſe ſo Curiouſly Shaped, all over from Head to Croup: He is the moſt Beautiful that can be; For he is not ſo Thin, and Lady-like, as the Barb; nor ſo Groſs as the Neapolitan; but between Both. He is of great Spirit, and of great Courage, and Docil: Hath the Proudeſt Walk, the Proudeſt Trot, and Beſt Action in his Trot; the Loftieſt Gallop, the Swifteſt Careers; and is the Lovingeſt and Gentleſt Horſe, and Fitteſt for a KING in a Day of TRIUMPH to Shew himſelf to his People, or in the Head of an Army, of any Horſe in the World.

Therefore no Horſe ſo fit to Breed on, as a Spaniſh Horſe; either for the Mannage, the War, Ambling for the Pad; Hunting, or for Running-Horſes: Conquerour was of a Spaniſh Horſe, Shotten-Herring was of a Spaniſh Horſe, Butler was of a Spaniſh Horſe, and Peacock was of a Spaniſh Mare: And Theſe Beatt all the Horſes in their their Time, so much, as No Horse ever Ran near them.

I say, He is Absolutely the best Stallion in the World, for all those several things I have formerly Named, if you do Wisely appropriate such Mares to him, as shall be fit for such Uses as you would have your Breed; and so he is fit for all Breeds, but to Breed Cart-Horses.

At The Bay District.

Among the many stables now at the track, the one trained by T. H. Griffen is as representative as any. Horses of all kinds and conditions are to be found around the track, but Mr. Griffin will only have the best, and consequently has a "string" that is a credit to the well known Chicago driver. A BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN representative was shown the various trotters in his stable a few days ago, the first being the magnificently bred stallion Blue Gown, by Gus, he by Bellfounder; first dam Jennie Noyes; second dam Molly Patchen by Geo. M. Patchen; third dam Kitty Hyde by Jack Hawkin's Bellfounder. This fine young colt has a record of 2:54½ which was made some time ago, but he can beat that so far now that it is only a question how low he will go in the 20's when he starts in his next race.

Maywood, a very pretty son of Nutwood, dam a Patchen mare, is showing a wonderful turn of speed, his record is 2:27½, but judicious work and careful handling has enabled him to show much better in private trials.

Mr. W. C. Erban is the owner of an elegant light bay called Concord, by Conductor, who is low down in the charmed circle. Concord is a very speedy horse, and is already matched for one race, which will take place Washington's birthday.

Still another son of Gus is a handsome brown stallion, five years old, dam Jennie Noyes, called Clinton, who has a record of 2:27½. He is a fine graceful mover, and bar accident should give a good account of himself this season.

Little Hope is a pacer, and has already competed in two races, both of which were won easy. Little Hope is by Tempest, dam by Wilson's Blue Bull, and has a record of 2:21¼. If a quarter that was shown is any criterion of Little Hope's speed, he is almost able to travel with Adonis, Arrow or Yolo Maid.

Abbotsford Jr. is a very promising horse, and is the very picture of his sire, Abbotsford; his dam is the Gillespie mare, by Blue Bull. He has a record of 2:34½, which is no measure of his gait.

Mr. Griffen had a very beautiful Elector colt led out, with the remark, "I think he is the best I have." He certainly gives every indication of making a name for himself, as he seems the very picture of a trotting horse. His dam is an Alexander mare, he is five years old and called Edwin C.

Buttonhole may seem a strange name for a colt, but it perpetuates the name of the Button family, which is always desirable in horse nomanclature. Buttonhole is a three-year-old, by Alexander's button, the dam being a McClellan mare, and can show quarters in 34 seconds.

Another very good looking colt is owned by Wm. D. English, Esq., and Mr. Griffen says he gives great promise of turning out a very speedy youngster. He is by Albert W. out of a well bred mare; Murray is a good son of that fast old sire Dan Voohrees, and like his sire loves a fast brush on the track. He is developing into a speedy horse and will be a credit to the stable.

From Mr. Griffin's stable the reporter went over to the stalls used by Mike McManus for Mr. Seale's horses, and was shown some magnificent looking equines, most of them the get of Elmo. Engadine is a splendid specimen of the Elmo family, the pretty cream color which usually distinguish the Elmo stock being particularly marked in this case. Her first dam was by The Moor, and the second by imp. Hercules.

Silver Threads is a five-year-old who can show better than 2:40 as he is to-day, and with the necessary amount of work can decrease that time materially. He is by Elmo, his dam being a full sister to the dam of Overman, 2:19¼.

Atlas, another Elmo, is a beautiful type of that blood, standing 16 hands 3 inches, is a pretty sorrel and can show a 2:45 gait. His dam was Accident, a well known brood mare.

The b g Alfred S. is so well known that it is hardly necessary to say more than that he is looking in splendid fettle, and while his record is only 2:21, still he has shown a private trial lately in 2:16¼. Alfred S. is only six years old and is an improving horse; that he is speedy has been shown times without number, and beyond question he will reduce his record many seconds this year.

A full sister to Alfred S. next commanded attention, and drew out the admiration of a little knot of horsemen who were looking over the horses. She is an exact counterpart of her brother and promises equal speed.

Rex is an Anteeo colt, dam Accident, which as a four-year-old trotted a mile in 2:25¼, and with another year added to his age should beat that time in 1889. Sunflower and Ko Ko were the last of the stable to be looked at and they showed the same care had been bestowed on them as on the balance. The latter is an Elmo, dam Orphan Girl, by Black Hawk, and with her companion Sunflower should show a very fast mile double. Mr. McManus is one of the most prudent, careful and reliable of drivers, and he will have his string in fine form for the coming campaign.

Importation of Draught Horses.

The year 1888 will he remembered by everybody interested in the importation of draught horses as one of unusual activity and extensive trade to the importers of the United States. These stout, well built, muscular horses have included alike the heavy animals from Great Britain, from France, and from Belgium. There is no one breed that will please all alike, hence we have Percherons and French draught horses from France, Clydesdales from Scotland, the Shires from England, Belgian horses from Belgium and the coach horses from England and France.

The increased importations noticed are the outcome of a constantly growing demand for imported draught stallions. Everywhere the demand for grade draught horses is becoming an established feature of the horse trade. Not only are these required for street car purposes, for heavy delivery wagons, etc., in large cities, but our progressive farmers are employing horses for the heavy work on their farms that combine the several desirable qualities of size, weight, endurance and action.

Heretofore, our farmers, as a rule, have raised too many small, inferior horses, horses unequal to the heavier work of the farm, unattractive as carriage horses, and possessing small value when sent to the markets. The experience of the past ten or twelve years appears to indicate that the grades of the various draught horses of Europe, as raised in our own country, are just what are required. In any event there is at the present time a sufficient home demand for these grade draught horses to encourage their increased production.

The Northern Agriculturist calls attention to the fact that the improved stock breeders in England and France give their attention to breeding superior individuals, and let the color be what it will. In America many seek color first and let the individual be what it may. At the International Show at Brussels the grand gold medal stallion (best of any age or breed) was a dapple gray Belgian, and the gold medal mare was a white Boulonnaic; and at the show in France the whites and dapple grays won almost all the prizes, and constituted over three-fourths of the horses in the draught classes.

Items about the Turf.

It is not generally known that the turf in the United States gives employment directly to 50,000 persons, one-half of them with families; that indirectly it assists 50,000 more to a livelihood; that the thoroughbred stallions and brood mares on the great stock farms are valued at $6,000,000; that the sons and daughters of those stallions and brood mares earned more than $2,000,000 during the season just at an end; that the value of the stock in training for racing purposes is $7,000,000; that the capital invested in race tracks and the stables thereon or adjacent thereto is $6,000,000; that the stock farms embrace more than 140,000 acres of the finest land in the country, the money worth of which cannot be accurately estimated; that on these farms are costly dwellings, finely laid out walks, commodious stables and barns, and, in many instances, private race tracks; that the attendance at the race course last year numbered 3,500,000; that the yearling sales ran well up to a million dollars; that the rich prizes offered for the development of the horse has led to as high a price as $40,000 for a yearling; that such competition has sustained the value of the stock farms; that the available land in Missouri, Kansas, California, Kentucky, Tennessee, West Virginia, Pennsylvania, Maryland, New Jersey, and other States, is constantly being purchased for the establishment of stock farms, and that the improvement of the horse has gone on to such an extent that agents from European countries have been here to purchase horses for cavalry purposes. It is only a question of time when we will be able to supply the world with horses, and this good result will come about chiefly because of the incentive to breeding given by the rich and representative jockey clubs in offering great prizes for the development of speed and stamina.

The outside enterprises that are helped by the turf are many. The telegraph companies receive nearly a million a year for sending reports of jockey club meetings, and transacting other business in relation to the doings of horses. This gives employment to many expert telegraphers. The printing and advertising of the clubs, the printing of catalogues by the breeders throughout the country, the programmes, book records, and printed classification of horses, thoroughbred and otherwise, keeps 5,000 persons busy, and cost a round sum of money. The railroads employ special cars for the carrying of horses all over the country, and in addition carry more than 3,000,000 persons to the races during each year. Then there is the employment of farmers for selling produce to the owners of thousands of horses, and there are many other ways in which money is used to give work to residents of many communities.—"Black and Blue" in the "Mail and Express."

Friar Tuck and Greenback.

The interest manifested by the purchase of the above mentioned horses by Mr. Gebhard, has increased rather than diminished, now that it is known these royally bred stallions have arrived in California. The New York Spirit has the following account of the two:

Greenback is one of the grandest specimens of the blood horse that we have seen among the imported horses of the past fifteen years. He is thirteen years old, a whole colored brown, with broad, flat legs, great length and liberty, a fine spread of hips, and every evidence of great constitutional and animal vigor. About the head and neck he is much of the type of Stockwell, but bodily he is different, having more of that trim quality of the Leamingtons, only more substantial, straining probably to his grandsire, The Flying Dutchman. He is like an eel as he moves about with a quick, sinuous glide. He is a superbly coated horse, reflecting a purple sheen, which blazes in the sunlight, and no one would dream that he had so recently left the ship. Greenback's blood is as high as his conformation. He is a son of the French horse Dollar, who was by Flying Dutchman, dam Payment by Slave. Dollar's dam was the dam of Florin, the sire of Florentin, winner of the French Derby in 1866, and of Mantilla the champion French two-year-old of 1878. Dollar's merit as a sire is famous, as he got Salvator, St. Cyr, Perla, Almanza, Nethau, Fontainbleau, Salvanos, Torren, and Androcles. One of his daughters, Nellie James, produced Jack of Hearts, Jacobus, etc., in Mr. Belmont's stud. Salvator won the Grand Prix de Paris and French Derby in 1876, and Salvanos won the Cesarewitch in 1872 On the side of his dam Greenback is glorious. His dam was the Duke of Hamilton's great mare, Music, the best broodmare in Europe. She has foaled Ossian, Fiddler, Song, Songstress, Nina, Poetry, etc., Nina being one of the best two-year-olds of 1887, winning the Clearwell, Bretby and Homebred. As for Ossian, she won the St. Leger, while Fiddler beat Foxhall for the Alexandria Plate. Music is a daughter of Stockwell, from the invincible One Act, by Annandale; 3d dam Extravaganza, by Voltaire, etc., gives Greenback an infusion of Blacklock blood. Greenback was a really good race horse, winning the Sketchworth Stakes at Newmarket, as a two-year-old, and the Earl Spencer Plate at Northampton, as a three-year-old. The Peel Handicap, the Queen's Plate at Ayr, and the Caledonian Cup, at the same place, also fell to his share. He has got several winners, having sired Greenlight, Greenjacket, Greenshank, Greenwave, Greenhorn, etc. He is the only direct representative of Bay Middleton's male line in America, and will be a grand outcross for our native mares.

Friar Tuck is one of the most fashionably bred horses that has been imported. The fact that he is by Hermit, who for ten years has proved the best sire in England, should alone render him valuable, as Hermit has sired two winners of the Derby in Shotever and St. Blaise; two winners of the Oaks in Thebais and Lonely, and such eminent performers as St. Marguerite, Peter, Candlemas, St. Louis, Retreat, Charon, Queen Adelaide, St. Mirin, Clairvaux and Friar's Balsam. The Hermit sires are very fashionable at present in England. There are only three in this country, St. Blaise, Mr. Pickwick and Stylites.

Like all the Hermits, Friar Tuck was a very sound horse, and ran until six years old and won a great many races (see calendar). His breeding on his dam's side is very rich. His dam, Romping Girl, was a slashing race-mare, and ran third to those famous fillies Hippia and Achievement in the Oaks, of 1867, and as a four-year-old she won the Shrewsbury Cup. In the stud she foaled Abelard, Rampage, Lancaster, Merry Monk and Fair Barbarian (now in Mr. Belmont's stud in Kentucky). It will be noticed that Friar Tuck's fifth dam is the immortal Queen of Trumps, winner of the Oaks and St. Leger of 1835, and one of the greatest mares that ever lived. Millgreen, by Friar Tuck, was a winner last year. Friar Tuck's sister Flirt is the dam of Senator Hearst's filly Gorgo.

Not even Persepoles, Pocahontas and Mandane excepted, Queen Mary (l'Anson's) may be regarded as the most remarkable thoroughbred the world has ever produced, says a writer in the St. Louis "Republic." Thomas Taunton, one of the latest as well as greatest of English turf writers, in speaking of this wonderful animal, entirely ignores the impress she has made upon the American turf. Evidently he does not consider the magnitude and importance of racing interests in the States, or he is not aware that were the direct descendants of Queen Mary blotted from the American studbooks, that the number of strictly first-class American horses would perhaps be reduced by nearly one-half. It seems unaccountable that a man of Taunton's admitted accuracy and research, after assigning the old mare, very properly, too, a first rank among English celebrities, should entirely overlook her commanding position on this side. He gives great prominence to Haricot and Blink Bonnie, the distinguished daughters of Queen Mary, but with the merest mention dismisses Bonnie Scotland, her son, and greatest family representative in the United States, than whom the name of no horse is recorded more often in the annals of the turf. All this causes the belief that very few people fully realize the singular and coincidental importance of Queen Mary on both sides of the sea.

And yet it is safe to say that while great in England she is equally great in America. For at the same time that all England were applauding the Derby winner, Silvio, the great grandson of Queen Mary, the American turf were doing the same thing for her grandsons, Bramble, the great cup horse, and the little four-mile winner, Bushwhacker, on this side of the world. Certainly Queen Mary is equally to be honored in this country, unless we are willing to admit the superiority of Blink Bonnie, Blair Athol, Caller Ou and Silvio over our own great horses. Luke Blackburn, Hanover, Glidelia and the more modern luminary, Proctor Knott, all of whom trace briefly back to the Queen.

Many turfmen not yet in "the sere and yellow leaf," may recall the days when Queen Mary was a frolicsome filly of two years, and yet at this writing her descendants are legion, their names printed on hundreds of pages in the stud books. In both England and America at almost every sale of thoroughbreds the name of Queen Mary (l'Anson's) in a pedigree acts like magic in elevating prices. It is noticeable, too, that mares begotten by Bonnie Scotland or Glen Athol in any auction whatsomever are almost sure to fetch the highest prices.

Queen Mary was a bay in color, with a broad whitste ripe in her face. Her pictures show her to be swayback,ed potbellied and anything but beautiful. She started in but one race. This was at Chester, England. This race was won by the Princess Alice, who, on that day, would have sold readily for 1,000 guineas; while Queen Mary, who did not get a place, changed hands a few months afterwards, as a rank failure, for less than £100. Through this single purchase Mr. l'Anson became one of the three wealthiest trainers in the British Empire. Queen Mary became famous, while the Princess Alice is only known in the record that "she won the race in which Queen Mary ran." Singular irony of fate! Queen Mary's noted children are Haricot, Braxey, Broomielaw, Bonnie Belle, Blinkhoolie, Blink Bonnie, and last but not least to be mentioned, our own Bonnie Scotland. Blink Bonnie, we suppose, must be regarded as the greatest of the lot. As a racer, no doubt, she was, for she had transcendent merits and opportunities of which she made the fullest use. As a dam it would be impossible for her to outclass Bonnie Scotland as a sire. What her son Blair Athol has done for England, Bonnie Scotland has accomplished for the United States.

Blink Bonnie won the English Derby in 1857. Just seven years afterwards all England went wild over the popular Derby victory of her son, the beautiful Blair Athol, who, in the same year, also was first past the post in the great St. Leger. Silvio, the great-grandson of Queen Mary, won the Derby in 1877. And thus the renown of the old mare descends on down through the ages. In America the descendants of Queen Mary through Glen Athol and more especially Bonnie Scotland rank first in quantity and quality.

Bonnie Scotland's life reads like a romance. It is said, that when he was at Queen Mary's side, the pair were abandoned on the Scottish moors to die; and that but for the timely success of Haricot on the turf such would have undoubtedly been the fate of the American premier. In America, Bonnie Scotland's lines were for years cast in unpleasant and unprofitable places until he was wisely set by the late Gen. Harding at the head of Bel e Meade with the result familiar to all horsedom, and where he became the sire of more than a score of famous race horses including, besides those already mentioned, such celebrities as George Kinney, Aranza, Brambaletta, Bancroft and that popular horse, old Boot-Jack.

On Tracks.

There is probably no State in the Union in which so many horses are knocked out or get "legs" on them, as in California. As a rule the trainer gets all the blame, when in reality, in nine cases out of ten, the track is to blame. The prolonged summer or rainless months, the necessarily continued sprinkling (which does not sink an inch deep) and the unceasing tramping whilst in a moist condition, causes a hard crust to form immediately beneath the surface dirt, which, though softened by the rains in winter, becomes a dense crust again as soon as the sun shines long enough on it to allow of horses working. We believe it would be an excellent plan for track managers to plow one-half the width of their tracks early in the winter, and sow with rye and clover; plow this under when a foot or eighteen inches high, and the next winter do the same with the other half. Possibly our trainers would not knock out so many horses, and the development of a trotter would not be so risky and expensive a luxury.

Matt Storn and D. J. McCarty have visited Sacramento this week to look after their interests at the race track there. Both gentlemen report their horses in good condition, and although Mr. McCarty said there was nothing new to report, I can tell him that Sorrento has filled out wonderfully and grown considerably in size since last year. In fact, my correspondent there seems to think that the noble son of Joe Hooker will be either first or second for the American Derby, and I want to whisper to Matt Storn that his four-year-old Joe Hooker filly is going to be a speedier animal than Grover Cleveland, or appearances are very deceptive.

Assembly Bill No. 417.

INTRODUCED BY MR. CULVER, JANUARY 30, 1889.

Referred to Committee on Agriculture.

SECTION 1. That the California State Veterinary Medical Association, a duly incorporated organization, be and is hereby recognized as authority in all questions relating to veterinary science in this State.

Sec. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any person to practice veterinary medicine and surgery in this State, without having previously obtained a diploma from a college duly authorized to graduate students in veterinary medicine and surgery, or is a member in good standing of the California State Veterinary Medical Association sixty days after the passage of this Act, or who has passed a satisfactory examination before the Board of Examiners, as is hereinafter provided.

Sec. 3. This Board of Examiners, to be known as the State Veterinary Board, consisting of five duly qualified practitioners in veterinary medicine and surgery, is hereby created, whose duty it shall be to carry out the purposes and enforce the provisions of this Act. The members of said Board shall be appointed by the California State Veterinary Medical Association. The Board so appointed shall hold their office for four (4) years. Said Board shall be paid five dollars per day and all necessary expenses while actually engaged in the duties of their office at the meetings of said Board, which shall be held at least once every six months after the appointment of said Board, such meeting to be held alternately in San Francisco and Los Angeles. Such compensation to be paid out of the fees and penalties received under the provisions of this Act, and no part of the salary or other expenses of the Board shall ever be paid out of the State Treasury.

Sec. 4. Said Board of Examiners shall examine all diplomas as to their genuineness. Affidavit shall be made by the holder of a diploma that he is the person mentioned therein, said affidavit being sufficient guarantee that it is genuine. Each applicant not holding a diploma shall submit to a theoretical and practical examination before the Board; said examination to be written or oral, or both, and sufficiently strict to satisfy the Board that the applicant is competent to practice veterinary medicine and surgery. An examination fee of five dollars shall be paid to the Board by the holder of a diploma, and ten dollars by an applicant not holding a diploma, before examination. And in case of failure of approval, said fee shall be forfeited to the Board.

Sec. 5. All examinations of persons not graduates shall be made directly by the Board, and the certificates given by the Board shall authorize the possessor to practice veterinary medicine and surgery in the State of California. But said examination of ungraduated practitioners must take effect before the thirty-first day of December, 1889. After that date no certificate shall be granted except to persons presenting diplomas from legally chartered veterinary institutions.

Sec. 6. Upon the approval of the credentials or the examination of an applicant, said Board shall grant him a license to practice in this State, and shall receive thereof a fee of five dollars, said license to be signed by all the members of the Board.

Sec. 7. Every person qualified, as required by this Act, shall, upon receipt of his license to practice, have said license filed in the office of the Clerk of the county in which he resides. Any person removing to another county to practice shall file the license in like manner in the county to which he removes. The owner shall pay to the County Clerk the usual fees for filing. Any failure, neglect or refusal on the part of any person holding such license to file the same with the County Clerk as above directed, for a period of six months, shall forfeit his license; and no license when once forfeited shall be restored except on the payment to said Board the sum of twenty-five dollars as a penalty for such failure, neglect or refusal.

Sec. 8. Any person shall be regarded as practicing veterinary medicine and surgery within the meaning of this Act who shall profess publicly to be a veterinary surgeon, or appends to his name any initials or title implying qualifications to practice, or who prescribes for or treats sick or injured domestic animals for compensation, either directly or indirectly. But nothing in this act shall be construed to prohibit members of the medical profession from prescribing for domestic animals in cases of emergency, and collecting a fee therefor, nor to prohibit gratuitous service in cases of emergency. And this Act shall not apply to commissioned veterinary surgeons in the United States Army.

Sec. 9. Any itinerant vendor of any drug, nostrum, ointment, or appliance of any kind for the treatment of disease or injury of domestic animals, or who shall by writing or printing, or any other method, publicly profess to cure or treat disease, injury or deformity of domestic animals by any drug, nostrum, manipulation or other expedient, shall pay a license of one hundred dollars a month to the State.

Sec. 10. Any person practicing veterinary medicine or surgery in this State, contrary to the provisions of this Act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

Points on Breeding.

Mr. William Day, in his recently published book, "The Horse; how to breed and rear him," has the following: "Don't breed from bad tempered animals of either sex, or from those afflicted with hereditary diseases, roaring in particular! No mare should, under any circumstances, be put to an inferior sire, and little mares are the best to breed from, provided they have substance, stand well on their legs, and have good hocks and knees. Little stallions, with mares suited to them, get good stock and much better than most large horses. Relationship to good performers is even of greater importance than extraordinary excellence in the mare herself; and both sire and dam should stand well on their legs. Consider carefully the external form of the mare, the relation of her different parts to each other, her capabilities, so far as known, and above all, her breeding and that of her ancestors; then, select a stallion on the same careful system, and you may expect, and most likely would have, a foal possessing in many ways the desirable qualities of its parents, and, perhaps, surpassing them in speed and endurance."

Now then, who wants to buy the two fastest short distance horses in the State? Dave Winders writes me from Stockton that Cyclone and Lida Ferguson are in the market, and can be bought cheap. Hazlitt or Babb should buy them.

Rarus and Jimmy.

The following is from John Splan's book, "Life With the Trotters," to be issued this month: But to return to Rarus and his sale. After leaving the horse in the stable Mr. Conklin, Mr. Simmons, Mr. David Bonner and myself adjourned to the Hoffman House, where the money was paid over to Mr. Conklin. I told Mr. David Bonner that I had left all of Rarus' effects, wagons, etc., at the stable with him, with the exception of one pair of blankets that I had promised Mr. Conklin, and wished he would say to Mr. Robert Bonner that he was entitled to them all, but that if he did not wish to keep them he could send me word and I would come and take them away. The next day I received a note from Mr. Bobert Bonner asking me to call at his office, which I did. He thanked me for my attention in sending him Rarus' traps, told me he would be glad to keep them, and insisted on giving me an order to duplicate them new from a shop at his expense. This I declined to accept, for the reason that I believed any man who had given $36,000 for a horse was entitled to his belongings, and so said. Mr. Bonner told me that he should send Rarus to his farm in a day or two, and invited me up there to see Rarus in his new home. I accepted the invitation, and the pleasing remembrance of that day, and the valuable hints that I received in the way of training horses are still fresh in my mind. I there took my last ride behind Rarus, driving him a mile in 2:16½ over Mr. Bonner's track, and left him with feelings of regret.

I now come to what might be termed the personal history of Rarus, and while it seems to me that his career in my hands had been at the least fairly successful, I feel like taking but a small part of the credit for his success to myself. First and foremost, he was a grand horse when he came into my hands, and his owner, Mr. Conklin, was a man that I think the owner of any trotting-horse could well pattern after. In the first place he had what people would call a good deal of horse sense. In the second place, when he gave his horse to me to drive his contract extended for four months. At the end of that time he renewed his contract with me, and said to me, "Splan, as long as I own Rarus he is your horse to do with in every way, shape or manner as you see fit. No one shall ever criticise you or your actions to me. I will do nothing in connection with the horse without your free will and consent. Take your time, and do what you can with him, whether it be in one, two, three or four years. The greatest pleasure that I could have with that horse would be to see him beat the best record." When he told me that I knew and believed that he meant exactly what he said. Few people imagine how the trainers of horses are annoyed by outsiders running to owners and criticising the actions of the drivers. It is an easy matter for a gentleman who never drove a trotter a step in his life, and who never did more than to sit up in the grand-stand in a shady place, to say to the owner of a horse how his driver should handle him, but if that same critic were asked to drive in a race he would have to be tied in the sulky in order to insure his appearance when the horse came under the wire. If I might be permitted here to give a little advice to owners, it would be. If you get a trotter, pick out the man you think is the best driver and trainer in the world, give him your horse, and treat him as Mr. Conklin did me, and if you do not get that man's best efforts I will be more mistaken than I have been in horse-racing matters in a long while.

In disposition Rarus was a brave horse, not much inclined to be affectionate, but at the same time not a vicious animal. I never saw any one that he seemed very fond of except Mr. Conklin, Dave and the dog Jimmy, without some mention of whom no history of Rarus would be complete. This dog was a Scotch terrier that was presented to me in Cleveland when he was a youngster about two months old. I took him to the track and gave him to Dave, who advised that he be put in Rarus' stable. I cautioned Dave about the pup, as I had seen Rarus make the fur fly from one or two dogs, and told him that he might not have any dog unless he put him in a safe place. In a few days I asked about him, and he told me that Rarus and the dog had got to be great friends. That appeared rather strange to me, while I had always treated Rarus very kindly he was never disposed to make friends with me. In appearance this dog was a small, wiry-haired terrier weighing about fifteen pounds, and possessed of almost human intelligence. The admiration and love that this dog and the horse had for each other equaled anything that I have ever seen in the human family. Not only were they extremely fond of each other, but they showed their affection plainly as did ever a man for a woman. We never took any pains to teach the dog anything about the horse. Everything he knew came to him by his own patience. From the time I took him to the stable a pup until I sold Rarus they were never separated an hour. We once left the dog in the stall while we took the horse to the blacksmith shop, and when we came back we found he had made havoc with everything there was in there, in trying to get out, while the horse during the entire journey was uneasy, restless, and in general acted as bad as the dog did. Dave remarked that he thought we had better keep the horse and dog together after that. When Rarus went to the track to work or trot the dog would follow Dave around and sit by the gate at his side, watching Rarus with as much interest as Dave did. When the horse returned to the stable after a heat and was unchecked the dog would walk up and climb up on his forward legs and kiss him, the horse always bending his head down to receive his caress. In the stable, after work was over, Jim and the horse would often frolic like two boys. If the horse laid down Jim would climb on his back, and in that way learned to ride him, and whenever I led Rarus out to show him to the public Jim invariably knew what it meant, and enhanced the value of the performance by the manner in which he would get on the horse's back. On these occasions the horse was shown to halter, and Jimmy, who had learned to distinguish such events from those in which the sulky was used, would follow Barney and Rarus out on the quarter stretch, and then, when the halt was made in front of the grand-stand Barney would stoop down, and in a flash Jimmy would leap on the horse's back, and there he would stand, his head high in the air and his tail out stiff, barking furiously at the people. He seemed to know that he was as much a part of the show as the horses, and apparently took great delight in attracting attention to himself. I had several tempting offers for Jim in the way of cash, but such a thing as parting with him never entered my mind. When Rarus was sold to Mr. Bonner Jimmy was not included in the bill of sale, but I felt that Rarus belonged to Jimmy and Jimmy to Rarus. After they both became the property of Mr. Bonner the affection of the dog and the horse for each other never abated, and this was well illustrated on one occasion. In Mr. Bonner's down-town stable was a bull terrier, a rather savage fellow, who had the run of the place and naturally wanted to be boss. Jimmy, who was brave to a fault, attacked the bull terrier one day, and the result was that he was soon knocked out. When his yelps reached Rarus, whose stall was adjacent, the old horse made a break for the center of the barn, and had he not been restrained would have made short work of the bull dog. Mr. Bonner was much impressed with this incident, and afterward related it to the writer as evidence of how strong the bond of affection between these two animals was.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN: Mr. Rose seems to have inferred from a previous commnication of mine that I was opposed to a meeting for the purpose of arranging circuit dates, On the contrary, in the interest of the stock and fruit exhibitors generally, as well as of the horsemen, I should favor and encourage the holding of such meeting, provided the State Fair management agreed to respect the interests and desires of other districts beside their own, and to be governed accordingly in resetting their dates, if necessary, for the general benefit of the circuit.

For Mr. Shippee (or his successor, Mr. Green) to call a meeting of district representatives to arrange the circuit, and upon their assembling to inform them (as was done last year) "Gentlemen, our dates have been selected, you may get in front of or behind us, but, in order that you may, as far as practicable, avoid stepping on each others toes (ours are safe), we have been pleased to call you together at a 'great deal of expense,' please to arrange your circuit, gentlemen, but don't forget that our dates have been selected and will not be changed, gentlemen", were, as I said in my last, to render futile the purposes of the proposed meeting.

No District Fair, outside of such large places as Stockton, Oakland and Los Angeles could possibly afford to hang up the large purses that the extra quality, speed, and value of our trotting and running horses now call for, if required to succeed Sacramento in its dates.

At the two week's meeting there, or, at most, at the fair next following, pretty much every horse would be accurately sized up, and, as a consequence, the betting at the succeeding fairs would not amount to a hill of beans.

The reason I have given above does not apply to the betting at Sacramento, because the followers of the "regular" circuit are there met by a large number of horses (more or less "unknown" quantities) that come from Yolo, Marysville, Grass Valley, Fresno, Los Angeles, San Joaquin, and other districts.

Now if the Sacramento Fair opens on Sept. 9th, and is preceded by all of the "old" circuit fairs (Stockton, Los Angles, Oakland, Petaluma, Santa Rosa, Napa and San Jose), some one of these would require to open its gates on July 22nd, a date much too early to have the majority of our horses, and especially our studs, in shape for a "bruising' race, and who cares to see, or much less to hang up, a big purse for any other? And what breeder would wish to risk a valuable stallion in a "bruising" race at so early a date after the lamentable experience in stallion races early last season?

Again, I repeat, if the State Fair authorities, who have already fixed their dates, will agree to alter the same, if necessary to the interests of the whole circuit, I believe much benefit might be accomplished by holding the proposed meeting. If they will not do so then I would suggest that a meeting of the San Diego, Los Angles, Santa Clara, Oakland, Marin and Sonoma, Santa Rosa, San Joaquin and Napa associations be called for conference at San Francisco, to take such action as may best subserve their interests and those of their patrons. A note from Mr. Rose or Sec. De Camp fixing the date, hour and place would undoubtedly be sufficient to insure a representative meeting.

The pacing stakes for two and three-year-olds not having received enough entries to fill, were declared off by the Executive Committee.

The Estate of Jas. Samuels has sold to Wilfred Page of Penn's Grove a bay two-year-old filly by Anteeo 2:16½, dam Lena H. by Grey McClellan, (sire of Blanche 2:25½), g d by Geo. M. Patchen, Jr. By the way, "Wallace's Year Book" gives Grey McClellan's breeding and history as "not recorded." For his information we would state that Grey McClellan was by Gen. McClellan 144, ont of Nell (grandam of Reliance 2:22½, and Magdallah 2:23½), by Green Mountain Morgan, and was bred by Seneca Daniels, Lakeville, Sonoma County.

The King of Spain hath many Races, but his Best is at Cordoba in Andalozia, where he hath above Three Hundred Mares and Colts, as my Lord Cottington told me; and, besides those of his Majesty, there are other most Excellent Races, not only of Noblemen, but also of Private Gentlemen.

For the Prices, the Earl of Claringdon, now Lord Chancellor of England, told Me, That when he was Embassador in Spain, Sir Benjamin Wright, a Merchant there that Loves Horses, sold a Couple of Little Spanish Horses for a Great Price: And he says (and many others Confirm it for a great Truth) That Three Hundred, and Four Hundred Pistols for a Horse, is a common Price and Rate, at Madrid; And the Marquess of Seralvo told me, That a Spanish Horse, called Il Bravo, sent to the Arch-Duke Leopold, his Master, was held Worth as much as a Mannor of a Thousand Crowns a Year, and that he hath known Horses at Seven Hundred, Eight Hundred, and a Thousand Pistols.

A Gentleman told me, that he knew a Cavalier in Spain, who offered another Three Hundred Pistols, but to let him Ride his Horse one Afternoon; and the Owner had reason to Refuse it: for it was to go to the Juego de Toros, where he might have been Killed: many of the Finest Horses in the World being Killed at that Sport, which is the greatest Pity that can be.

You see that a Spanish Horse is Dear Ware; and then Reckon his Journey from Andalozia to Bilbo, or St. Sebastien, which is the next Port for England, and is Four Hundred Miles at least; and a Horse cannot Travel above Ten Miles a day with your Groom, and your Farrier at least, besides the Casualty of Lameness, Sickness, and Death; so that if he come Safe to you, yet he will be a very Dear Horse, I assure you: And These are great Truths of the Spanish Horse.

Of the BARB.

The Barb is next to the Spanish Horse for Wisdom, but not near so wise, and that makes him much Easier to be Drest: Besides, he is of a Gentle Nature, Docil, Nervous, and Light.

He is as Fine a Horse as can be, but somewhat Slender, and a little Lady-like; and is so Lazy and Negligent in his Walk, as he will Stumble in a Bowling-Green; he Trots like a Cow, and Gallops Low, and no Action in any of those Actions: But commonly he is Sinewy, and Nervous, and hath a clean Strength, is excellently Winded, and good at Length, to Endure great Travel; and very Apt to Learn, and Easy to be Dress, being (for the most part) of a good Disposition, excellent Apprehension, Judgment, and Memory; and when he is Searcht, and Wakened, no Horse in the World goes Better in the Mannage, in all Ayres whatsoever, and Rarely upon the Ground in all Kinds.

The Mountain-Barbs, they say, are the Best; I believe they are the Largest, but, for my part, I rather desire a Midling Horse, or a Less Horse, which are Cheap enough in Barbery, as I have been Informed, both by many Gentlemen, and many Merchants; for they say, that in Barbery you may Buy a very Fine Barb for Twenty, Twenty-Five or Thirty Pounds at the most: but then your Journey is somewhat Great; not by Sea; for, from Tunis, to Marselles in France, is no great Voyage; but from Marselles to Calais by Land, you go all the Length of France, and at Calais they are Shipt for England.

You must have an excellent Esquier, a Farrier, and one Groom, and Hire other Grooms as you Go; but take heed, That those Mean Rogues Run not Away with some of your Horses; and because there is no Trusting of them, your English Farrier, and your English Groom, must always Lie in the Stable, and none of those Fellows; but the Gentleman of your horse, which ought to be a Good Horse-man, must order that Carefully.

If you would go another Way to work, and a Shorter Voyage, then send into Languedoc, and Provence, where many Gentlemen Buy Barbs of two, three, and four Years old at Marselles, and Keep them two or three Years, and then Sell them; which Barbs you may Buy for Forty or Fifty Pistols a Piece, and as Fine Horses as can be: But he whom you Send, must be very Skilful to chuse well, and to take heed that They be Right Barbs; For I have Heard, that many in those Countries, about Marselles, when many Barbs come out of Barbery, thrust in Colts of their own Breed amongst them for Barbs, and so sell them.

When I was at Paris, there came Twenty-Five Barbs (as they said) nothing but Skin and Bones, and they were Sold for Twenty-Five Pistols a Horse: My Lord Viscount Mountague bought Nine, as I Remember; for I was with him, and helpt to chuse some for him, and one of them did Win Many Matches: But truly, if I had had a Million, I would not have Bought one of them, for they were very Ordinary Horses; Nor do I think they were Right Barbs, neither by their Shape, nor Price, but Bred in some Islands thereabouts; for, if a Man be at Great Charges, I would either have an Extraordinary Horse, or None.

I had lately a Letter from a Horse-man at Paris, a French-Man, that gives me Intelligence of Horses, That a Merchant at Paris had two Barbs, the Finest that ever he saw, Six Years old a piece, but not Drest at all, and held them at Two Hundred Pistols a piece: By which, you may see, that Right Barbs, and Fine ones, are very Dear, as all Good Things are.

The Barb is not so fit a Horse for a Stallion for the Mannage, as for Running-Horses; for he Gets Long and Loose Horses, therefore do not Breed of him for the Mannage, except he be a Short Horse from the Head to the Croup, strong Ramase, and Racoursy, and of a Superfluity of Spirit, which few Barbs have; and therefore Breed of a Spanish Horse, with Choice English Mares; and if you have a Delicate well-chasen Dutch Mare or two, that makes an excellent Composition for the Mannage.

I am of Opinion, and Believe, that there never came out of Barbery, The best Horses that Country affords; not but that they may be had: But the Case is this; Those that bring Barbs out of Barbery, are either French Horse-Coursers that Trade in Barbery, or Merchants.

To begin with the Horse-Coursers, They always Buy those Horses that are Cheapest for their Advantage: For if they Bought of Great Prices, it would not quit Cost, and so they Buy the Worst, and Meanest, of Barbs: And so for the Merchants, They want Skill; Besides, they will Buy the Cheapest too, for their Advantage, because they know not Well, how to put off Horses of Price; and so they Buy but the Worst and Meanest of Barbs; which makes me Believe absolutely, that the Best Barbs do not come Over: For, did not I see daily at Antwerp the Horse-Coursers of Brabant and Flanders, that go into England every Year to Buy Horses, that they bring Over the Meanest and Worst Horses and Geldings that are in the Kingdom, and merely to Buy at Easy Rates, that they may put them Off with Advantage? For, if they should Buy in England Horses of One Hundred, One Hundred and Fifty, and Two Hundred Pounds a Horse, which Price hath been Given both at Malton and Pankrich Fayres, those Great Prices would not go off there, where Money is so Scarce; and so they would be Undone; and therefore they Buy of Small Prices.

Of The ENGLISH HORSE.

The English Horse is Less Wise than the Barb, Fearful and Skittish, for the most part; and Dogged and Rebellious to the Mannage, and not commonly so Apt to Learn: But those they call English Horses, are so Compounded of Horses of all Countries, that they always Participate something of their Sires; and so, that may somewhat alter the Case.

Certainly English Horses are the Best Horses in the whole World for All Uses whatsoever, from the Cart to the Mannage, and some are as Beautiful Horses as can be anywhere, for they are Bred out of all the Horses of all Nations: But if you would Buy for the Mannage at Fairs, you must go to Rowel Fair, Harborow Fair, and Melton Fair, to Northampton and Leicester-shire; but Northampton, they say, is the Best.

You must Buy such Horses as they Sell, for the Cart and Coach, which are the best for the Mannage: Do not think to Buy Delicate Shapt Horses, like the Spanish Horse, Barb, or Turk; but they are Handsomer Horses than commonly Dutch Horses are; Chuse a Short trust Horse, with Good Feet and Legs, full of Spirit and Action, and Lively; and if he Leap of himself, so much the Better. If your Horse-man hath Skill to Buy you such, they cannot do Amiss for the Mannage, and will prove most Admirable Horses, both in all Ayres, and upon the Ground, but I would not Breed of them by no means.

At Molten Fair, for the most part, they are young Stone-Horses, and some Geldings, but fitter for the Padd, and Hunting, than for the Mannage; Rippon Fair is but the Remnant of Molten Fair, and commonly but Geldings and Nags; those Fairs are in York-shire; Lenton Fair is in Nottingham-shire, and is a great Fair of all Sorts of Horses, but especially Geldings and Nags, Fitter for the Padd, and Galloping, than for the Mannage; you may also find some Stone-Horses there.

In Stafforn-shire there is a great Fair at Pankridge; but it is, for the most part, of Colts, and Young Horses, though sometimes (by chance) there are also others. The other Fairs in the Northern Parts, which are many, are not Worth naming.

I am very Ignorant of the West Country, where my Lord Paulett's Ancestors had a good Breed of Horses; and by Chance, now and then my Lord of Pembroke did Breed, but I never heard of any Rare Horses of his Race.

In Worcester-shire, and in the Vale of Esam, there is good Strong Cart-Horses; in Cornwall there is good Nags, and in Wales excellent good Ones; but in Scotland the Gallawayes are the Best Nags of them all.

There were, afore the Wars, many good Races in England, but they are all now Ruined; and the many new Breeders of Horses come up presently after the Wars, are (I doubt) none of the Best; for, I believe, their stallions were not very Pure, because the men that did Govern in Those Days, were not so Curious as the Great Lords, and Great Gentry were Heretofore, neither would they be at the Cost; and besides, they have not Knowledge of Horses as in other Countries: For, though Every man Pretends to it, yet, I assure you, there are very Few that Know Horses, as I have heard the KING say: Since whose RESTAURATION, the Probability of getting Good Breeds again, is very Great.

For English Mares, there are None like them in the World to Breed on; but then you must Chuse them fit for such Horses as you would Breed; As for Example, If you would Breed for the Mannage, the Mares must have Fine Forehands, but not too Long Necks; Fine Heads, and well Hung On; and their Necks rightly Turn'd; Broad Brests, Good Eyes; and Great Bodies, that the Foals may have the more Room to Lay in. They must have Good Hoofs, short and bending Pasterns, and are to be Short from the Head to the Croup, and Stuffy. This Shape fits the Mannage Best; and if your Mares be thus Chosen, it makes no matter what Color they are of, nor what Marks they have, nor what Tails and Manes, so they be full of Strength, and a superfluity of Spirit, and not above Six or Seven Years Old. But I must Tell you, That if you had Two or Three fine Dutch Mares, Shaped as I formerly told you, it Makes a fine Composition with a Spanish Horse for the Mannage, and a Spanish Horse with such English Mares as I have Told you Now, are not only for the Mannage, but in a manner for all Uses.

If you would have Mares to Breed Running-Horses of, then they must be Shaped thus; As Light as possible, Large and Long, but well Shaped; a Short Back, but Long Sides, and a little Long-Legged; their Breast as Narrow as may be, for so they will Gallop the Lighter and Nimbler, and Run the Faster; for the Lighter and Thinner you Breed for Galloping is the Better. Your Stallion, by any means, must be a Barb, and somewhat of the Shape that I have Described the Mares to be of: For a Barb that is a Jade, will Get a better Running-Horse, than the Best Running-Horse in England: As Sir John Fennick told me, who had more Experience of Running-Horses than any Man in England; for he had more Rare Running-Horses than all England besides; and the most part of all the Famous Running-Horses in England that Ran one Against another, were of his Race and Breed.

Some Commend the Turk very much for a Stallion to Breed Running-Horses; but they are so Scarce, and Rare, that I can give no Judgment of them: And therefore I Advise you to the Barb, which, I believe, is much the Better Horse to Breed Running-Horses.

Horses for the East.

The car load of horses which started on its long journey Saturday last was a notable collection. There were twelve in all, every stall in the car having an occupant. Anteeo, Antevolo, Arab and Norval being the "aged division, Sultan S. by Sultan from a sister to A. Rose, four years old, a colt by Kentucky Prince from a mare by McClellan, three years old, a two-year-old filly by Anteeo, an own sister to the fast colt Redwood, Leon three years old, by Electioneer, from Lina R, by Don Victor, a brown yearling by Norval, a bay filly by Woodnut, and Fortuna by Florida, three years old.

As has been heretofore stated, Anteeo goes to Lexington, Kentucky, where he will make the season, Antevolo to Robert Steele of Philadelphia, Arab has been purchased by a gentleman in Boston, and Leon was bought for a breeder in Natick, Mass. A thoroughbred by Red Boy from Lady Prewitt completed the dozen.

Mr. J. D. McCarty has purchased from the Rancho Del Paso, the thoroughbred Wagram, by Virgil—Crownlet. Wagram only started once last year, as a three-year-old, and then in very ordinary company, Kalidoscope beating him. The price is not stated.

Veterinary.

The bill to regulate the practice of veterinary medicine and surgery, now before the Legislature, will, should it become a law, be of great service to the profession in California. And also to horse owners, and a boon to the poor animals which are made to suffer acute torments under the hands of men who have no knowledge of the business they profess to understand, and sense in like measure with their acquirments.

At the best, incapable men will hang out their signs as "horse doctors," but with this law in force the ranks will be so diminished that competent practitioners will find a reasonable compensation for their time, and the long course of study necessary to fit them for their profession.

The bill on the whole is good, the only section we would change is that which imposes a license of $100 a month on itinerant vendors of horse medicines.

There are some preparations which are of service, and we find that it is very handy to have "lotions" on hand with which to treat slight ailments. Why it should be any worse to sell these from a peddling wagon than from the shelves of a store is not easily understood, or that one form should be placed under absolute restriction while another is legal without extra taxation, is not apparent.

Taken as a whole, however, great good will follow the passage of the bill, and we sincerely hope that it will become a law during this session of the Legislature.

A copy of the Act will be found on another page.

Queer Ideas.

Some days before the carload of horses alluded to elsewhere were to start on their journey, the man who was in charge gave directions in regard to Antevolo which were an exemplification of the difficulty there is in overcoming old notions. He told the man who has taken care of him from colthood, or rather babyhood, that he must give him a big bran mash every night, and plenty of green feed. He was informed that he never eat a mash in his life, and with the exception of some green sweet corn blades when these could be obtained, an occasional apple or piece of a carrot, his food was confined to the best hay and oats that could be purchased, the preference being for hay made from wheat. He was never sick an hour in his life, never had a cough which could be called indicative of a cold, and though never having worn a blanket, his coat had the luster of vigorous health in the coldest time of a California winter. His bowels were never out of order, and the faeces such as denoted that his digestive organs were always working in the best manner. As there was not a cupfull of bran in the stable, the order for "hot mashes" could not be carried out, and had we been present, the opportunity would have been taken to inquire the reasons which governed him in his request.

A bran mash each night for three consecutive nights would have been very apt to cause laxity of the bowels, the excitement attending on his first railway journey for nearly three years likely to change looseness into purging, and as constipation is nearly sure to follow the clearing of the stomach and intestines, when caused by the irritation (mechanical action) of the sharp, silicious covering of wheat kernels, by the time Chicago was reached fever would have stood a good show to supervene.

We have discarded the use of mashes entirely, and for many years have depended on other methods of loosening the bowels. Prairie hay, especially that cut from the hills and rolling lands, has a tendency to constipate, and even the cultivated grasses of the East are not so effective in regulating the excrements as the kind used in California. Wheat, cut at the right time and cured properly, is our favorite forage for horses, either when in training or for broodmares and colts. The latter may be fed alfalfa hay, with favorable results,—at least the limited trial we have given it has led to a belief in its efficacy.

In all the years we have owned horses, our past experience in California has given still greater confidence in dispensing with mashes, and for that matter with many other things formerly used. There has been less sickness and fewer deaths in the past fifteen years among our stock than ever before; in fact, nearly full immunity from diseases which prevailed under different treatment.

Dates Claimed.

The Fresno Fair Ground claim April 16, 17, 18 and 19, 1889 for Spring meeting, when trotting, pacing, and running races will be given, and liberal premiums offered.

The Associated Press sent the following report anent the Latonia Stake races, entries for which have just closed: All the Kentucky, Tennessee, Missouri, Illinois and other Western and Southern stables are represented. From California large entries came from "Lucky" Baldwin, who has always raced at Latonia, and from Senator Hearst, D. J. McCarty & Brothers, and William Murray, who are new patrons.

Grim's Gossip.

Dr. J. A. McNear, of Petaluma, had a valuable colt killed lately by the cars running over him.

An offer of $15,000 was recently refused for a yearling, by Electioneer, dam Miss Russell.

The N. Y. Sporting World has opened up a free employment bureau for lads who desire to sport silk.

The Los Angeles Tribune speaks of "Stove-pipe Dan." Oh fie, Dagworth, Mr. McCarty, and it please you.

The celebrated pacing mare Irma has been sent to the San Mateo Stock Farm, and will be bred to Guy Wilkes.

Casey Winchell, in addition to looking after horses for Theodore Winters, at Washoe, is attending school there.

The seven horses under the charge of Cy Holloway at Sacramento are all doing well and a credit to their trainer.

Charles Kingsley, the bookmaker, is reported to have offered to bet $100 against $1,000 that Sunol will make a three-year-old record of 2:10.

Dan Dennison has a fine looking lot of horses in training at Sacramento, and Archie Stevenson's stable is also looking well.

I saw Mr. W. M. Balfe lately, taking a spin behind his neat trotter Baby. From his gait Baby looks as though he could beat 2:30 easily:

Have you heard the latest on dit from Eureka? It is simply this, Dr. Gross' Grey Mare can show a 2:10 gait, so says the doctor.

C. H. Corey, of San Jose, owner of Almont Patchen, was in San Francisco on Tuesday talking horse to his many friends and acquaintances.

Mr. A. J. Cassatt reports the Bard as being in the pink of condition again. Such being the case he will probably start for the Brooklyn Handicap.

The old reliable Frank Depoyster has four horses under his supervision at the capitol city. Moses B., is the principle one and is in supurb condition.

Albert Cooper, late trainer for J. B. Haggin, has transfered his services to W. L. Pritchard's stable, and is looking after Cannie Scot, Louis P. and some good two-year-olds.

Mr. A. McFayden, of Santa Rosa, has sold to J. W. Knox, of Kentucky, a two-year-old Anteeo filly, a full sister to Redwood. The price paid was said to be $2,000.

Count Valensin has sold for $1,500 the two-year-old colt Tom V. by Sidney, dam Nettie Lambert by John Nelson. Nettie Lambert is the dam of Valensin, record 2:22. The colt was bought by W. Kerron, of Porland, Ore.

Mr. George A. Singerly, owner of Prince Wilkes, is eager to make a match race against Stamboul. He is even willing to come to California if Stamboul should not be sent East.

W. L. Appleby is authority for the statement that the Santa Rosa track is in better condition than any he has seen this winter. That speaks well for Superintendent Sanborn.

W. M. Murray has twelve or fourteen horses in training at Sacramento, the best one being Robin Hood by Flood, dam Robin Girl. This colt is entered in several Eastern stakes.

An exchange says that Joseph Cairn Simpson of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN has sold his celebrated stallion "Dr. Erdman" to Mr. Antevolo of Philadelphia for $18,000.

The Los Angeles Racing Association offers a purse of $500, for a free for all pacing race, with the hope that Adonis, Yolo Maid, Gold Leaf and Belmont Boy will enter against Johnson.

At the Santa Rosa track Mr. March is training the roan mare Jessie R., by Whippleton, dam Jessie Fremont. She shows a fine turn of speed and will no doubt make quite a trotter.

A trotting race, best two in three, for $20 a side, was determined at the Bay District Course last Saturday. Ensinal won easily in 2:55 and 2:47¼, Sorrel Ben being no match for her.

Mr. John Trestail of Melbourne, Australia, has sold to Mr. O'Shea of Redding, the imported Clydesdale stallion Fashion of the Day, by Earl of Barfold, dam Damsel by Comptroller. The price was $1500.

The Duke of Westminster has a dozen yearlings, the get of Bend Or, and in remembrance of the high and mighty deeds of Ormonde and Ossery, has given each a name commencing with the letter O.

Mr. Marvin is driving a yearling at Palo Alto which he thinks will break Norlaine's record of 2:31½. She is by Electioneer, and gives promise of being able to show 2:25 before the season is over.

Spokane Falls will have two race meetings this year, the first commencing on July 4th and extending three days. The second one begins on September 23d and will last five days. $10,000 in purses will be offered.

R. B. James has leased from Mr. Saxe his fine trotting stallion Prince Mambrino and shipped him to Gilroy. This gentleman has rented a fine farm within four miles of Gilroy, and will start a breeding farm second to none in the State.

Statistics compiled show that of the 399 stakes run for on the American turf last year 202 were won by horses bred in Kentucky. Illinois comes ninth on the list, colts and fillies bred in that State having won nine of those important events.

Now that there is going to be a match race at the track on Washington's birthday, how would it do for Mr. Hinchman to offer a purse for the pacers, Little Hope, Mink, Racket, Prussian Boy, and Damiana. It would be hard work to guess the winner.

The Coney Island Jockey Club's Executive Committee has changed the date of Suburban day from Saturday, June 15th, the first day of the meeting, to Tuesday the 18th, the second day. The change was made because Saturday, being a half-holiday, the attendance would undoubtedly be large without the big event, and will increase the numbers greatly for Tuesday, as no one will want to miss the now famous contest.

Milton Young of the McGrathianna Stock Farm, has bought the black horse Pontiac, from the Dwyer Brothers, Brooklyn, for $6,000. He will be placed in the stud at Mr. Young's farm during the coming season.

While the McCarty Brothers were looking over their horses at Sacramento the other day, Mr. Buchanan the trainer, sent one of the two-year-olds three-eighths of a mile in 38 seconds, and that with 128 pounds up. Pretty good so early in the season.

There seems to be a growing demand for straight tracks, says the N. Y. Tribune, but it certainly does not come from the public. It isn't a straight track that the American people are clamoring for; it is straight racing. Give us less conservatism and more backbone in judges' stands.

Cracksman has run his last race at Guttenburg, he has been taken to Gravesend for a much needed rest, prepatory to putting him in shape for the coming season's work. His owners have been offered $3,500 by two parties for him, and there was also a bid of $5,000, but they are asking $6,000 for him.

While Fred Jones and Charles Paugh were speeding a colt last Saturday, says the San Jose Mercury, a wheel of the sulky broke and spilled the occupants out, injuring Jones' hip and Paugh's hand and wrist badly. The colt was fortunately stopped before further injury was sustained.

The following entries have been made to the colt stakes offered by the Monterey District Association: J. B. Iverson names Mambrita and Trilling, W. J. Hill, Adrianette; Wm. Vanderhurst, Salinas Maid; Wm. Longwood, Kitty; B. V. Sargent, Sleepy David; Z. Herbert, Black Bart and Junior; J. E. Graves, Rattlesnake Dick.

A rumor comes from Australia that Harry J. Agnew, well and favorably known in San Francisco, had a commissioner trying to buy Dunlop, the winner of the Melbourne Cup in 1887, who ran the two miles in 3:28½, but he could not succeed in the undertaking, as the owner had leased the stallion for five years, to an Australian party.

C. W. Aby has made the reporters back East believe that there is a diamond mine in front of his stable door in Lake County. Capt. Bellairs of the St. Louis "Republic," Abercrombie of the "Horseman," and Charley Sass of the "Sporting World," are talking about visiting the Gebhard ranch to test Aby's veracity.

D. J. Murphy has leased to a party of San Jose and Milpitas gentlemen, a tract of land on the Moreland Stock Farm, which they will convert into a first class half mile track, with all the necessary buildings, stalls, stud, etc. It will be used principally for training purposes, but occassionally a meeting will be given.

Mr. J. C. Simpson, editor of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, has purchased three Antevolo colts from C. R. Lewis. There is a yearling, a two-year old, and a three-year-old, and all have the same dam, she by Winthrop, second dam by Chieftain. The g d was the dam of Mount Vernon, whose record is 2:21.

At the breeding farm of A. L. Richards, near Grayson, Stanislaus County, there are thirty-five Elector colts, all in good condition, and many of them exact counterparts of the sire. There are five of them that can beat 2:35, and at least a couple ready to enter '30 list. Elector is one of Electioneer's very best sons.

A few weeks ago I published an interview with E. J. Baldwin, wherein he stated that Eastern horses were favored in handicaps, in comparison with Western horses. Since then interviews with prominent horsemen, lead me to believe that such is really the case, and I now have a list of four Eastern turfmen who are favored in the weights, by the handicapers.

Many of the fun-loving sports of Butchertown were attracted to the Bay District Course, last Saturday, to see a race for $50 a side, between Richard Eagan's Old Sport and W. C. Erban's b c Concord. The track not being considered in good order, the match was postponed until Washington's birthday, and the stakes increased to $200 a side.

Some weeks ago I stated that George Kennedy had purchased a Three Cheers filly, dam Rosetta. From those who have seen this filly I learn that she is a perfect model of the typical race horse, and as she is entered for next year's Futurity and other Eastern stakes, in all probability she will be heard from.

The Eureka Jockey Club have had a meeting and elected new officers for the ensuing year. The following named gentlemen were selected for the various positions: President, Charles F. Roberts; vice-president, M. H. Devoy; secretary, W. S. Clark; directors, the President, Secretary, Dr. Gross, W. Murphy and James Brown.

The Eureka Jockey Club will have a day's racing on May 1st. A stake race has been arranged, and the following entries made: Roberts' Pescoro Hayward, Gross' Grey Mare, McGarrigan's Overland filly, and Young's Able by Pescoro. The club will add $50 to the entrance money. Several other races will take place the same day.

The shipment of Anteeo 2:16¾, and Fallis 2:23, and sale of Antevolo 2:19½, to the East, withdraw from the stud in this State three valuable Electioneer stallions. Our advertising columns indicate there are others, and good ones, left to take their places, and that it is not only our Eastern breeders who appreciate the blood.

"E. J. Baldwin, says the Chicago Tribune, is probably the most prosperous owner of race horses in America. His horses cost him less and win more races than those of any other man. Since 1885 he has raced 74 head, which have started 873 times, and won 209 races and $375,704. J. B. Haggin in the same years has raced 137 animals, starting 947 times, winning 179 events and $333,204."

The Petaluma track, already one of the fastest on the coast, will be further improved by thorough cultivation, and a six-inch coating of red, sandy clay. If from three to four inches of well or even half rotted manure could be thoroughly worked into the adobe, before applying the clay coat, our friends in Petaluma should have, the fastest and safest track on the coast.

Tea Tray, since Billy Lakeland has had him, has received none but the gentlest treatment, and Mr. Lakeland feels confident that he can cure him of his roguish propensities by kindness. "He will never get the whip while I have him," said he to a Sporting World reporter. "If he won't improve under such treatment, I'll give him away after next season, but I don't think that I'll have to."

The steamship Egypt, of the Monarch line, has arrived at New York, having on board the well known English race horse Galore, by Galopin, dam Lady Maura, she by Macaroni, out of Noblesse by Stockwell. Now that there are two Galopin colts in America, it is time some one began to dispute the sire's pedigree, as they have been doing in England for years past. How is Galopin bred?

Anteeo's picture, of which I wrote last week, is thus spoken of by the Santa Rosa Republican: "We have seen this picture. The painting is by Mr. McLoed of this city. It is on a sign that is to be used by Messrs. Baker & Ross. It is an excellent likeness of this noted horse and speaks the enterprise of the firm and the skill of the artist who has done the work. When the sign is hung in its place, as it will be soon, it will be looked upon with admiration by many."

Common opinion pronounces the colts and fillies of L. U. Shippee, at the Sacramento race track, to be the best lot of youngsters ever seen there. Ab Stemler will not say which is the best, but the King Ban—Whisper filly is the likeliest looking one of the string. A King Ban colt, a big slashing chestnut, is also much fancied, while a Glenelg filly has many admirers. Picnic, the three-year-old, is looking splendid, and should give a good account of herself this year.

Mr. T. J. Ludwig, of Santa Rosa, has a four-year-old gelding by Alex. Button, sire of Yolo Maid and Rosa Mc. He is a grand looking horse, stands 17 hands, and weighs over 1200 pounds. He possesses good action and shows a high rate of speed. Mr. Ludwig is also the fortunate owner of a four-year-old by Antelope, he by Nutwood, and although but little handled can beat a 30 gait. He also has two Anteeo youngsters, one three years old and the other four, that show up very well.

In the stable of the Dwyer Bros. at Gravesend there is a brother or sister to almost every horse of note, of the past few years. A brother to Hanover, brother to Blue Wing, brother to Kingston, brother to Jim Gore, brother to Punster, brother to Dry Monopole, brother to Firenzi, brother to Virgil, and sisters to Lizzie Dwyer, Fremont and Miss Ford. Fancy that for a collection of speed and blood lines.

Charles R. Hoppin, the owner of Yolo Maid, made me a pleasant call lately, and finally, although rather reluctantly, admitted that his wonderful pacing mare had attracted the attention of several Eastern parties, and he had been asked to name a figure for her. $10,000 is asked, and it may come to pass that she will change hands before long. I know she has gone a quarter in twenty-nine seconds, and verily believe she can beat it.

Advocates of a thorough infusion of thoroughbred blood in the trotter point with emphasis to this list of trotters whose dams are said to have 50 per cent. or more of running blood: Maud S, 2:08¾; Jay-Eye-See, 2:10; Trinket, 2:14; Lulu, 2:15, Favonia, 2:15: Anteeo, 2:16¼; Oliver K, 2:16¼; J. B. Richardson, 2:17½; Sunol, 2:18; Kenilworth, 2:18½; Flossie G, 2:18½; Lady Thorn, 2:18¼; Sir Walter Jr, 2:18¼; Nutwood, 2:18¾; Loretta F, 2:18¾; Wedgewood, 2:19; Antevolo, 2:19½; Ansel, 2:20; Belle Echo, 2:20.

The Board of Directors of the Agricultural Society at San Jose, met last Saturday and heard the report of the committee selected to form a programme of races for the fall meeting. Mr. Boots also presented a programme for a spring meeting but after a long debate it was voted down. It was finally decided that if any outside parties were willing to assume the responsibility of management that the society would grant permission to hold such a meeting.

Mr. J. B. Haggin is reported in a Chicago paper as saying, "that he had several horses still left in the American Derby, and from the present appearances and movements of two of them, either will have very little trouble in beating Sam Bryant's much-talked-about Proctor Knott, and they'll be there when the drum taps for the start in the rich event." Mr. Haggin is a gentleman, and could not possibly use the language quoted above. He does not brag about his horses in that sort of style.

Al Cook and M. Hennessy are jockeys, Naicho B. and Welcome are horses, Peter Dornaleck and H. L. Samuels are owners, Elias Wiliams, E. A. DeCamp and Johnny Griffen are Judges, and the play is called the Double Cross. It was enacted at the Los Angeles race track on Thursday, January 31st. Minor characters were represented by the confiding public and the pool box. The judges fined the owners $50 each and ruled them off until the fines are paid, and declared the race, pools and bets off.

The lastest purchases of Mr. F. Gebhard and Mrs. Laugtry, for their breeding farms, arrived at St. Helena last Saturday night, and were given a rest preparatory to sending them over to their destination in Lake county. In addition to the three stallions Greenback, Friar Tuck and St. Savior, there were eight brood mares, four of which are imported. Mr. C. W. Aby came over in charge of the special car, and reports all the horses in good condition and none the worse for their trip.

On the 31st of January, one of the mares imported to California from Australia by Mr. J. K. Newton dropped a filly foal, the sire of which is Monmouth. The mare is finely bred, and if blood goes for anything, her foal should be a wonder. Zara by Marvelous, dam Stella, she by Kingston, dam Regalia, by Yelverton, dam the Waterloo Mare. Before leaving Australia, Zara was stinted to Monmouth. Monmouth is a full brother to Chester, the great sire owned by the Hon. James White, who has had six of his get sent to England to compete for the English Derby. I remember looking at Monmouth some three years ago. He had a white hind foot and a pretty star on his face. Mr. Newton tells me that the newcomer is marked exactly like the sire. This is the first foal ever dropped in the United States from an Australian mare, and sired by an Australian horse.

The Dwyer Bros. and Frank Reilly, the owner of Connemara, have purchased a site for a new race track near Elizabethport, N. J. It will be used as a winter track, in opposition to Clifton and Guttenburg. When this is finished, the racing public of New York will have the following tracks within easy reaching distance: the New York Jockey Club's track at Westchester, the Long Island Jockey Club's track at Astoria, the New Jersey Jockey Club's track at Elizabeth, the American Jockey Club's track at Jerome Park, the Coney Island Jockey Club's track at Sheepshead Bay, the Brooklyn Jockey Club's track at Gravesend, the Monmouth Park Association's track at Monmouth, the Brighton Beach track, the Clifton track, the Guttenburg track, Phil Daly's track at Long Branch, and possibly a track at Sandy Hook.

THE GUN.

In the Rockies.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—In the northern extremity of a beautiful plateau, surrounded by the snow-clad peaks of a range of the Rocky Mountains, with the gaping mouth of the Black Canyon in full view, nestles the little picturesque village of Cimarron. The angry roar of the little river, which found its bed among huge boulders dotting the entire surface of the plateau, and the grandeur and sublimity of the lofty peaks, rearing their hoary crests thousands of feet above, produced a striking contrast to the level plains of the Mississippi Valley. Amid such scenes my friend, whom I will call Frank, and myself were fortunate enough to spend a few days recently.

While in Denver I was informed that the country about Cimarron abounded with game of all kinds. As my chief ambition has always been to proudly stand beside a fallen "monarch of the forest," I persuaded Frank to remain for a day or two, and attempt to realize the to us novel experience of a hunt among the Rockies.

The result was that a Friday afternoon found us busily making inquiries in regard to procuring a suitable guide to pilot us to the home of the Blacktail and Elk. After much perseverance we were fortunate enough to procure the services of an old hunter, who gave us what information we required pertaining to our guns and ammunition. Early the following morning three bold Nimrods might have been seen laboriously climbing the almost perpendicular sides of a huge mountain.

Rifle in hand, and revolver and bowie-knife in belt, we eagerly scanned the surrounding country for a glimpse of some easy victim. As we ascended, the pinon and cedar were replaced by the tall and majestic fir and spruce. The numerous tracks, now of a huge bear, and then of a wild-cat or deer, produced an aggravating effect upon us rather than an encouraging one. When finally we reached the timber line, all signs of vegetation, excepting the buck brush and cactus, being left behind, cold, hungry, and discouraged, we partook of our scanty lunch, after which we resumed our weary ascent.

As we climbed nearer and nearer to the top, it became more and more evident that what had seemed from below to be but a few inches of snow was in reality three or four feet of the disagreeable element. But the long-legged guide, gracefully and easily surmounting all difficulties, plodded on before us, and afforded no opportunity for retreat. Upon arriving at the coveted spot he leisurely awaited our arrival.

When finally perseverance overcame the difficulties which presented themselves to us, we found him, nearly buried in snow, intently gazing toward the zenith.

To one who has never experienced the peculiar sensation of a similar situation, a description of the pictures which presented themselves to us could but partially describe the scenery before us. Directly before our feet descended the rocky walls of the Black Canyon. The Gunnison River, wildly leaping from rock to rock, running its winding course through the narrow basin of the canyon, seemed from our height to be but a narrow line. The opposite granite wall, sparkling in the sun with numerous mica strata, and glistening particles of snow, would suggest to a visionary mind the presence of supernatural power.

The talent of an artist would fail before such a spectacle as this. Notwithstanding the splendor of the picture before us, the bitterness of the cold, and the damp condition of our clothing, compelled us to beat a hasty retreat, which was characterized by no experience worthy of mention, except the surprise and capture of a large cotton tail, our only game. Much satisfaction was derived from the statement of the guide that we were the first to successfully encounter the difficulties of the weary ascent, making a circuit of nearly thirty miles from our starting-point, Cimarron. At certain seasons large game is very plentiful, and we might have constructed an exciting tale of adventure, by relating as part of our experience some of the yarns poured into our ears by our good but exceedingly loquacious guide. At another time we shall try again, and hope for better luck. ALVAH GREEN.

A Marin Bear-Hunt.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—I fear my item will be too late for this week, nevertheless here it is. My near neighbor, Mr. Abbott, had turned out upon the side of a mountain, called Wittenburg, a fortnight ago, a number of colts by Standard, he by Steinway. Hay was nearly fed out, and there was a good bite of grass, so it was thought the colts could take care of themselves. We farmers knew there were bears about. At Bolinas, a seaport town only twenty-five miles to the north of the Cliff House, on the coast, some young men, Bowen and Lauff, had caught three on the slopes of Tamalpais and sold them in the city. Not one of us had suspected the presence of a California lion, and what was our surprise to learn that Mr. Abbott had found five of his colts dead in his horse pasture. Frank Miller, a disciple of Tubal Cain, one who, in his younger days, had been a mighty hunter, examined the colts at Mr. Abbott's request, and pronounced their destroyer to be a lion. "See," said the old sport, "the necks of the colts; here, next the head, he has grasped his victim with his teeth. Look next down his neck and see where his hind claws have raked open the gaping flesh." "Too bad! too bad!" said Mr. Abbott, looking at his big four-year-olds. "Come with me," said Mr. Miller. "Look! see the impressions on the grassy ground of the big cat's foot."

Walking on, the old hunter pointed to an oak tree. "See the marks of the cat's claws on the bark of the tree, as high or higher than a man's head; a favorable token of the cat family to sharpen their claws, or maybe for the fun of the thing." "Well, what will we do," said the farmer and stockman. "Well," said Mr. Miller, "Let's get Juan Garcia's dogs. I think Bismarck will take up the trail, and if we do not get a lion we will get a bear. See where these carnivora have eaten their fill." So bright and early yesterday morning Frank Miller and his three sons, with Mr. Abbott, called and got Mr. Garcia's pack, six in all: Bismarck, Crowder, Bugle, Dan and the rest, coupled, were brought to the spot where the dead horses lay.

There was music in the air. The sun was melting the hoar frost away. The birds were a twittering. No breeze stirred the leaves, and "'twas a scent laying morning." The old hunter gave the reins of his old mare to his son to hold, got off, and carefully looked over the ground. After a minute's inspection, finding only bear tracks, he picked a big fresh bear track, took Bismarck, patted him on the head, and put his nose to the footprints. The big dog snuffed the scent up into his keen nostrils, shook his tail nervously, and the old man knew the premier Bismarck was ready. "Uncouple the dogs, boys, and let 'em go!"

Bismarck, with an ow, ow, finished by a prolonged yell, with his head high in air, gave tongue, when every dog joined the cry, and away swept the pack. The horsemen separated, some going up into the ridge in sight of the Pacific Ocean. Mr. Miller and Abbott went up Bear Valley to watch some run ways. Now and again came the cry of the furious pack; the welkin paid them back, the woods were eloquent with sound, on swept the hounds. "My boys are up the ridge, they will hold the divide. I will go up to the old bear crossing; you stay here at the forks of the creek," said our friend Miller, and away he rode. Upon his return, not having heard the dogs, their fast pace having carried them out of hearing, upon a spur of the mountain far away, the old hunter heard a shot. Hurrying up an old road Mr. Miller met his boys. They plunged down into a deep ravine, where the dogs were heard. Pretty soon they came up to Mr. Abbott rifle in hand, "I shot him in that tree; there is where he fell. See the broken branches"

What! a bear! Yes, a big black one. Hurrying down through the brush there they found the dead marauder at the foot of a big pine.

The tired dogs, with lolling tongues, distended eyes and heaving sides stared at their fallen foe. "Good dog, Bis, good boy Crowdie, good hounds all of you," said the old man. "I can go back to the old shop now and pound iron, watch the sparks fly, and think of this hunt for months. Let me congratulate you, young man," said the veteran to Mr. Abbott. "You were too previous for us," said Ora and the other two brothers. "But 'twas a glorious run," said Abbott, "and he is a 500-lb. bear." "Yes, 'twas a good bear hunt," said Frank, and so say we all of us. RUSTIC.

OLEMA, February 2, 1889.

L. J. Rose of Los Angeles, has just received a consignment of twenty-five skylarks from Europe. The birds are supposed to be the natural enemy of the scale bug. They will be let loose in a few days, except a few pairs, which will be kept for breeding purposes.

This may be useful to sportsmen. The following method is said to be in use in Germany for water-proofing woollen goods. A solution is made of 100 parts of alum, and 100 parts of glue, five of tannin, and two parts of soluble glass, by dissolving the alum in a moderate quantity of boiling water. The glue is steeped in cold water until it has absorbed twice its weight of water, and is then dissolved by heat. The tannin and soluble glass are well stirred into solution of glue, to which the alum solution is then added, and the whole is stirred and allowed to cool. One kilo of the gelatinous mass is boiled for three hours in from 10 to 15 litres of water, fresh water being continually added to compensate for evaporation. The bath is then allowed to cool to 80deg. C., and them aterial to be rendered waterproof is kept in it for half an hour, then withdrawn, and the moisture is allowed to drip from it for several hours. Finally the cloth is stretched in a frame and allowed to dry at a temperature of 50degs., then calendered. The cloth gains considerably in weight, and is perfectly waterproof, though it impedes neither air nor perspiration.

TRAP.

A new hammerless shot-gun is about to be put upon the market which is described as follows:

"The gun can be made either as a double or single barrel. It is hammerless, or more properly speaking, a gun that does not show the hammer on the outside. It differs from any gun yet introduced, being an entirely original idea. There are less pieces by half in the gun than in any hammerless gun made. The parts are so simple that in case any part should break any man who knows any thing about the use of a file could repair the broken part. The gun is positively and absolutely safe. Upon that point great stress should be laid as a great many of the hammerless guns that are made are not safe, from the fact that there are too many springs in them.

"The gun has no slide on the upper tang as all other hammerless guns have. It is utterly impossible not to know when the gun is ready to fire. When it is not ready, a lever which falls down under the pistol grip has to be brought up to the grip before the gun can be fired. Until the lever is up there is no tension whatever on the mainspring. The hammers and mainspring are connected and when the gun is fired the hammers instantly return to full cock and there remain until the tension is again put on the spring and fired. In case the tension is put on and the shooter does not wish to fire the gun he lets go of the tension lever and the gun is carried safely until it is again required for use.

While in Australia Commissioner Thomas B. Merry, as might have been expected, saw as much of the country and of all its phases of sport as could be seen in the time. Among other things he was invited up from Melbourne to Mordialloc to see a pigeon match in Hurlingham style. On the train Mr. Merry's friend, Mr. Charles Sterrett, asked the famous Oregonian shot to take part in the match, but Merry tried to beg off. Finally Sterrett insisted upon paying the £5 entrance, and putting Merry into the shoot, the latter, however, disclaiming all familiarity with the manipulation of a shot gun.

As the match progressed Mr. Merry failed to miss bird after bird, and when the last of the dozen had been killed it appeared that second and third moneys laid between Sterrett and Merry. In the shoot off Merry made a clean score, and left poor Sterrett to surmise how well a good Oregon shot could shoot, if a novice could do so well.

Springfield Notes.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN: The Springfield Rod, Gun and Rifle Club entertained the Broad Brook Rifle team at their Lake Lookout Range recently. The day was spent in rifle practice, and after the shooting was over adjournment was made to the Exchange Hotel, where a banquet was served, a very pleasant time was spent, and some very pleasant speeches were made. The local team will return the visit shortly.

Rifle shooting is particularly dull at present among the users of target rifles. The Armory Rifle Club shoots each week at 800 yards on the government range for the purpose of testing the Springfield rifles, manufactured at the U. S. Arsenal. On Friday, Jan. 18, F. R. Bull, the expert military rifle shot, recorded a full score, Creedmoor, on the "Elliptical Target." The day was fairly good for rifle shooting. This is the first full score ever made in this city at 800 yards prone position.

There are more qualified marksmen in the two local militia companys than any other two companies from one city in the State. T.

The Laughing Jackass.

"The average Irish servant girl always creates a great deal of amusement," said Tom Merry to us the other day, "but a lady friend of mine in Sydney had an experience that rather acquires a mortgage on the bakery. She hired a girl to do general housework. Bridget got breakfast ready, and in doing so got a great deal of chaff from the junior members of the family. She remonstrated with her mistress who scolded the children heartily and then packed them off to school. Bridget then started in to wash the breakfast dishes.

Just as she began this portion of her duties, a specimen of the Giant Kingfisher (laughing jackass) escaped from his cage at a neighbor's house and flew over on the roof of the hen-house of the lady in question. The melodious and sagacious antipodean nightingale had just got cleverly perched when out came Bridget to empty the dish water. She just got cleverly out of doors when the intellectual-looking bird began:

"Haw! Haw!! Haw!!!"

"Hew's a loffin the-like o'that?" queried the angry Milesian female.

"Haw! Haw!! Haw!!!" came the audible smile of the irreverent bird again. Bridget cast a withering glance at the chicken coop, and then bounced into the house.

"I'll lave the sarvice this minute, maam, so I will. First it was the children and thin they wint to school. Now I wint out into the back yard and the chicken all began loffin' at me. I'll lave the house, so I will. Faix, I wouldn't shtay in an any house in the wurreld where the faowls was afther makin' foon av me!"

THE KENNEL.

Dog owners are requested to send for publication the earliest possible notices of whelps, sales, names claimed, presentations and deaths in their kennels, in all instances writing plainly names of sire and dam and of grandparents, colors, dates and breed.

Those who saw and admired the English setter Ben, winner of second in the class for English setter dogs at the Pacific Kennel Club Show in April last, will be pleased to note among notices of whelpings, that Mr. George Muller's Ophelia has been presented with a lot of brothers and sisters to Ben.

The Occidental Coursing Club will meet at 539 California street, city, on Tuesday evening next, at 8 P. M. Much business of importance will come before the meeting and it is particularly requested that all members will attend. Details of the coursing meeting of the club, February 22d, will be settled.

The field trials are already bearing golden fruit. On Monday an intelligent cat made a magnificent point right in front of the Knights of the Trigger rooms, and was admirably backed by a homemade dog. Our home talent is sure to win with half a chance, and if Photographer Boyd, or even Photographer Lewis Chittenden had been on hand, the point of that cat's point would have been everlastingly preserved. —"Kern County Californian."

Our old red setter bitch Belle, broken by us and run to a win in the earlier California field trials, has recently had another honor thrust upon her. Belle and her last litter were photographed, and Mr. Moore, of Portland, Oregon, made a large crayon from the photo. Commissioner Merry took the crayon to the Melbourne Exposition, where it took third prize in the exhibit of animal pictures. Animal studies from Germany, England, and France were shown, and the win reflects much credit upon Mr. Moore, albeit he had a beautiful subject. Belle is now owned and hunted by that genuine sportsman Mr. E. M. Arthur, of Portland, and is still able to do a fair day's work, in her own peculiar fashion. She was the hardest beast to break that has ever passed through our hands, but was a first rate shooting dog when she left us.

A club to be known as the "Riverside Hunt" has been organized, as an outcome of the coursing meeting at Casa Blanca, reported in these columns last week. The By-laws adopted by the club are as follows:

1. The affairs of the club shall be managed by the governing committee, consisting of the regularly elected officers.
2. All members entering on or before February 15, will be qualified as charter members by payment of $1.50 initiation fee.
3. Nominations for membership to be made by two members of the club, and then admitted by a majority vote of the governing committee.
4. Scarlet shall be the color of the Hunt.
5. The Master of the Hunt shall have full control on the field and the privilege of appointing aides at his discretion, and huntsmen shall pay strict attention to his directions.
6. Regular "Meet" days of the Hunt shall be on the following Tuesdays: February 5, February 10, March 5, March 19, April 2, April 16.
7. Notices of each meet shall be published by the Secretary, first on the Wednesday prior, and then continuously to the day of the meet.
8. If a postponement of a meet be necessary, owing to the weather, or for any other cause, the Master of the Hunt shall give prompt notice in the newspapers over his signature.
9. No dogs but greyhounds (excepting by the express permission of the M. H.) shall be allowed in the field, and all dogs shall be kept in leash and turned loose only by direction of the M. H.
10. The Secretary shall have these by-laws printed, and supply each member with a copy thereof.

From a perfectly competent and candid man who attended the trials at High Point, and those of the American and Southern Clubs, there come some notes of interest. He writes: The trials of 1888 were not equal to those of 1886. The pointers made a pitiful showing, particularly at Amory. I very much doubt whether a pointer stake will ever be run again either at High Point or the Southern, i. e., a stake sufficient in number to be respectable. I had the pleasure of meeting P. H. Bryson, Charley Tucker, Bev. Stephenson, Whitford and Col. Gordon.

The consumption of whiskey at High Point fell off from two casks in 1886, with several hundred bottles of claret and beer, to a small keg in 1888, and very little of the beer and sich. None of the good fellows were there this year—except myself—much to the flatness of the meet. Edward Dexter, Gregory, Hamilton, Dad Wilson, Orth and several others who love the dog dearly for his own sake were not there; but it is only the havoc which time causes. The older ones have to move out as the younger ones move in.

I was really grieved to see poor Major Hammond, of Forest and Stream, suffer so much pain and despondency. I was glad to hear from him about the holidays that he was again able to be in the office, although far from well. I fear he will not be able to endure the hardships of another field trial circuit, and the trials have thus lost a reporter who is as true at heart as human nature ever reaches [so say we, ED.] It is discouraging to think that newspaper men have to die and go to heaven, whether they wish to or not, but "it is written."

The Pacific Kennel Club meets at Parlor A, Palace Hotel, on Wednesday evening, February 13th. Important details of the coming bench show are to be discussed, and Secretary Watson requests a full attendance.

Sales.

Mr. P. Lyman has sold to Mr. Jas. E. Watson, San Francisco, the greyhound Saturday Morning, a dog, and Brunette, a bitch, the latter in whelp to the former.

Visits.

Mr. James E. Watson's black pointer Bess to owner's black pointer Old Black Joe, on January 25, 1889.

Mr. H. R Brown's pointer Donna Sensation, to Mr. E. W. Briggs' Climax, on January 30, 1889.

Mr. T. L Potter's pointer Drab, to Mr. E. W. Briggs Climax, on January 25, 1889.

Name Claimed.

A Useful Book.

Mr. Bernard Waters, for a long time Kennel Editor of the American Field, and undoubtedly as well fitted for the labor as any man, has written a book which will soon be placed upon the market.

It is entitled "Modern Training, Handling and Kennel Management." Of the volume the quaint and delightful author says in a personal note: "It will be published about February 1st, and will be an exhaustive treatise on dog training and handling from a modern professional standpoint. The use and abuse of the spike collar are minutely described, particularly in respect to retrieving. Many venerable fallacies are exposed. I feel a great deal of solicitude in educating the public up to a higher plane in sporting matters. I thirst to become a benefactor of my race; to be a pioneer in higher and more virtuous paths than those pursued by some sportsmen. This book I think will (price $2.50) accomplish the benisons I contemplate, and make men happier and better."

To what our valued friend Waters says we may add that everything he writes is of great practical value, and his book cannot but be the great working authority wherever pointers and setters are known and used.

Death of Old Black Joe.

A line from Mr. James E. Watson on Wednesday informed us that his famous black pointer, Old Black Joe, died at his kennels in Berkeley on Tuesday, February 5th, the cause being pleuro-pneumonia. Mr. Watson feels the loss keenly, and has the sympathy of all fellow fanciers.

Old Black Joe was a dog of the rarest quality in every respect. His bench form was superior, and in the field he could only be beaten by a phenomenally good performer. His winning of both the Derby and All-Aged Stakes at Bakersfield last month, stamped him as one of the best pointing dogs alive. He met good competitors, and beat them out at hand. His pace was better than average, and well maintained; in range he was wide, uniform, and covered his ground closely; he quartered well and with fine judgment; in style he was very taking, both when in motion and on point and back. He had a sure nose and a keen one, was obedient, and had an excellent disposition. In short, he was at all points the fine, tasty, useful shooting dog, and one that a thousand litters may not replace.

About Old Black Joe.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—In your edition of the 26th inst, you give a very jumbled up account of Old Black Joe. In the first place you state he is supposed to have been bred by W. R. Pape, Newcastle. I do not know who does the supposing for which there is no necessity. I look upon it as trying to throw discredit on the dog, but I pride myself I have got a dog that is good enough for me. The dog was bred by W. R. Pape, and by him sent to my brother in Liverpool, who shipped the dog to me.

Secondly, you say the dog was purchased by me through Wm. Graham of Belfast. Now I never had any correspondence with Mr. Graham until six months after the arrival here of Old Black Joe. To prove to you that you were aware of these facts, I refer you to the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN of October 8, 1887, in which you notice Joe's arrival, and also to the same paper's edition of June 30, 1888, in which you notice the arrival of my bitch Black Bess, which I did buy from Wm. Graham, Belfast, but she is in no way connected with the Pape strain that I am aware of. When I brought out Joe I had no intention of ever putting him in any public field trials. I got him simply for my own use, and never should have allowed him to run in public had it not been for the earnest solicitation of Mr. Allender. By giving publicity to the above, you will oblige

JAMES E. WATSON.

[Mr. Watson is doubtless correct in his statement as to the buying of Joe otherwise than through Wm. Graham, which is a matter of the slightest importance. In our remark about the buying of Old Black Joe, we desired to convey the idea that Mr. Watson knew nothing as the antecedents of the dog, his age, breeding, breeder, etc. If Mr. Watson can produce any authentic evidence as to the age of Joe it should be done, because there exists a general belief that the dog is considerably older than two years. Several persons accustomed to breed and handle setters and pointers agree in discrediting Joe's right to start as a Derby dog, and one of them has even gone so far as to express a positive conviction that the dog is three years old at least.

No one presumes that Mr. Watson would do anything irregular, and the mere fact that he entered Joe in the Derby is all the proof needed that he believed the dog to have been whelped on or after January 1, 1887. If Joe had not shown himself a very good dog, little interest would attach to any particulars about him, but since he has exhibited uncommonly good form, the fullest information about him should be obtainod and published, and it is as much to Mr. Watson's interest as to that of any other to get proper certificates of breeding from his breeder. In April last Mr. Watson certified that he did not know the age or breeding of the dog. If he has since then received proper and necessary information about the dog, we shall be pleased to publish it.—KEN. ED.]

The Baldwin Stable.

BY GRIM.

In the various places where horsemen most do congregate, the question is asked almost every day, "What horses will Lucky Baldwin take East this year?" Mr. Baldwin has had such remarkable good fortune in former years with his racing stable that naturally more than a passing interest is manifested by those who incline to the royal sport. Rumors of various kinds have been floating around for several months as to Mr. Baldwin's intentions, among others, one to the effect that the Santa Anita stable's colors would not be seen on the Eastern courses this season, but that instead, Mr. Baldwin would only race in California. That gentleman assured the writer that he will take a small, but highly selected lot to do battle on the Eastern turf. Most of the two-year-olds will be tried here, prior to shipment, and any not showing the highest possible form will be left behind and entered for California events. It may possibly occur that after the pick of the stable is forwarded, some one or more of the cast offs may show up in proper stake form, in that event they will be sent on to join the Eastern contingent. Mr. Baldwin has determined, however, to cut down the expenses as low as can be, without detriment to the stable, and as it will be under his personal supervision, he will be enabled to judge from time to time, what changes, if any, are necessary. Instead of Mr. Roberts, who was the trainer last year, Robert Campbell will be the first in command, and as Bob has been for several years connected with the stable, no better man could have been chosen. The young jockey, Graham West, will have the premier mount, with Isaac Murphy as heavy weight, but the latter is not regularly engaged, as he was last year, but will be paid for winning and losing mounts, the same as any other disengaged jockey. The horse first to be mentioned in the string is Los Angeles, that game and speedy daughter of Glenelg, whose winnings last year tended so materially to make the stable a paying investment. She has thickened out considerably since her last appearance on the Bay District track, and if anything, has grown a little in height. Her grand performances as a two-year-old, and still greater improvement as a three-year-old, would naturally make the ordinary observer incline to the opinion that Los Angeles will be the successor of Firenzi in her four-year-old form. The writer watched her carefully through the Eastern circuit last year, and can safely assert that Mr. Baldwin's chestnut filly was, next to the Emperor of Norfolk, the best exponent of three-year-old form that the East saw last year. There were many who fancied Bella B. for the leading position, but race after race proved that Los Angeles was of the come and come again order, while Bella B. could not stand the hard work imposed on the Santa Anita mare. Gorgo, if in good health was the only filly fit to be compared with Los Angeles.

There are but few of last year's stable that will accompany Los Angeles back, and the best of the balance, Grisette, will be bred. It may seem wise to the management to send this mare to the stud, but she showed up so well on her return, that policy would dictate that she be speeded for another year at least. Grisette, for a mare of her size, showed she could carry weight with the best of them, and while she fell off in form along in September, especially the day Wahoo beat her, she rounded too and was as good as ever when she beat Daisy D., Edelweiss, J. M. R. and others on the fourth of December, at the Blood Horse Meeting here. If Mr. Baldwin should change his mind and take Grisette, under ordinary circumstances, she will prove a big bread winner.

Caliente is down on the list to travel, as is also Ganymede, both of whom were rank disappointments last season, and unless they have improved wonderfully will simply prove a drag on the stable. It is true Caliente made a presentable appearance in the spring but went all to pieces, and when she had to meet even ordinary horses in the stakes run for, during the summer and fall, she proved no good. Formosa, a full sister to Caliente, may go with the stable, if she shows any speed at all. Mr. Baldwin says that Mollie Mc'Carty's Last will also be bred; but she has not been withdrawn from any of the Eastern stakes for which she was entered, so it is fair to assume she will also go. Of the two-year-olds probably the best of the lot is Guadaloupe, by Grinstead, dam Josie C., who gives promise of being a first-class race-horse. There are others on the farm that are thought more of, but private information warrants the presumption that Guadaloupe will lead the winners among those of his own age.

A full sister to Volante has her admirers by the score, and no wonder, for blood will tell, but to the eye she does not show up as well as her relative did at the same age. She has been named St. Cecelia. Another of the favorites among stable boys is Amigo, by Prince Charlie, dam Mission Belle. Violetta (a full sister to Laredo) by Grinstead—Hermosa, is a likely looking chestnut filly, as is Orange Leaf, by Rutherford, dam Fallen Leaf. Magdelena by Glenelg, dam Malta, is a full sister to Grisette, and if she can only develope a tithe of the speed her sister had, will make a valuable adjunct to the stable. Still another of the fancied ones is Sinaloa, a sister to Goliah, and half sister in blood to Lucky B. There are about twenty in all to select from, those mentioned being the most likely at the present writing. There is a slight possibility that Mr. Baldwin may purchase one or two tried race horses for the handicaps, when he goes East, to assist in filling out the stable as it is already lacking in aged horses.

It is certainly annoying, says the London Referee, that there are so many unnamed horses, and our turf legislators would do good if they were to make a rule that no horse was eligible to be nominated for any race until he was properly identified. It would also be just as well whilst they were about it to see that no name that has been used before should be adopted a second time. This circumstance has become very frequent of late, and, although it does no particular harm just at the present time, it will breed confusion, and is liable to cause mistakes in the arrangement of the Stud Book in years to come.

THE WILKES STALLION

Mambrino Wilkes, 6083

Sire of Gus Wilkes, 2:22; Alpheus, 2:27; Balkan, 2:29½, three-year-old; John O'Brien, lapped out the winner in 2:36 as a three-year-old; H. A. W.'s Black Colt, trial 2:29 with very little work as a four-year-old.

Will remain in the future at San Miguel Stock Farm, Walnut Creek, Contra Costa County.

DESCRIPTION.

MAMBRINO WILKES is a black horse, 16 hands high, and considerably longer than his height; has immense muscular development and weighs 1,260 pounds. He has the utmost symmetry of proportion and elegance of finish. No competent judge who has seen this horse has failed to pronounce him a perfect individual, and his breeding is certainly fashionable enough to satisfy the most fastidious. His colts are large, stylish and handsome, and Balkan has been pronounced by many the most stylish trotter on the turf.

PEDIGREE.

Sired by George Wilkes, dam Lady Chrisman by Todhunter's Mambrino; second dam by Pilot Jr.

Todhunter's Mambrino by Mambrino Chief, dam Ripton's dam by Hunt's Commodore, son of Mambrino, by imp. Messenger; second dam by Potomac, son of imp. Messenger.

George Wilkes sired 65 colts that have beaten 2:30. Of these 39 have average records of 2:23, 14 of 2:19 and 12 of 2:18.

TERMS.

Mares from a distance will be received at the Dexter Stables, Oakland, or Livery Stable, Martinez, the owner notifying Smith Hill, Superintendent at the farm. Good pasture and plenty of water. For the purpose of placing the service of a Wilkes within reach of breeders, the same rate will be maintained as last year, to wit, $75 for the season. Although it is not admitted thereby that this horse is inferior as a producer to the horses whose fees are placed at from $150 to $500.

BALKAN,

Three-year-old Record 2:29 1-2; trotting many heats faster, when he did not obtain a record.

PEDIGREE.

Sired by Mambrino Wilkes, dam Fanny Fern by Jack Hawkins, son of Boston; second dam S. F. B. by Jim Crow.

It will be readily seen that this colt is from strong producing lines on both sides. Fanny Fern having produced Mollie Drew, May Queen, Onyx and Fred Arnold, all noted trotters and all by different sires.

This colt will be kept at the Oakland Trotting Park, and will be stinted to ten approved mares at $100 for the season.

Thoroughbred Stallion

Prince of Norfolk,

Will Make the Season of 1889, from Feb. 15th to July 1st, at Sacramento.

PEDIGREE.

PRINCE OF NORFOLK, ch c, foaled 1881, by Norfolk; 1st dam Marion by Malcolm; 2nd dam Maggie Mitchell by imp. Yorkshire; third dam Charmer by imp. Glencoe; 4th dam Betsy Malone by Stockholder; 5th dam by Potomac; 6th dam by imp. Diomed; 7th dam by Pegasus, etc. Norfolk, the unbeaten son of Lexington, is the sire of Winters, Twilight, Conner, Ballot Box, Trade Dollar, Flood, Duchess of Norfolk, Lou Spencer, the Great Emperor of Norfolk, an many others. Marion's sire, Malcolm, was one of the first horses to bring Bonnie Scotland into notice. Through the Maggie Mitchell cross comes the blood of two of the most celebrated race mares of their day, Charmer and Betsy Malone. The combined speed of these great families seem to be concentrated in the get of Norfolk and Marion, as is instanced in the case of the Emperor of Norfolk, who is a full brother to the Prince of Norfolk.

The blood lines here displayed cannot be surpassed in the world, there not being a single cross that has not been celebrated for speed and endurance, and it is fair to assume that the get of this stallion will show equally well with those of past generations.

TERMS, $50 for the season. We offer first class pasturage on our own ranch, at $1 per month and the best of care will be taken of mares sent to us but no responsibility can be incurred. For further particulars address

Too Cramped.

That section of the present act which confines pool-selling or book making to the grounds or buildings on, or in which the contests are decided is too contracted to be proper in California. In San Francisco the pool selling previous to the date fixed for decision is a great aid in inducing attendance, and the reports of pool selling in the morning papers attract attention which would be otherwise lacking. At Sacramento it is also important that the speculators should have an opportunity for making investments prior to the time when the race is called.

The mornings during the State Fair are fully occupied in attending to departments outside of that which is denominated "speed," and the work of committees could not be effectively performed if at the same time auction pools were in progress.

The simplest of all propositions is to confine pool selling and book making to events occurring in California, the details will be easy to regulate, in fact prove automatic, and, with a general governor, be self-regulating.

A hammerless Colt, 12-gauge shotgun, of eight pounds weight, sound, perfect, handsome, and a hard hitter, may be had a nominal price on application at this office.

Tuesday afternoon, seven of Senator Hearst's horses passed through on their way to Sacramento. They arrived from San Simeon Ranch in good order. Among the number was Almont, and the two Australian colts purchased by the Senator from Mr. J. K. Newton.

Somewhat Forcible.

The argument that a law which will declare it criminal to sell pools or make books in one portion of San Francisco and legalize it in another, is contrary to guaranteed rights, is not without force.

Still there are analagous cases in which the principle is observed, and if legal in them must also be proper in this.

The passage of an act which has force in all parts of the State will obviate that difficulty. Legal everywhere, when restricted to California contests, and the business properly conducted, illegal when pools are sold or books opened on events transpiring elsewhere. Simple as "rolling off a log," the only persons who will discover any complexity are those who have a direct pecuniary interest to the contrary.

No more pool selling or bookmaking on far away events.

"New Method to Dress Horses."

Those of our readers who study, as well as talk horse, will be thoroughly pleased with the portions of the Duke of Newcastle's work which is now before them. A great deal will be learned of the horses and systems of breeding when he wrote, and some will unquestionably be surprised at the extent of his knowledge. Soon after Cavendish gave his work to the public, the breeding of thoroughbreds may be said to have commenced, though it was nearly one hundred years thereafter before the business was brought into good shape. Sixty years previous to the introduction of the Godolphin Arabian into England the Duke's discription of the various breeds was penned, and the picture of the Barb in general as he paints it would answer to the later portraits of the Godolphin.

While the style and antique orthography may be somewhat troublesome, until use overcomes the impediments, it appears to give our readers more satisfaction than when the spelling was modernized. Much of the interest would be lost if brought to our present method of expression, and without the capitals, italics, punctuation and paragraphing as it is found in the book it might seem to be counterfeit.

Although the author is candid enough to deny taking much interest in horse races, whoever reads his instructions carefully will learn that he was reasonably well posted in that branch of horsemanship, if his whole delight laid in the "mannage." His instructions to select mares to "breed racing-horses of" are just as applicable at the present time as they were long before the 17th century came to a close, and the points he insists on would be recognized as valuable by our present experts. It will be noticed, however, that he insists on the stallion being a Barb, "and somewhat of the shape I have described the mares to be of," though further than to class mares in divisions, named after the countries they were natives of, there are no allusions to pedigrees.

The Last News.

The Public Morals Committee took up the bill to restrict pool-selling on the race-tracks. Great interest has been manifested in this bill by the sporting fraternity, as it is claimed that it is less in the interest of the Society for the Prevention of Vice than in that of a proposed monopoly which will after its passage control pool-selling at the track in San Francisco while it freezes out all competition at the different pool rooms. Clunie appeared for the pool-sellers and W. H. H. Hart for the society. There is a powerful money interest on either side.

The above was cut from The Call, and is the latest intelligence which is likely to be received before going to press. There is one gross error, that being the statement: "There is a powerful money interest on either side." We do not believe that there is a single dollar used in the way intimated on the side of reform, and the charge is one of the methods of attack adopted by the opposition. Mr. Hinchman is the only individual we know of who has expended anything, and there is little doubt that his moneyed investment is only so far as to pay his travelling expenses and hotel bills. It is one of these questions where the direct pecuniary interest is one side, and the people who are harvesting the present crop are ready and willing to pay liberally for ploughing the ground and scattering the seed, for another.

While breeders, owners of horses, trainers and track proprietors (in the latter named being the managers of fairs) are all ready enough to express a hope that reform will be reached, no one has even suggested that a "sack" be filled to hasten the passage. We are hugely grateful that such is the status, and that the whole dependence is upon the justness of the cause. We have little fear of the result, notwithstanding a congressman elect champions the cause of unlimited book making and pool selling, provided the bill reaches a stage which will bring out argument in Senate and House. As outlined above, the main dependence is to make people believe that it is a fight in which Mr. Hinchman is battling to transfer the business from one part of San Francisco to another, and therefore it is only a change in name and not in fact.

We earnestly urge those who are taking the lead on the bill of reform to stamp that phase of the question so far under ground that it will be buried as deeply as Pompeii was submerged by the ashes of Vesuvius, and by raising the standard of California interests without the chance even for supposing that there are sinister motives, victory is as certain as that the sun will rise.

We call upon Mr. Hinchman to show beyond all cavil that he has not been misrepresented. Let him go before the committee, or put it boldly into the papers that he is far above such sordid feelings; that while he has pecuniary interests at stake, and which it is proper for him to protect, there is a higher duty which he will not shirk. All that is required is to support a bill which will limit pool selling and book making to events which are to be decided within the boundaries of the State.

The only exchanges permissable in California are those which support California interests.

Senate Bill. No. 431.

INTRODUCED BY MR. PINDER, JANUARY 31, 1889.
Referred to Committee on Public Morals.

An Act to add a new Section to Chapter X of the Penal Code, to be known and numbered as Section 337, Relative to the selling of pools on horse-races.

The People of the State of California, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

SECTION 1. A new section is hereby added to the Penal Code, to be known and numbered three hundred and thirty-seven.

Section 337. Every person who buys, sells, or causes to be sold any pools on horse-races, or who conducts, either as owner or employe, whether for hire or not, any turf exchange or other place for the sale of such pools, or for the betting on horse-races, is punishable by a fine of not less than two hundred dollars, nor more than one thousand dollars for each offense, and shall be imprisoned in the county jail until such fine and costs of prosecution are paid.

Sec. 2. This Act shall take effect immediately.

From the intelligence which we have received, the above bill is a part of the programme or scheme devised by those who are interested in the present system of pool-selling and bookmaking. A threat was made that if a measure to regulate pool-selling and bookmaking was urged, and with a prospect of it being passed, the opposition would join the ranks of those who were in favor of suppression and carry prohibition in retaliation.

There is little danger of Mr. Pinder's bill becoming a law, and still less that such a palpable bluff will have the desired effect. Delay and mystification are the dependence of those who are antagonistic to reform, and their hope is that the session will pass without action.

It may be that Mr. Pinder has presented the bill in good faith, that he conscientiously believes that he has performed a laudable action, and that his position on a high morality plane will be duly appreciated by his constituents, and redound to his credit. Should that be the case we cannot find fault with Mr. Pinder, neither shall we endeavor to persuade him from following his convictions. Arguments will be of little avail when a man imagines that he is only influenced by a higher law than that which governs a majority of his fellow citizens. We do not accuse Mr. Pinder of fanaticism or bigotry, and in lieu of denunciations sincerely condole with him on the asceticism of his nature. We have a feeling of pity for a man who is so hampered with prejudices that he cannot bear to see others enjoying themselves in a way that he cannot appreciate. In all probability the author of the above bill (if it was presented with sincerity) has been educated and trained in the belief that nearly all pleasures are sinful. That all kinds of recreation are traps of old Nick to add to his captives, and that pool-selling especially merits as severe punishment as burglary or manslaughter.

Gloomy as are the views of Mr. Pinder in relation to horse-racing, and though full of anxiety to put an end to the "royal sport" in California, we are gratified to learn that he does not ignore other pleasures which are of a somewhat kindred nature, and that he is enthusiastic in his admiration of dogs. Our informant did not state whether his fancy ran in the way of coursing or that the field trial celebrities were the subjects of his adoration. As more money is wagered on the handsomest of all canines, the graceful greyhound, than hunting dogs, we presume that the former are his pets.

We come to this conclusion from the wording of the bill, and furthermore take back all we have written in accusing Mr. Pinder of hypermorality, as a closer perusal shows as plainly as twice two is four, that his only animosity is against "every person who buys, sells, or causes to be sold any pools on horse-races, or who conducts, either as owner or employe, whether for hire or not, any turf exchange or other place for the sale of such pools, or for the betting on horse-races, is punishable, etc." Limiting the penalty to pool-selling or betting on horse-races, exonerating those who sell pools or bet on prize-fights, foot-races, grand six-day humbugs, etc., it is barely possible that extreme purity of anti-gambling principle is the motive for introducing the bill.

Some one, or some parties, wanted the chestnuts pulled out of the fire, and there is little doubt that in Mr. Pinder's good nature he "presented the bill by request" without giving it a moment's consideration.

Whatever the history of this "new section of the Penal Code" may be, that it will fail in the intended purpose, is beyond controversy. The horse-folk are not so easily frightened as to surrender at the first outslaught, or become terrified with the bogle of prohibiting pool-selling and betting on horse-races, and giving unlimited license to wager on all other sports, reputable or disreputable, and in any section of the country.

Fallacious Arguments.

We hear that some of those who oppose the passage of a bill for the regulation of pool selling and book making, present an argument which has had an effect in misleading men as to the true status.

That is that Mr. Hinchman is actuated by a desire to obtain a monopoly of the business in San Francisco, and not from an inclination to further general interests. These advocates advance the idea that if the present bill should become a law pool selling and book making will be centralized on the Bay District course, and then those speculators who desired to make investments on Eastern races will have to accept such terms as are offered, there being no chance for competition.

It is not at all probable that enough people would make daily visits to the Bay District to make the business remunerative, but even in that case one of the evils would be in a measure remedied. There would be an increase of revenue to sustain the track, and a part of the profits, at least, go to support racing and trotting.

But the plan we favor gives no opportunity for that kind of reasoning, if reasoning it can be called, and for anything we can discover is as effective as it is simple.

Restrict pool selling and book making to events which are decided in California, and all the drawbacks are removed, all the benefits retained. There is not the faintest shadow of monopoly, and as heretofore in this State there will be little friction to overcome. Eastern racing is now a continuous chain, with scarcely a week day in the year a blank. This constant grist is what keeps the book mills at work.

A steady falling of grain into the hopper and the toll exacted will take the whole contents of the sacks when a few trips have been made. We are informed that a ten per cent. book is held to be a liberal offer on the part of the layer. That means that for every thousand dollars invested one hundred is absorbed, and it does not require a great deal of arithmetical proficiency to "cipher out" where that will end. Even at the regular percentage on pools, viz., three per cent, it does not require many races to make a big hole in the capital. But as associations get from sixty per cent. up for their share of the spoils, and that is given in enhanced premiums, so that it is a direct assistance in promoting one of the main resources of the State. Not a dollar is derived from percentages on Eastern races, the three, five or ten per cent being diverted into other channels.

We have heard a still more senseless argument than that presented by the cry of monopoly, that being that public rooms, by fostering a penchant for betting on races, increased the emoluments of home tracks, owing to the habit acquired through that influence. As it was a "proprietor" who entered the plea it was probably a carefully studied conclusion advanced to offset diminished attendance at fairs and races consequent on the attractions the rooms present. It should be evident to the dullest of comprehension that there must be an excess of losers. Were winnings and losses equally divided it would not be long until a large capital was absorbed in telegraphic despatches, rent, clerk hire, etc. Telegrams are probably the highest item in the expense account, and we have heard that the running expenses will not fall short of $300 per day for all of the rooms. After a liberal allowance for overestimates there is a reasonable presumption that the aggregate expenditures are $50,000 per year. This and the profits will give the excess of losses over winnings, and if the transfer of a large amount of money from the pockets of those who are likely to support racing and trotting to others who do not lend the slightest aid, is an advantage, there must be reasons other than those advanced.

But arguments, although devoid of logic, have an effect, and when reiterated are apt to deceive. The claim that Mr. Hinchman is only actuated by self interests is only true in part. His interests are identical with those of horse breeders and horse owners. As the lessee of the Bay District Course and the Oakland Trotting Park he has a pecuniary interest, and when, owing to the establishment of public betting rooms, these properties fall short of paying expenses, he must battle in favor of the removal of adverse influences or throw up his leases. Whatever militates against the interest of public tracks is also inimical to the "breeding and rearing of fast horses." This is so apparent that arguments are unnecessary and one illustration will be sufficient. The revenues of both of the Metropolitan tracks became so much reduced that something had to be done in the way of a return for expenses absolutely necessary to keep them in order.

In place of a free use of stabling and track, a rental of five dollars a month for each horse stabled or exercised upon the track was imposed. This met with earnest opposition from trainers. The prices fixed for training horses had become fixed from custom, and owners could not be saddled with the extra amount without incurring the risk of losing their custom. Without the imposts the tracks would be closed until the forces in opposition were met and defeated. No one had a better knowledge than Mr. Hinchman of the necessity for lightening the burdens, as much as possible, of men who are engaged in training race horses and educating trotters. Next to breeders and owners they are the mainstay of sport, and when they have to struggle for a livelihood there is a corresponding struggle on the part of the proprietors. The endeavor on the part of Mr. Hinchman to secure the passage of a bill which will enable him to make his properties available, and not run at a loss, is motive sufficient without looking for a removal of the institutions on pauper alley to the Bay District.

But should there be doubts on the part of legislators in regard to that phase of the question, it is easy to employ effective guards by substituting a bill which will render it illegal to sell pools or make books on events transpiring outside of California.

No more races by telegraph, when the starting bell rings let it sound over California race courses.

Pools and Bookmaking.

We have been told that a claim was made before the committee which has charge of the bill to regulate pool-selling and bookmaking, that if a postponement were granted, quite a large number of men interested in horse breeding would give evidence in favor of continuing the present system. We are not in the habit of paying much attention to what Dame Rumor promulgates, and there is little chance for the above accusation to be true. It may be that men have remarked that they would prefer the present system to entire abrogation, and a few who send horses to run in the East might like to have an opportunity to back them at home. But we venture to say that if an expression of opinion could be obtained from every breeder of racehorses or fast trotters in California, the vote would show fully ninety-five per cent of the whole number in favor of limited poolselling. We have yet to find a single breeder who was opposed to the proposed change, and we asked quite a number during the fairs of 1886. And there was a like expression from the directors and managers of exhibitions whose turf and track sports were a part of the programme. There were fears that agitation might lead to suppression, if action were taken then, and though our belief was contrary to that opinion, with the greatest reluctance the controversy was abandoned, or rather suspended for the time.

Some have argued that prohibition would cure itself, and that a trial for a couple of years would be so detrimental to Agricultural Fairs that the whole people would be in favor of repeal. That might be, though there is no necessity for such a heroic dose. Two seasons of disaster will require several years to bring back shattered health, and even then there would be dread of a relapse. There are two black clouds hanging over the horse-breeding interests of California. One is unrestricted poolselling and bookmaking, the other absolute prohibition. The first-named is not quite so dark as the other, the main danger being that so many evils follow the establishment of betting rooms where there are continual and daily temptations presented, that these evils would be held to justify entire suppression.

California has gained so high a place in the records which contain the doings of racehorses and fast trotters, that it has practically the first place. Climatic and other advantages are so greatly superior to other parts of the United States, that the drawback of distant markets is in a measure overcome, and with opportunities to make the most of Nature's gifts, every year will show an increase. With poolselling done away with the business will be restricted to wealthy men, who can afford to breed and train horses for Eastern engagements, or who have breeding farms which are so richly endowed with many animals of acknowledged superiority, that purchasers will be attracted from a distance, and that a trainload of colts can be sent thousands of miles with a fair show that the venture will prove remunerative, and failing in that, plenty of backing to sustain loss without financial distress. There are only a few private tracks in California, the great amount of labor required to keep a track in order during the dry season being an interdict, unless to men who can afford the outlay.

There are a greater number of public tracks which are a mile in circuit in California, than in any other State in the Union, and should poolselling be abolished, a majority of them will be abandoned.

When deprived of the revenue obtained from poolsales the premiums at fairs will be so greatly reduced, that there will be little incentive to train horses, and without speed departments fairs will dwindle into comparative insignificance, when contrasted with the magnificent exhibitions which are now presented in every district in California. There will be an end to the opening of new breeding farms, when there are no opportunities to display the stock at home, and in lieu of Eastern horses and men in charge coming here to winter, there will be a beggarly array of empty boxes on every trotting park.

There is another feature which even rigid moralists must acknowledge to be productive of good. The autumnal fairs are grand harvest homes, calling together thousands of people, and it is within bounds to say that in practical teaching they are potent educators. Not twenty per cent of the attendance will visit them when horses are restricted to show rings, and the crowds which throng the grounds in the morning and the pavilions in the evening, will dwindle to small proportions.

The only reliable test to prove the excellence of horses which bring large prices is that which competition affords. The most skillful expert will fail, should he endeavor to select from form and breeding, without calling to his aid actual and positive trials. Speed and capacity to keep up rapid movements for designated distances are the main elements of value. To preserve a race of horses which are the best adapted for general use to the highest standard, the race course is an absolute necessity. This crucial test separates the gold from the dross, and while executing this laudable purpose there is also presented an amusement which is highly relished by people in every station of life.

We have yet to see a person who did not give indications of pleasure when witnessing a race in which the contest was close. We have sat or stood by the side of men who claimed to be surprised at the enthusiasm exhibited over brutes, and who also asserted that a race to them would be a tiresome spectacle. We have seen these men wave their hats or handkerchiefs, stamp their feet and clap their hands, and heard them cheer with nearly as much heartiness as the stable boys when the victor gained the Olympian crown. That racing meets a general desire is manifested by the vast assemblages which crowd all the available space when prominent horses are contending, and there is not a civilized country in the world where the feeling of enjoyment is not apparent.

A mass of people, equivalent to the whole adult population of San Francisco, are on the Epsom Downs, the Bois do Bologne, or the Flemington Course, when the Derby, the Grand Prix, or the Melbourne Cup are on the cards, at Long Branch, Monmouth Park, Washington Park, and other Eastern courses, there are large concourses of delighted spectators; and those who attend the State and district fairs of California are well aware that if racing and trotting were abolished the attendance would be diminished fully two-thirds.

The California State Fair is so far superior to any other exhibition, dignified with the title of the State in which it is held, that comparison which will convey a proper idea is troublesome to make. There is not a department which falls short, scarcely one which is not away in the lead. It will be an utter impossibility to retain that proud pre-eminence if the speed department is jeopardized by adverse legislation; and when that is shorn of its fair proportions, all the others will share in its downfall. We have slight fears that either of the dark clouds will cast their baleful shadows over the interests at stake much longer, and sincerely trust that this present Legislature will disperse the gloom.

Speculation on turf sports must be restricted to home contests.

Will you please let me know the breeding of Advocate?

Answer.—Advocate, 6544, by Attorney, 1005, dam Minta by Bashaw, 50; 2d dam Dr. McAllister mare by Sampson (Jones'), son of Canadian Sampson. Bred by Hill and Blanchard, Wilton, Iowa. Passed to Rodman and Lavery, then to A. B. Rodman.

Rodman Scramble Stakes and Los Angeles Derby.

The Southern California Racing Club have entered with hearty zest into the work connected with getting up a race meeting, and hold conferences frequently to see that the various committees are carrying out the details properly. A meeting of the Executive Committee was held on Monday last, and it was decided to reopen the Rodman Scramble Stakes for two-year-olds and also the Los Angeles Derby. It was determined to receive entries for both events up to March 15th. By reference to our advertising columns it will be seen what the conditions are, entrance money, etc. There are several horse owners who have expressed a wish to contend in both these stakes, and the action of the committee will give them the desired opportunity.

Squirrel Killing.

Mr. Gilbert Tomkins, owner of the Souther Farm, whose advertisement appears elsewhere, lives in Alameda County, near San Leandro, a section infested by ground squirrels, and has recently attempted to free his place from the rodents, with gratifying success. In answer to a query as to the methods used, Mr. Tomkins writes:

This is the very best time of the year to kill off these pests. A little expense in this month will save much time and trouble later on.

Many ways have been used in this State to keep the squirrel down. Traps will do well enough for an occasional lone squirrel, but require altogether too much labor when they are present in quantity. Two or three years ago the "smokers" became very popular, and iron cylinders of a great many descriptions, all furnished with some apparatus for blowing smoke into the squirrel holes, were offered in every direction. The lightning-like way in which all of these contrivances have disappeared is proof enough of their ineffectiveness. As one man put the case, "it was far simpler to dig them out and kill them with a club." It required two men to run a smoker with any degree of speed, and what with carting around the machine, the fuel, and other incidentals, very little progress could be made. In addition to this, the machines generally burnt out after about three weeks' use, and cost more to repair than they were worth in the first place.

The carbon bisulphide gas is remarkably effective and there is no possible danger to stock from its use—with the possible exception of the man who uses it. It is quite disagreeable to use, however, is very costly and can be very easily wasted.

We have never found anything to give so much satisfaction in the long run as the poisoned wheat. If this is used in reasonable quantities, either on the very edge or just inside the squirrel-hole the squirrels will eat greedily, there is little risk of killing off birds and practically no risk at all of injuring live stock, as the grain soon becomes so scattered that what any one animal bigger than a squirrel could get hold of would be little more than a medicinal dose. The material is cheap, it can be distributed by one man, and does the work as completely as anything we know of. There are several brands on the market, some of which are perfectly useless. At the Souther farm we have generally used Wakelee's, and it has done very good work.

ROD.

The circular of Robert Ramsbottom, of Manchester, England, a leading fishing gut importer, is at hand. His report on the gut crop of 1888–9 is as follows:

The gut crop of 1888–9, like its predecessor, shows a very marked increase, amounting to nearly ten millions, or fully twenty-five per cent.

This is largely accounted for by greatly increased breeding of silkworms, but they have suffered somewhat from scarcity of food, and consequently have rarely reached the size from which the thickest gut is produced. The stock of stoutest gut, for salmon fishing, will, therefore, be very limited, and this will apply in an almost equal degree to the very finest trout gut, the production being no more than an average crop.

Prices for the current season will be about fifteen per cent lower on the medium thicknesses, in the various kinds, but will remain unchanged on the two extremes of finest and stoutest.

The quality this season is far from uniform, and will demand most judicious selection, or much annoyance will result, as a large quantity of very inferior gut is being forced on the market.

Among the Redwoods.

CHAPTER XIII.

DICK MEDITATES AND RESOLVES.

If life could only be arranged as easily as we make plans for its arrangement, living might be a comparatively cheerful affair. The bother of it is, other people have plans as well as we, and they are not given to asking our advice, either about them or their execution; result, everything at right angles with the points making havoc.

This reflection does not belong to me, good reader, but to Dick. It evolved itself one day, just a week after the arrival of Philip's relatives and their friend, when he was sitting on the left bank of King's Creek, with his briarwood yielding him a comparatively safe, if rather empty solace, and his rod and basket doing duty against a charred stump. Ostensibly he was here for the purpose of fishing; really, he had not dampened his line this morning, and had no immediate intention of doing so, although some of the pools were ideal, and the shade of the canyon delightfully refreshing after the heat and dust of the road.

But condition of mind is everything; inward perturbation robs all scenes of peace. And to one in sorrow or disquiet of any kind, the very Islands of the Blest would but offer a fresh excuse for passion or for tears.

Whether Dick were sorrowful or not would be difficult to determine, but that some cause, near or remote, interfered with his happiness, might be ascertained from his face, which was too scowling and dark for the expression of content supposed to habitually picture itself on the countenance of the ideal angler. And, as a certain passionate exaggeration tinged all his sentiments, it seemed quite according to nature that he should include the inoffensive streams of the neighborhood in his general irritation.

What was he doing here anyhow? he queried, forgetful of the high anticipations with which he had arrived only a fortnight ago. He never did care for fishing; would give more for one day on either fork of the American, with trout that had some life and go to them, than for six months among these paltry shiners. Beside, to be cumbered with a stupid, spidery fellow like Cummings every step! Politeness? Not! And never to get a single turn with Phil, because he was always pirouetting from one woman to another, and looked after by his mother as if he were still an infant in long clothes.

Dick here moved his shoulders, and puffing sharply at his pipe ventured the time-worn reflection that women were always at the bottom of everything disagreeable anyhow. He might have concluded with the further thought that whatever is best and truest they are also at the bottom of; but he was in no mood for so charitable a verdict, because he felt the face which filled him at once with the fullest happiness and the deepest sorrow, stealing into his memory. Poor Dick! he always let the happiness pass unnoticed, and dwelt on the sorrow until he grew savage and tried to curb remembrance. In vain! Under full ban, the saucy eyes grew more real, the delicate, pale cheeks more lifelike, until Rachel, just as we have seen her, shut out from him the May sunshine, the forest peacefulness, and every hope of enjoyment in sport.

Over and over again he agreed that he did not like positive, keen-witted women, and tried to fancy a handsome, slow-moving, non-assertive creature, who knew only obedience and love, but Rachel's image still remained in the ascendant, provoking tenderness against all opposition, until he grew desperate. Why was there no equality between them? If he were not an impecunious, unthrifty devil (I cannot become responsible for Dick's terms, patient reader), living in a small way, with no hope of anything better until his first youth was past, would he have more courage, and she more softness? The probability was she had been trifling, and would trifle on to the end.

Right here, to Dick's credit it must be said, that he had none of the heavy conceit with which Rachel had credited him; instead, it flashed into his mind, without knowing her thought, what a poor part he had played after all, and how right she would be to estimate him a coward. But half the time the apparent impossibility of the whole thing made it seem as if he had dreamed, thinking, perhaps, of Heine's lines:

Ein Fichten-Baum steht einsam
Im Norden auf kahler Hoh!
Ihn schlaefert; mit weisser Decke
Umhuellen ihn Eis und Schnee.
Er traumt von einer Palme,
Die, fern im Morgen-Land,
Einsam und schweigend trauert
Auf brennender Felsen-Wand.

He wished he dared hope that "Einsam und schweigend trauert" was ever applicable to her. No, no, her grace and brightness forbade the thought. How ridiculous he was becoming, like a moon gazer who could do nothing because his eyes were already fastened on the heavens. Everywhere it was the same. Sport? Torture! He would pack his blankets and go home. Philip was jealous half the time, and would be glad to be rid of him, and a promise to return later would easily satisfy Mr. Selden. Worse off he could not be, wherever he went.

Arrived at this conclusion, he drew his pipe from his mouth and sat quite still with bent head while the image of Rachel grew paramount. It was no use, he could not fight it. The desire to see her again, to hear her voice banished more reasonable thoughts, and robbed his will of strength. He seemed drawn to her by a band that coiled itself tighter about him with every effort at release. Was it to be like this always? No peace, no happiness, only constant staring into the blank face of an unsympathetic destiny? How horrible this sense of isolation, of loneliness! How joyless to live in a world where all but the one toward whom he must not look touched the surface and cared nothing for the depths. Depths, were there any? Had he not fancied some quality in himself which bore no existence in fact? Of course. Egoism was cause of half the wretched men in the world. It would be easy enough to go away. The wings of hope always made a great fluttering for small cause, and wisdom said "clip them."

As a result of the last meditation he got up deliberately, put his pipe away, took his rod and basket, and wore off some irritation with a hand to hand encounter with the tangled coppice that seemed to harbor an inclination to keep him down by the stream. When he stood, half an hour later, on a loose bridge of shakes high above the water, and was compelled to make choice between a near path straight across stream and through forest to Myrtle Heights, or a far walk, around by the highway which passed the hotel, he chose the latter, giving as an excuse to his offended pride the reason that by so doing he was more apt to meet a wagon and have his walk lessened. But, unluckily for him, it was nearing the warmest part of the day, when teamsters found more attraction in shade than in heat and dust, and so halted in Lorenzo, and gave thoughtless ramblers no opportunity to recover ground. As a matter of fact Dick was not sorry, for he felt in no mood to manifest an interest in one man's mill, or another man's team, and regarded getting overheated as a very mild evil compared with grinding out words for value received. Once in sight of the hotel he forgot everything in connection with his tramp, and gave a quick, searching look towards the verandah, hoping and fearing with the impulse that swayed him. It was entirely unoccupied. And as the doubt whether he would see what he wished was swallowed up in the certainty that he would not, desire suggested that, being tired, it might do better to rest at the hotel and take luncheon than to rush on to Myrtle Heights and tax Mrs. Morrison's amiability and the resources of her pantry by a return in so Quixotic and unexpected a manner.

It was easy to make the jolly landlord comprehend that the day was entirely too hot for fishing, and easier still to persuade him that a hungry man stood in need of a "bite" at noon. And good taste on his part immediately suggested that this gentleman, whose knowledge of things piscatorial was rich and wonderful, might liven up an otherwise quiet luncheon for the three lady guests, who had been obliged to spend their morning indoors. Dick, however, had not counted on quite so extended an interview, and protested, knowing full well that a flannel fishing shirt and dusty trousers were not exactly the costume in which to present himself before so dignified and elegant a dame as Mrs. Wells.

Protests and excuses of such a sort bore no weight with mine host. "Did not he, on occasion, wear a flannel shirt, and who was any better man?" Against a personal argument of this kind resistance is generally vain, especially if the resistance be of the limping variety, with an undertone of desire, as I blush to confess it was in the case under consideration. To be quite frank concerning Dick, though, he was assailed by a kind of absolute fright while being led across the dining room, until he saw Mrs. Wells put on her eyeglasses and look at him with disapproval, when his independence announced itself, and he was as offensively attentive and polite as he dared be and retain his reputation as a gentleman.

Rachael's mother had never shown any favoritism toward Dick; but, on the contrary, had wasted much time in wondering why her daughter would insist on rating him above Mr. Cummings, who seemed so much better balanced on the question of money and position.

'How can you say this man is so bright, my dear?" she often asked. "Surely we see no evidences of it. He makes neither fortune nor friends, and brightness of that sort is most undesirable. These floating men, who come from nobody knows where, and go nobody knows whither, are always to be avoided. The world exacts something of the people who live in it, beside the reading of books and expressing of opinions. An unsuccessful person has no right to dictate to those who are doing better."

Rachel never thought it necessary to explain that she knew all about Dick's family, and had even seen the house where he was born, because she felt that some other objection would be found. Her mother's opposition to him had troubled her in days when they were good friends, and now the sight of such marked disapproval made her drop her eyes, after the first salutation, and leave the burden of entertainment to Natalie.

This sister was a large, fair woman very like Philip, except that her contour was rounder and her head generally so full of chording sounds that she was apt to be stupid in common places. Dick was rather a favorite here, because, while knowing no more of music than a cobia, he had general intelligence enough not to expect too much of her on other topics, and now and again varied his talk of Rachel with an allusion to Mendelssohn's general cleverness, or a sympathetic remark concerning Beethoven's deafness. None of these happened to be available subjects for the present time, but Dick was not dismayed. If he lacked musical education he was gifted with fine perception and a strong love of the symphonies of nature. The sweet whispering of winds through oak and alder, the glad voicings of streams through forest and low-land, and the tender thrill of bird voices that add a spirit to the loneliest glen, each and all had inscribed on his heart the pure, high tone of melody that needs no touch of human skill for roundness or for strength. And he talked of it all, only as one who feels can talk, with a quiet intensity that won a glance from Rachel, disturbed some of Mrs. Wells' convictions, and aroused in Natalie such appreciation that she involuntarily exclaimed she wished he were a cousin or a brother for sake of his rythmical fancies. Whereat Rachel's cheeks took on a delicate pink glow and Dick felt suddenly absurd. This was an unnecessarily exaggerated state of feeling on his part, and came, without doubt, from that inconvenient and disturbing attribute known as inner consciousness, which has a disagreeable way of announcing its knowledge to the outside world, regardless of individual permission or desire. For conversation being, on the whole, rather a human belonging, partakes of human quality, and must change as the beam tips either up or down; and Dick could not expect to escape the effervescence of Natalie's musical enthusiasm any more than the non-human and very juicy, delicious cherry pie that was served for dessert could avoid the comments on its extra flavor. But something happened to him at the conclusion of luncheon that he had never experienced before—a small, unaccountably mean sensation shot through his body from crown to sole, and he questioned of what new foolishness the next hour might convict him.

It did not matter that Natalie asked for his company on the verandah, or that Mrs. Wells, with all the delightful clearness of which every day converse is capable, ventured to remark against the expediency of fishing "in the hot sun," by way of giving him permission to remain; the sensation strengthened and he seated himself with a silent awkwardness as annoying as new. Perhaps if Rachel had not shown such unprecedented haste to leave the dining room and hurry to the farthest corner of the verandal for sake of a wretched little paper-bound volume, his sense of manly dignity would not have seemed so impaired; but as it was he could do nothing except occupy the edge of a chair, like an unsettled frog on the border of a spring, and listen with polite attention to Natalie's slow, sincere and unvenomed comments on the miserably low taste of the music-loving public.

"Show me a man in love and I'll show you an ass," he said to himself with good old English lucidity, between every pause, while wondering if Rachel's book were made up of funny selections that she smiled so constantly. All this was unbearable enough when Mrs. Wells sat by and occassionally dropped in a word, but when a series of yawns compelled her to go upstairs for the usual afternoon nap, he felt like seizing his hat and dashing into the most impenetrable part of the forest to curse his folly.

Whether by way of leading around to departure or not, I dare scarcely conclude, but he began impetuously to tell Natalie of Erl, how exquisite her voice was, and how one day while showing him the house, she had entered an unused room and uncovered a harp that was once her mother's, and expressed such sorrow that she had so slight a knowledge of an art she felt so sure of loving.

As she listened Natalie underwent a marked change, and became so excited that it was scarcely possible to believe her the passive looking woman of an hour ago. Odd how an accidental touch will sometimes cause a deep vibration!

Even Dick was surprised, so surprised, in fact, that his stinging sensations took themselves off, and without giving due thought to his act he invited Natalie to go with him now to Myrtle Heights and see and hear for herself. It was impossible to avoid looking at Rachel as he spoke, and he thought he detected a slight—a very slight quiver of the lips.

"Should he ask her to go? No, he would not." But Natalie, ignorant of his veiled decision, turned to her sister and said it was quite out of the question that they should go apart from her.

Rachel took the invitation very coldly; laid down her book, yawned, threw an arm above her head, and finally looked down at her symmetrical little feet in their pretty slippers, and said it seemed a dreadful bother to put on boots. Dick was vexed immediately, as she had meant him to be, and asked why she disturbed herself then. She replied, saucily, that she had not, so far, but felt she must, because intuition told her the entire afternoon would be spoiled for him if she did not.

This was so exactly the truth (although no faintest suspicion of it really existed in her mind) that Dick could not resist laughing and saying, "Oh, dear!" in his peculiar way, with a kind of double circumflex accent on the dear, although he was careful, at the same time, not to meet her eyes.

Natalie here began to look anxiously from one to the other, as if, between them, her castle was in danger of being demolished; but Rachel, mindful of the promise given Mr. Selden, finally signified a real desire to accompany them, and after one or two more provoking speeches, went with her sister to make ready, leaving Dick to gather what comfort he could, from a few minutes with his pipe.

THE GREAT HORSE BOOK,

"LIFE WITH THE TROTTERS."

NOW READY.

JOHN SPLAN

Gives the history of the celebrated horses he has driven, and a full account of how they were prepared for their races, chapters on stable management of the trotter, on how he should be made ready for any style of race, on how the old-time trotters were trained, and all about the stable and track history of such famous performers as RARUS, the pacer JOHNSON, WEDGEWOOD, MATTIE HUNTER, CHARLIE FORD, KANSAS CHIEF, KING WILKES, COL. LEWIS, FANNIE WITHERSPOON, MINNIE R., REVENUE, PROTECTION, FRED FOLGER, WILSON, J. Q., CLINGSTONE, GUY, MAMBRINO SPARKLE, DELAIDE, BELLA, BRIGADIER, SWEETSTER, CALMAR, GOV. HILL, BELLE F., OLIVER K., and many others that have at one time and another been in Splan's stable, and to most of them he gave their best records. In fact it will be a comprehensive treatise on the subject of trotters and pacers, and how to drive and train them, by a man whose reputation is world wide. That the book will have a tremendous sale is not a matter of doubt. No work of the kind has appeared since that written by Hiram Woodruff more than twenty years ago, and since then the history of the trotting horse has been made. John Splan has been thirty years with the trotters, and that he should write a book in which there will be an uninteresting line is impossible.

BUDD DOBLE

Tells in a graphic manner the interesting circumstances of how the famous old time trotter, DEXTER, was placed in his hands by Hiram Woodruff when Doble was but a boy; how, in his first race, the youthful driver made the son of RYSDYK'S HAMBLETONIAN beat his best previous record; how he won races with him at all ways of going—in harness, to wagon, and under the saddle, finally terminating a brilliant turf career by beating all the trotting records when he went a mile at Buffalo in 2:17¼. The peculiarities of DEXTER as noted by the man who trained and drove him, are now made public for the first time and the recital is one that cannot fail to interest and instruct every man who reads it.

Mr. Doble's name is known the world over in connection with that of the peerless mare, GOLDSMITH MAID, a wonderful animal in more ways than one, and in this book he tells the public know just how she was trained for her races with other horses, and her exhibition against time. It was with GOLDSMITH MAID that Mr. Doble lowered the trotting record to 2:14, and in addition to being the fastest trotter of her day, she was also a wonderfully intelligent mare. The story of her life on the turf reads like a romance.

T. J. DUNBAR

The rearing, management, and education of trotting bred colts is a subject in which not only breeders, but thousands of men in other walks of life who have a fancy for horse flesh are deeply interested, and no man is better qualified to write on this subject than Mr. Dunbar, who is Superintendent of the Fashion Stud Farm at Trenton, N. J. That he has done so in a manner that is at once entertaining and instructive will be apparent to every reader of the book, and this feature of the work is one that must be read to be fully appreciated. Mr. Dunbar is, first of all, a thorough horseman, a first class driver and trainer, and his mind is of the thoughtful sort and achieves good results in any work to which it is applied. In this book he tells just how a foal should be treated from the hour of its birth until it develops into a full-fledged trotter, and at the same time the narrative is so constructed as to be intensely interesting even to those who do not own a colt. Mr. Robert Bonner says that in securing Mr. Dunbar, the editor of the book has made "a decided acquisition," which is praise enough.

SPLAN drove RARUS in 2:13 1-4; DOBLE drove GOLDSMITH MAID in 2:14, and DUNBAR drove CLINGSTONE in 2:14.

A GRAND AUCTION SALE.

ON THE 28th INST.

There will be sold by

KILLIP & CO.,

AT AUCTION,

ON THE

Bay District Course,

In the neighborhood of

Twenty Horses,

Belonging to the estate of the late H. W. SEALE.

It will be a remarkable offering, among them, being an own brother to Alfred S., Sunflower, with a record of 2:28, and others of great promise, got by Elmo, Anteeo, Fallis and Clay. The mixture of Electioneer and Elmo blood can scarcely fail to produce a high rate of speed, and this will be proved to be no speculative idea, as they will be shown in harness previous to the sale, enough will be seen to warrant the highest expectations. As a rule, the horses bred by Mr. Seale are of fine size and of handsome form, elements of value as well as a high rate of trotting speed.

BONANZA.

This Highly Bred Trotting Stallion

Will make the season of 1889 at the OAKLAND TROTTING PARK, commencing June 5th, and extending to July 1st.

TERMS.

$10 for the season. Due care taken to prevent accidents and escapes, but no responsibilities assumed. Mares kept in any manner desired and at reasonable rates. Pasture inside of the Oakland track at $5 per month.

PEDIGREE.

Bonanza was bred by A. Waldstein of San Francisco, BY ARTHURTON.

His dam, the dam of Albert W., record 2:20, by John Nelson. He is one of the purest gaited trotters imaginable, and his record of 2:29 is no measure of his speed. He is nearly 16 hands, a very handsome shade of chestnut, and of commanding form.

Address,

RICHARD HAVEY,

Oakland Trotting Park.

FOR SALE.

Two Nutwood Stallions

One is Bay, dam by G. M. Patchen. He is nine years old, never been trained, shows lots of speed, has taken several premiums at our County Fairs as a Roadster Stallion. His name is BAYWOOD black legs, mane and tail, and free driver. Weighs 1,200 pounds; 16 hands high, and is a sound horse.

FLEETWOOD is eight years old, dam by Young America, is sorrel, looks like his sire, fine style and lots of action; close to 16 hands, and weighs 1,100 pounds. In perfect health; good mane and tail. All they want is work to make them trot better than 20, as they are bred right for speed and staying qualities, and has had the best of care up to the present time.

Horses can be seen at my Stable, corner THIRD AND EMPIRE STREETS, SAN JOSE.

Veterinary Dentistry.

R. WATKINS,

VETERINARY DENTIST,

Of twelve years practice, is now permanently located in San Francisco, and may be found at C. S. Crittendens' Club Stables, 409 Taylor street.

Will treat ailments of the horse's mouth, and cure all such. Sidestein Pullers and Tounge Lollers, etc.

R. WATKINS.

Arab Sold.

James Golden, Esq., of Boston, was not satisfied with the glorious climate of which the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN tendered him the freedom, but becoming convinced that he had nothing in his own stable as good as Arab, he fulfilled a desire and purchased that game trotter from the owners Messrs. Hickok, Ramsdell and Williams, the price stated being $10,000. Mr. Golden has intimated that the purchase was made for a Boston gentleman who was willing to pay a good round sum for a very fast horse, to use as a road animal, but there is another rumor current that Arab will be seen on the big circuit next season, and that the reins will be held by "Gentleman James." Arab was bred by the late Colonel Frye, and is by Arthurton, dam Lady Hambleton. His best time is 2:15.

A Race Track for Vallejo.

The good people of Vallejo have finally awakened to the importance of having a first class race track, and several meetings have been held in furtherance of the project. Dr. Trull has been the prime mover in the affair, and deserves credit for his indefatigable efforts in behalf of the sport loving public. A meeting to conclude the necessary arrangements was arranged for yesterday, but at too late an hour for us to get a report in this week's BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN. The following gentlemen, of Vallejo and vicinity, are identified with the track:

Messrs. James Smith, A. J. McPike, J. M. Thompson, Henry Connolly, John Callender, John Brownlie, D. W. Harrier, R. Miller, E. McLees, William Carter, M. Carroll, J. Corcoran, R. Gore, John Gore, J. McManus, F. M. Denio, O. L. Henderson, P. C. Lynch, John and Joseph Wilson, J. Steffen, T. McGrane, Mrs. Drake, Sam Rule and others.

The track as proposed would be one of the best and fastest in the State. The lay of the ground is excellent, and from any portion of the grounds a full view could be had of a race. The track was surveyed by F. W. Simonton eight months ago, but the field has since been in grain, and most of the stakes have been removed, hence it will be necessary to survey it again. The length would be 2,100 feet, and the width 840 feet. The entrance would be at the corner of Solano and Park avenues. The grand stand would be placed on the Solano avenue side, and the stables on the Park avenue side of the grounds. The Board of Trustees will be asked to have Georgia street opened out to Solano avenue, and when this is done there will be a straight road from the end of Goorgia street wharf to the race track entrance.

"The American Dominions."

"Break O' Day" writing from England to the Chicago Horseman, says:

Respecting the unfounded report that Ormonde had been sold to the United States, I understand that the Argentine Republic would have given the sum mentioned for him, and if he is to be sold at all are to have the first refusal. A contemporary has a story to the effect that when the Americans bought Priam and Glencoe they were anxious to purchase Touchstone, which was owned by the Marquis of Westminster, the owner of Ormonde's grandfather. Three commissioners came over and asked the price of the thoroughbred. The answer was, "The American Dominions." The interview was held at Eaton Hall, and the authority for the story was the Earl of Wilton, the Marquis' younger brother.

On Breaking Colts.

A few days ago I had a chat with J. T. Dunbar, says Albemarle in the N. Y. Spirit of the Times, on handling colts, and he expressed himself as opposed to this everlasting jogging that so many are knocked out by. When you start up a colt in a field and he goes off on a trot, he moves without touching a hair, and if he can be broken without losing that way of going a pure gait will be established. The only way to reach that end is by sharp work at regular intervals, never letting a colt get leg weary or tangled up so that he does not know where to put his feet. All the youngsters that I have broken at Fashion Farm are handled that way, and their gait is established before half of them know what is expected of them. On the other hand, by jogging colts I find that they soon loose a big open gait that they have been fortunate enough to inherit, and in a week or two a pair of scalpers will be required. Then you have to keep your eyes open every time a colt leaves his feet. Training horses is just the same as training men, and no athlete can ever attain any records without sharp work and plenty of it. Of course he must not take enough to make his muscle sore, neither must a colt, but those same muscles will never stand a severe strain if they are not keyed up to it.

LONGWORTH.

High Bred Trotting Stallion.

WILL BE FOUR YEARS OLD IN MARCH.

Dark Bay, Black Points, by Sidney.

OWNED BY A. C. DIETZ, OAKLAND.

Also the owner of Bay Stallion Ringwood, four years old, by Sidney, half brother to Longworth, which has showed trials over the Oakland Track, 2:30; quarters, in 34 seconds—2:16 gait —as a three-year old.

LONGWORTH, for finish, style and form cannot be excelled by any four-year-old horse in the State. His g it is perfect; going low to the ground, with smooth, easy motion, and has shown wonderful speed with but two month's work. As a two-year-old, he showed a 2:40 gait; as a three-year-old showed—trial—full mile over the Oakland track, 2:26; half mile, 1:10; quarters, 34 seconds; eighths, 16 seconds—a 2:08 gait.

Longworth is the result of a long line of distinguished ancestors, endowed with speed on the sire and dams' side that follows back for generations—consequently he cannot help but produce great speed.

He is half brother to the great three-year-old Adonis, record 2:14¼.

Memo, three-year-old trial, 2:20½.
Sister V., two-year-old trial, 2:32.
St. Nicholas, three-year-old trial, 2:27¼.
Ringwood, three-year-old trial, 2:30.
Miss Sidney, one-year-old trial, half mile, 1:38.
Brown colt, three-year-old trial, 2:40.
Sorrel colt, two-year-old trial, quarter, 34 seconds, and a number more that have shown remarkable speed. One yearling that has shown one-eighth of a mile in 16 1-5 seconds—a 2:10 gait.

Sidney, the sire of Longworth, has a record of 2:19¾; Santa Claus, the grand sire, has a record of 2:17½; Sweetness, the grandam, record 2:21½; Strathmore, the sire of Santa Claus, has twenty-two that have trotted below 2:30; Volunteer, the sire of Sweetness, has twenty-six that have trotted below 2:30. Volunteer is the sire of St. Julian, record 2:11¾.

Longworth's first dam Grey Dale, the dam of Daisy C., Silver Threads, and grandam of Phaeola; Grey Dale by American Boy, Jr.; he by American Boy, the sire of Bodine nt. Sire and dam Grey Poll by Winfield Scott, by Edward Everett; third dam Sorrel Poll by Sir Henry; fourth dam Daughter of Printer.

All letters pertaining to the service of this horse should be addressed to J. J. FAIRBANKS, Oakland, Alameda County, Cal.

TERMS: Fifty dollars, payable at the end of the season or sooner if the mares are taken away. Season will close June 15th, 1889. The number of mares limited to twenty-five. The Fast Trotting Stallion

JIM L.

DESCRIPTION.

JIM L was foaled May 14, 1881. He is a chestnut sorrel, stands 16 hands high, and weighs 1200 pounds.

PEDIGREE.

JIM L. was sired by Dan Voorhees (record 2:23½), dam Grace by Uncle Sam, out of Kit (or the Chloroform mare). Dan Voorhees was sired by General Mcclellen, by North Star, dam Black Swan (record 2:28½) by David Hill (858), by Vermont Black Hawk (5), dam by Liberty, son of Bishop's Hambletonian; dam a Morgan mare by Ethan Allen.

PERFORMANCES.

JIM L trotted three races in 1887, and closed a season with a record of 2:30½. In 1888 he trotted five races and gained a record of 2:20½ at the Bay District Track, San Francisco, on October 24th, in the first heat of a race in which the other starters were Junio, Alio, Ha Ha and Argent.

He has shown quarters at a 2:15 gait; is a FAST AND RELIABLE TROTTER, and is possessed of a remarkable amount of "bottom." He has served two seasons in the stud, is a sure foal getter, and has a number of promising colts.

TERMS.

Forty dollars for the season, $25 for single service. Mares sent from a distance will be properly cared for at reasonable terms, but no responsibility for accidents or escapes. Good pasturage furnished at $2.50 per month.

The Thoroughbred Stallion

Judge McKinstry,

Will make the Season of 1889, from March 1 to July 1, at San Felipe Rancho, near Gilroy.

PEDIGREE.

DESCRIPTION.

JUDGE McKINSTRY is a bright bay with black points, 15¾ hands in height, of a conformation combining power and speed. His breeding is one that cannot be excelled. The fam lies on both sides being noted for their gameness and fleetness. Speakin of JUDGE McKINSTRY, Matt Storm, the well-known trainer, says: "He is the fastest race-horse I ever saw on the Sacramento track. He has shown me trials that were marvelous, one especially of a mile and a quarter that was ahead of the present record." He was started in several races when not in condition to run, and even then developed an amount of speed that is characteristic of the noted families from which he descends. His performances are too well known to need repetition here. Good judges of horses state positively that there can be no doubt of his sire, as he is a perfect picture of Grinstead, but rule compels us to name both sires.

TERMS: $75 payable when the mare is moved from ranch, or, $100, with the usual privilege. Good pasturage, $3 per month. Mares at owners risk. All communications must be addressed to

GROVER CLAY,

Bay Stallion, bred by Hon. W. M. Traylor, San Francisco. Foaled 1883. By ELECTIONEER.

First dam MAGGIE NORFOLK by NORFOLK, son of Lexington.
Second dam by BILLY CHEATHAM.
Third dam by DORSEY'S GOLDDUST.

GROVER C is a very handsome shaue of bay, 15¾ hands high, and showing as much quality as a majority of thoroughbreds. He is as square-gaited a trotter as can be, and has shown a great deal of speed for the amount of handling. Has been worked very little, though he can show a thirty gait or better whenever called upon.

TERMS.

Fifty dollars the season, payable at time of service. Proper care will be taken, but no responsibility incurred for accidents or escapes. Mares will be pastured inside of the Oakland Trotting Park, which is especially safe, having two fences which give ample security against escape. There is a never-failing stream of water which runs through the field, and the food is good.

Season commencing first of January and ending the first of July.

This is the only son of Electioneer standing in Alameda County, and the high breeding on the side of his dam is a guarantee that his colts will inherit qualities already made famous through the mixture of Electioneer and Lexington blood. Ansel, 2:20, is from a Lexington mare, and Sunol's granddam, two-year-old record 2:18, was by Lexington, both Sunol and Ansel by Electioneer, Lexington the sire of Norfolk.

The Sultan Stallion

SOUDAN, No. 5103

Black Standard Bred Stallion, Foaled 1884, Stands a trifle over 16 Hands, bred by L. J. ROSE, Los Angeles.

TWO-YEAR-OLD RECORD.....2:32½
THREE-YEAR-OLD RECORD 2:30

Sired by Sultan (1513), record 2:24. The get of his sire include the GREAT STAMBOUL, 2:14¼, at six year old; ALCAZAR, 2:20½; EVA, 2:23½; KISMET, three-year old, 2:25½; LE GRANGE, 2:23½; RUBY, 2:19½; SWEETHEART, three-yea-old, 2:22½, and ten others in 2:30 or better.

Sultan's sire THE MOOR (870), has six to his credit in the 2:30 list, and sired the dams of the three fastest 3-year-olds in the world, viz, SABLE WILKES, 2:18; BELL BOY, 2:19¼ and HINDA ROSE, 2:19¾.

Soudan's dam Lady Babcock by Whipple's Hambletonian (725). The sire of Graves, 2:19, and 14 other in the 2:30 list; also the sire of the dams of DAWN, 2:19½, and MORTIMER, 2:27, g d, the DUBOISE MARE by a son of the EATON HORSE (122); the sire of STRANGER, 2:30; VILLAGE GIRL, 2:28, and SHEPPARD KNAPP, 2:27¾; also the sire of the dams of J. G. MORRILL, 2:29, LOTHAIR, 2:29½, and SAM CURTIS, 2:28.

Note—LADY BABCOCK is also the dam of ELECTOR by ELECTIONEER, with a record of 2:21¼.

SOUDAN'S record, 2:30, was made in the fourth heat of race on the San Jose track.

SOUDAN will serve a limited number of approved mares at $100 for the season, with the privilege of return if they do not prove in foal.

He will make the season of 1889 at MOORLAND STOCK FARM, half a mile west of Milpitas, on the Alviso Road. Pasturage $3 per month. Care taken to prevent accidents and escapes, but no responsibility in any case.

All bills must be paid before the animal is removed. For further particulars, address

MEMO.

The Fast Trotting Stallion, the Best Son of Sidney.

He was bred by G. Valensin at the Arno Stock Farm, Sacramento County, California; foaled spring of 1885.

By Sidney.
First dam Flirt by Buccaneer.
Second dam Mohaska Belle by Flaxtail.
Third dam by John the Baptist.

Sidney by Santa Claus, 2:17½, his dam Sweetness, 2:21¼. Strathmore, the son of Santa Claus, has 22 of his get which have trotted in 2:30 or better, up to close of 1887, several having entered since, and Volunteer, the sire of Sweetness, has 26 in the same list. Buccaneer is the sire of Shamrock, two-year-old record 2:25, and of Flight, 2:29, and in him are combined the strains of Long Island Blackhawk, Vermont Blackhawk, and the dam of Rysdyk's Hambletonian. Flaxtail figures prominently in both pacing and trotting descendants, and is the sire of the dam of Apex, 2:26, Flight, 2:29, J. H. McCormack, 2:29, and Shamrock, 2:25.

PERFORMANCES.

Memo only trotted in public in his two-year-old form, obtaining a record of 2:49, though he was close to Grandee in a race on the Bay District Track, the second heat of which was made in 2:31½, the first in 2:32. He exhibited phenomenal speed when three years old, and had it not been for a slight strain of his fore fetlock there is little question that he would have shown in public very close to the best record. On the Oakland track he was timed a mile in 2:20½, and frequently trotted quarters in from 32½ to 34 seconds.

DESCRIPTION.

He is nearly if not quite sixteen hands high, and of powerful build throughout. His color is a glossy black, with both fore-feet white and a touch of white on his off hind quarters. His disposition is all that could be desired, and his actions superb.

TERMS: One hundred dollars the season, which will commence on the 5th of February and close on the 1st of July. Due care will be taken of mares, but no responsibility for accidents or escapes.

Mares taken and kept as desired by the owners, and at reasonable rates.

Pasturage at $5 per month within the track enclosure; feed first rate, and a living stream of water in the field. There is a double protection against escape, as in addition to a strong fence on the i side of the track, the gates of the outer fence are enclosed at night, which gives almost positive assurance of safety. ALMONT PATCHEN.

Pacing Record 2.15.

Sire JUANITO, dam Gildey, by GLADIATOR, the sire of James H. 2:21, Boss 2:29¼, and the pacer Damiana 2:26¼; second dam by HENRY BELMONT, third dam a Sir Archie mare. JUANITO is by Tilton Almont, record 2:26, dam Berlcia by Signal (Singleterry's Rattler), sire of Marysville Queen, wagon record 2:26, and the pacers Prussian Maid 2:19, Carrie T. 2:20¼, and Handy Andy 2:29½, second dam a mare bought of J. W. Moore of Marysville, Cal., from the Harper Stock Farm in Kentucky. Tilton Almont, 2:26, is the sire of Daisy S. 2:23½ and is by the grandson of Almont, dam by Clark Chief. Henry Belmont is a full brother to Venture 2:27¼, being by Williamson's Belmont, dam Miss Mostyn, by American Boy, Jr., second dam Fannie Mostyn by Grey Medoc.

To his excellent blood lines Almont Patchen adds performances which show him a worthy descendant of famous families. He is a large, well-formed, rangy and stylish horse, of great power and unsurpassed staying qualities, and cannot fail to get fast and useful horses. In 1886 he started in Chico and in Sacramento in two races, winning both, making in the latter a record of 2:23.

In 1888 ALMONT PATCHEN started in eight races, winning six and coming in second in the other two. In his last race at the Bay District Track, San Francisco, he defeated Adonis and Belmont Boy, making a record of 2:15. A few days later, in private, he paced a mile in 2:18½ on same track.

Almont Patchen will make the season of '89 at the Race Track, San Jose, commencing February 1st and ending in May.

TERMS: $100 for the season, payable when mare is bred. Good pasturage furnished at five dollars per month. All mares taken at owner's risk. For further particulars address,

Thoroughbred Stallion

RATHBONE.

RATHBONE IS A VERY HANDSOME SHADE of brown, the only white a small star in forehead. He is of almost unexceptionable form. 15 hands 3 inches in height, of immense power and substance, and also of the highest quality.

He was never in "order" to run, and yet he has shown well, better by far than could have been expected under the circumstances.

March 11, 1886, on the Bay District course, carrying 5 pounds over-weight (115 lbs.) he defeated, in a stake for two-year-olds, Voltigeur, C. H. Todd, Notitle and Leap Year, the 1st mile being run in 49¾ seconds. He has shown quarters in 23 seconds, and is so stoutly bred that he could hardly fail to go a distance at a high rate of speed.

His blood lines could not be improved. His sire, Young Prince, is the only stallion that I can recall imported from England to the United States with near strains of Stockwell and King Tom blood, these noted horses being the paternal and maternal grandsires of Young Prince. The family of his dam, Lady Amanda, ranks high among the noted clans of America. Malcolm, Regent, Ontario, McWhirter, Lady Middleton, etc. The following is a tabulated pedigree:

RATHBONE.

- Young Prince (imported.)
  - Knowsley.
    - Stockwell.
    - Orlando mare.
  - Queen of Spain...
    - King Tom.
    - Ma Mie.
- Lady Amanda...
  - Hurrah (imported.)
    - Newminster.
    - Jovial.
  - Lady Lancaster...
    - Monarch, (imported.)
    - Lady Canton.

Lady Canton, by imported Tranby, and running from there through the noted race-mare Mary Randolph, by Gohanna, to Lord Egremont's Highflyer mare. Stockwell, King Tom, Newminster and Monarch, the best sons of The Baron, Rataplan, Touchstone and Emilius, and the dams of the same remove, by Orlando, Jerry (a St. Leger winner), Pay Middleton and imported Tranby, present such a combination of ultra fashionable blood as is rarely equalled. Young Prince was bred by James Smith, England; foaled 1870. See English Stud Book, Vol. XIII., page 363.

With proper mares there is no question that RATHBONE will get race horses, with a certainty of getting, from any good mares, valuable horses for harness and saddle, with a fair show of a fast trotter, as RATHBONE is a capital road-horse and shows a good gait without any trotting practice further than occasional drives on the road. He is one of the "best disposed" horses imaginable without trick or vice of any kind.

In order to place his services within the reach of those who feel that they cannot pay the high price demanded for fast trotting sires, his services are put at the exceedingly low price of $25 the season.

NOONDAY.

No Record, Foaled 1884.

Standard No. 10,000.

THIS CELEBRATED TROTTING-BRED STALLION will be limited to 40 mares the ensuing season at Oakland Trotting Park, Oakland, Cal., commencing February 1st and ending July 1st, at $100 the season, with the usual privilege of returning the mare next season if not proving in foal. The names of his patrons will be entered on his book in order of their application. He will be limited strictly to forty mares. Pasturage at five dollars per month, hay and grain extra.

NOONDAY, sired by Wedgewood (602), record, the fourth heat, 2:19, (sire of Favonia, record, fourth heat, 2:19, and Nugget, record 2:26, he the sire of Nettie Leaf, four-year-old record 2:23¾), and five others better than 2:26.

First dam Noontide, record 2:20¾, by Harold (113), sire of Maud S., record 2:08¾, Mattie Graham, 2:21¾, and 17 others in 2:30.

Second dam Midnight (the dam of Jay-Eye-See, record 2:10), by Pilot Jr., sire of the dam of Maud S., 2:08¾, Nutwood, 2:18¾.

First dam (the dam of Woodford Mambrino, 2:21), by Woodford (thoroughbred son of Kosciusko), he by Sir Archy.

NOONDAY is well formed, evenly balanced and handsome; his color is dark seal brown, small star, right hindfoot white, 15 1¾ inches high, weight 975 lbs., strong back and good gaited, short and rapid, and will make a fast and game campaigner.

Breeders will please remember that this horse is not owned by me. I have only leased him for two years for the benefit of the State and breeders on account of the speedy lines and blood that this State is in need of, and no stallion now in public service can show a pedigree with such fast records as enrich the blood of NOONDAY.

I will also handle and train a few horses for gentlemen at fair terms. Address

ELECTIONEER STALLION

EROS,

Standard No. 5326.

Electioneer, his sire, has more 2:20 trotters than any living horse, and more 2:30 trotters than any stallion LIVING OR DEAD.

Eros has a record of 2:29½, made in the fifth and deciding heat against a field of eight horses in his maiden race, and with only four weeks preparation after coming out of the stud.

Progeny.

Eros had last fall but three colts trained; the oldest a three-year-old trotter, an exhibition mile during the San Jose Fair in 2:34, last quarter in 36½ seconds. A two-year-old (timed by the judges) made a mile in 2:46½, and the other two year old in 2:47. All of these trials being made without a single skip, and none of these colts had then been handled three months from the bitting harness.

TERMS: $50 for the season, from February 1st to July 1, 1889. Due at time of service.

THREE CHEERS

Will make the Season of 1889 at Oakland Race Track, Oakland, Alameda County.

Pedigree.

Newminster by Touchstone (winner St. Leger 1831), dam Beeswing (winner of 34 races out of 61 starts by Dr. Syntax (winner Doncaster Cup 1837, 40, 41, 42, the only horse that ever accomplished that feat.)

THREE CHEERS is bred in the speediest and stoutest lines. His dam, Young Fashion was the dam of Surprise, Scotland (the only horse that ever beat Asteroid a heat), Liverpool, Columbia and Bonnie Kate, the dam of Little Buttercup and the flying Bonnie Lizzie. His grandam, Fashion, was the greatest race mare of her era, defeating Boston in that historical match at four-mile heats, that is recorded as one of the greatest events in the annals of the turf. He is thoroughly sound in wind and limb, his family on both sides being noted for their exemption from curbs, spavins, roaring, or any other hereditary unsoundness. Horsemen, who can appreciate the highest type of the thoroughbred, are specially invited to inspect Three Cheers.

TERMS: $75 for the season. Mares not proving with foal can be returned the next season free of charge. Good pasturage at $5 per month. Mares cared for in any manner owners may desire, and fed on hay and grain, either or both, at reasonable rates. None but competent grooms employed, but no responsibility assumed for accidents or escapes.

N. B.—Mares sent from a distance in care of J. W. Morshead City Front Stables, San Francisco, will be forwarded without delay.

OSSIDINE

KALAMAZOO, Mich., Sept. 15, 1888.

GENTLEMEN:—We have used Ossidine for the past two years and consider it invaluable for Sprung Tendons, Curbs, Ringbone and Spavins; there is nothing equals it; and for us it effected a permanent cure where firing failed, although performed by one of the most successful veterinarians on the continent. We have recommended it to others with like success, and believe it has more merit than any blister ever used.

Very respectfully yours, S. A. BROWNE & Co., Prop's.

This scientific preparation is an absolute cure for all bony or callous lumps on horses, and is a more powerful absorbent than "firing," without creating the slightest blemish. After a few applications the excrescence is so palpably reduced that even the skeptical frankly acknowledge that it is by far the most valuable outward remedy for horses ever invented.

The ONLY preparation in the world that will remove a Bone Spavin after it has become ossified.

Price $3 00 per Large Bottle,

Sole Agents for United States and Canada.

Owner of Eole, St. Saviour, Eolist, etc, says; I have long used it in my stables, and find it to be all that is claimed for it in removing callous and unnatural bony growths, without leaving the slightest blemish. From my experience, I most strongly recommend the use of Ossidine, and feel that it is a necessary adjunct to every stable. Yours respectfully,

The above stallions will make the season of 1889 at the Souther Farm, one and one-half miles northeast of San Leandro. Each horse is limited to thirty mares besides those of the Souther Farm. Terms, for either horse, Twenty-five Dollars for the season, with privilege of return in season of 1890, if mare fails to prove with foal. Good accommodation and the best of care for all mares sent to the Farm, but no responsibility for accidents.

ELECTION.

Bred at Palo Alto. Foaled 1884.

It is some time since we presented a picture of an Electioneer, the one preceding the above being that of the famous Sunol. To take much space in praise of the get of the son of Hambletonian and Green Mountain Maid would be rehearsing an oftentimes repeated tale. Conceded to be the most wonderful trotting stallion of any age when extreme speed is the test, his progeny with nearly invariable certainty exhibiting high form. Level-headed, docile, handsome, these are a combination of good qualities difficult to surpass. The blood of Electioneer has "nicked" with so many strains that it would seem that he was bound to exert his "potency" irrespective of the blood of the dams, and when there is proper form on the side of the mare there is little danger of disappointment.

That the son, whose picture is presented, has inherited the family characteristics of good looks, will be readily acknowledged, and when to the accurate resemblance is added the further recommendation of being one of the handsomest shades of bay, the face lightened with a star, and three white feet, with a height of 15½ hands, and muscular development sufficient to weigh 1,075 pounds, he is altogether a taking horse That with three month's training he could trot a mile in 2:30 also proves that he has fallen heir to speed lines, and the breeding on the side of his dam will warrant the expectation that he will "keep on improving" until a high rate has been reached. The pedigree is as follows:

BY ELECTIONEER.

First dam Lizzie H. by Whipple's Hambletonion.

Second dam Lizzie Harris by Comus.

Third dam by Arnold Harris.

Green's Bashaw, by Vermont's Black Hawk (a son of Long Island Black Hawk), his dam by Tom Thumb; grandam The Chas. Kent Mare, the dam of Rysdyk's Hambletonian.

Thus Election has two strains of the "Hero of Chester," with the addition of the blood of both the celebrated Black Hawks, twice in descent from Grand Bashaw, and last, though not least, an infusion of the champion of his time, American Eclipse. These are all noted families, and few will deny that the tribe which has sprung from the imported Barb will rank next to the descendants of Mambrino, the greatest son of Messenger. The Vermont Black Hawk (Hill's) is found in many celebrated horses, so that with the exception of Mambrino Chief and Pilot Jr., the various clans are united in the subject of this brief sketch.

Thoroughbred in the Trotter—Both Sides.

Harvey W. Peck.

Over this subject the "hoss" writers of late years have lashed themselves into impotent and vigorous rage. The believers in the efficacy of thoroughbred blood have held their own against all comers. The editors and authors who decry "running foolishness" are bitter and uncompromising in their opposition and arguments. While there are some conservative ones who appreciate the merits of both sides, the great mass are radical, either one way or the other. Some like a mixture of hot blood, but about two removes from the ideal trotter they are conjuring up in their minds. These gentlemen assume a wise air, and say loftily, "Yes, yes, about the grandam you know; can have her nearly thoroughbred, but don't want it any closer." Another says plaintively, "If I wish to breed a trotter would I go to running blood? Does running blood trot?" While a third touches the harp as follows: "You see, running horses have been trained to gallop for generations. They have inherited this tendency from ancestors trained to gallop, and gallop fast. It is natural to suppose that no benefit could accrue from crossing thoroughbred and trotter close up."

It is seemingly strange that any man of intelligence, bent upon ascertaining the truth, unbiased by previous teachings, sufficiently honest to follow his convictions to a logical conclusion, can not see both sides. The most substantial evidence that can be adduced is found in the records of past years. A man who claims that faster, gamer, and greater race horses have come from a trotting sire, coupled with a mare by a thoroughbred horse, advances an argument that has no foundation in fact. Again, the man who claims that the greatest, fastest and most level headed campaigners have been those who could boast no running blood in their veins, (or if any, far removed), states something the past years do not substantiate. Between the two, honors are easy. I shall, before I leave this subject, mention a list of stallions whose fastest performer was from a mare sired by a running bred or thoroughbred horse.

Before, however, touching this list, I would call the attention of horsemen and amateurs alike to a horse known to some as Seeley's American Star. This horse was foaled in 1837. He was sired by Stockholm's American Star, owned and run as a race horse, producing Seeley's American Star at the age of 14 years. Stockholm's American Star was a son of Duroc. The dam of Seeley's American Star was a mare called Sally Slouch by Henry, and her dam was by imp. Messenger. This horse Henry, it will be remembered, was one of the contestants in the great race in 1823, when the Northern men defied the world with American Eclipse. The Southern gentlemen produced Henry, and a race at four miles heats took place that has been called by some authorities the most memorable event of American turf history. Henry won the first four mile heat in 7 minutes 37½ seconds, Eclipse winning the next two heats and the race. While therefore Seeley's American Star may not with propriety be termed technically thoroughbred—in our day five removes of thorough blood on both sides constituting a thoroughbred—he was certainly a running bred horse, sired by a race horse; his dam sired by a race horse; his grandam sired by a race horse. Mr. H. T. Helm, an instructive and and painstaking writer, has this to say in his work entitled "American Roadsters and Trotting Horses."

"Hambletonian (Rysdyk's) achieved much of his fame from the produce of Star mares. He had access to many of them, as their sire had spent most of his life in the same country, and as a family they were already noted for the high trotting qualities which have since distinguished the union of the bloods. The combination that gave us Dexter, Jay Gould, Socrates, Huntress, Startle, Dictator, Gauntlet, Wilkin's Micawber, Aberdeen, and a long list of other celebrities, are possessed of great speed, bottom and game to the very last, is one well worthy of the most careful study. High breeding is the first characteristic that strikes the beholder. No horse can show a more genuine thoroughbred type to-day than Dexter. (Mr. Helm wrote this 13 years ago, before Dexter's death.) In point of temper, unflinching courage and game to the point of desparation, no thoroughbred family can surpass them. For ready trotting action, true poise of body, steady stroke, and all that makes up purity of gait in a trotter, they stand as a family without a rival or a peer. In point of form they are a wide departure from that of Hambletonian and the average of his family. They are smaller and finer in form. The Abdallah features of the head are displaced by one of a thoroughbred caste, full of fire and beauty."

American Star is to-day conceded one of the greatest brood mare sires the world has ever seen. Star, Pilot Jr., and Sayre's Harry Clay are the great brood mare sires outside Rysdyk's Hambletonian. American Star to-day leads the quartette. He is at present the sire of the dams of the following trotters, forty in all:

Alma	2:28¼	Jay Gould	2:20½
Astoria	2:29½	Joe Bunker	2:19½
Dexter	2:17½	Josh Billings	2:29¾
Artillery	2:21¼	Kisbar	2:27¾
Modesty	2:26¾	Pickering	2:30
Billy K	2:25½	Lady Blessington	2:27
Boss K	2:25½	Lady Morrison	2:27½
Carrie	2:24¼	Orange Blossom	2:26½
Charlie Champlin	2:21¼	Orange Bud	2:29¼
Chester	2:27	Maud	2:29½
Enfield	2:29	Nettie	2:18
Dexter	2:17	Orange Girl	2:20
Driver	2:19½	Pickwick	2:29½
Eva	2:25½	Powers	2:21
Grace	2:27	Repton	2:26
Hambletonian's Last	2:75¼	Robert McGregor	2:17½
Happy Jack	2:30	Madeline	2:23¾
Harvest Queen	2:29½	Star Duroc	2:25½
Huntress	2:20½	Starletta	2:23½
Trio	2:23¾	Young Sentinel	2:26

It will be seen that this list comprises some of the greatest race-horses and campaigners that have appeared on the American trotting track. The adherents of no "running foolishness" can hardly be compelled to acknowledge that a trotter's dam was sired by a thoroughbred or running-bred horse. They even carry it to such a strait that before they will acknowledge it, they will write "unknown" after the dam. This course is pursued by John H. Wallace, the editor of "Wallace's Monthly," and the compiler of the Trotting Register. Mr. Wallace is very positive in his views, and his dislike of hot blood in the trotter is deep seated, but it would look better to say dam by Lexington, dam by Lance, when there was a reasonable assurance of its correctness, than to put "dam unknown!"

Mr. Helm is another very pleasant and agreeable writer who will not down where proof is offered. In speaking of Edward Everett, a stallion sired by Rysdyk's Hambletonian, and whose dam was by imp. Margrave, second dam by Trumpator, third dam by Lindsay's Arabian, etc. Mr. Helm acknowledges that Everett had a skin of the finest texture, and a coat of hair whose glossiness was not equaled by any son of the same sire that he had seen, he nevertheless refuses to believe that a horse bred that way could sire as many meritorious trotters as Everett did, all from common mares. Judge Fullerton was one, sired by Everett, from a mare of unknown breeding, and in a country and at a time when there was not a tithe of the good mares we now have. All horsemen know Fullerton was a lasting and game campaigner. Mr. Helm contends that he can measure a horse's bones and tell as much or more of his blood than could his breeder. To be sure he don't say so, but such is the inference.

It is a trifle amusing to see men at this day and age, who dislike excessively to state that a great horse's dam was sired by a running horse, write up some horse and call him strictly trotting-bred—"sired by Geo. Wilkes, dam by American Star! !" He exclaims triumphantly, "There's the kind of pedigree I like. Don't contain any running blood, etc." American Star was quite a trotter, but may I be allowed to ask if he had any trotting blood in him?

I would not have any reader suppose that I am all upon the side of warm blood, and think the way to raise trotters is to breed trotting stallions to thoroughbred mares. A horse whose dam is by Rysdyk's Hambletonian, Almont, Geo. Wilkes, Dictator, Electioneer or Happy Medium is quite good enough for me. But I do contend that for road horses especially, a strong dash of thoroughbred gives a fine coat of hair, a bony, fine head, hard legs and good feet, and an ability to come back from the other end of the road.

It would seem appropriate to mention the name of Mambrino Patchen in this connection. His sire was Mambrino Chief and his dam was by Gano! He was full brother to the great early day trotter, Lady Thorn, 2:18½! Here is a horse sired by a trotter—and that trotter out of a running-bred mare! His dam was a thoroughbred mare by Gano I am one of the people who believe, and unchangably believe, that imported Messenger was thoroughbred. There is no dispute of this fact by anybody until we reach his great grand sire Sampson. There are men in the world who claim that on account of color, size, and general appearance Sampson could not be a son of Blaze, as the Stud Book states, and as the best proof would indicate. Whenever a man endeavors to monkey over a horse with a tape line, and tell his breeding from its measurements, that man is outside his jurisdiction! Therefore, I call Gano a thoroughbred, for, in my estimation, the fact that Miller's Damsel, the dam of Eclipse, was by Messenger, cuts no figure in the matter. Even were these theorists correct, Gano would be about sixty-three sixty-fourths thoroughbred. The reason I mention Mambrino Patchen in this connection is, that some time since several Eastern horse papers called attention to Senator Stanford's attempt to breed trotters from thoroughbred mares. One of them said in effect, "Who would want to buy a son of Electioneer from a thoroughbred mare? Suppose he could trot fast, and was a stallion of elegant appearance! What horseman in these Eastern States would breed to him?"

Now, Mambrino Patchen had fully as much thoroughbred; fully as much "running foolishness" in his pedigree as a son of Electioneer, from a thoroughbred mare, would have! It would appear, also, that Mambrino Patchen was quite a sire of trotters (having at this writing sired fourteen with records from 2:20½ to 2:30). His greatest reputation, however, has been achieved as a brood-mare sire. Mares by Mambrino Patchen stand at the front end of the procession as broodmares, and are to-day among the highest priced and most sought after. He has sired the dams of 21 trotters and one pacer, with records from 2:15½ to 2:30. This would seem to indicate that a horse bred that way was not exactly a total and dismal failure.

In the realm of brood-mares I will cite two individuals, not that they are the only ones to be found, but because I have them in mind. The first mare is Alma Mater. It is unnecessary for me to state to all horsemen that she is one of the great brood-mares! She is the dam of Alcantara, 2:23; Alcia, 2:29; Alcyone, 2:27; Arbiter, 2:30; Almeta, 2:31¼; Alline, trial 2:26½. This would mark her as quite a broodmare. How is she bred? Sired by Mambrino Patchen, dam Estrella by imp. Australian; second dam Fannie G. by imp. Margrave; so on through 16 or 17 other thoroughbred dams. The dam of Alma Mater then was certainly thoroughbred. The dam of Mambrino Patchen, her sire, was thoroughbred. This would make Alma Mater three-fourths thoroughbred. She seems a very fair brood-mare nevertheless!

The second mare is Columbine, by A. W. Richmond, dam Columbia (thoroughbred), by imp. Bonnie Scotland, so on through a dozen other thoroughbred mares. A. W. Richmond was sired by Blackbird, by Camden, son of Shark. Richmond's dam by Rattler, second dam by Spotted Ranger. This mare Columbine then, is one-half thoroughbred, and about two-thirds of the other one-half running bred and thoroughbred combined. She is the dam of Anteeo 2:16¼, and Antevolo 2:19½, and per consequence enjoys the distinction of being the only mare in America that is the mother of two entire horses that have records better than 2:20!! There are two or three of her produce yet to hear from. Anteeo is to-day the fastest son of Electioneer, either stallion or gelding.

American Clay was sired by Cassius M. Clay, Jr., dam (dam of Conscript) by Imp. Tranby. He has sired the dams of ten trotters and one pacer, with records from 2:18½ to 2:28¼. He has sired three trotters, and is the sire of Alta, who has two performers in 2:30, and Magic, who has four in the list.

I will now take up the best performers of certain stallions. Kate Sprague 2:18, by Gov. Sprague, is his best performer, not only having the fastest record, but having trotted three times as many 2:30 heats as any other trotter sired by him. Her dam was Fan, by Lance, a running bred horse. Hambletonian's two best performers were Dexter 2:17½, and Nettie 2:18. They were the fastest and most enduring of his get. The dams of both were by Seeley's American Star, running bred. Maxie Cobb 2:13¼, the fastest entire horse by the record the world has yet seen, had a dam sired by a part bred horse. Conde 2:20, by Abbotsford, is his fastest and only trotter with a record of 2:30 or better. His dam is the well-known mare Katy Tricks, by Colonel. Katy is nothing, if not a running bred mare.

Clark Chief's best performer is Croxie 2-19¼, whose dam was by Little Priam, running bred.

Daniel Lambert's best performer by long odds was Comee 2:19½. He trotted seventy-one heats in 2:30 or better, double the number of any other of his get. His dam was by Hiawatha, strictly running bred, and claimed by some authorities to be thoroughbred.

Belle Echo was far and away the best of Echo's produce. She was a campaigner and race-horse. Her dam was by Williamson's Belmont, thoroughbred. Gen. Knox's best performer was Lady Maud 2:18¼. Her dam was by Saleck, running bred. Pilot, Jr. scored his fastest performer in John Morgan 2:24, whose dam was by Medoc. Mambrino Chief's only great performer was Lady Thorn 2:18¼, her dam being Gano, a thoroughbred. Jennie Witherspoon is the fastest and best campaigner by Almont. Her record is 2:16¼. Her dam was by Gough's Wagner, a running bred horse.

King Wilkes 2:22¼, lifted himself out of the depths by siring Oliver K. 2:16¼. Oliver's dam was by Virginius, son of Lexington, second dam by a son of American Eclipse. The records attest the fact that Oliver K. was quite a trotter himself. Lucy 2:18¼, was the fastest of the produce of Geo. M. Patchen. She trotted three times as many heats in 2:30 or better than all the rest of his offspring combined. Her dam was by Mayday, son of Henry, second dam by Prizefighter, son of Imp. Expedition.

I could quote many other instances of like character. The above, however, is sufficient to illustrate the matter. I will now call your attention to a line of blood differing somewhat from the above. I will state before leaving this subject, that it would be an interesting study to trace the blood lines of Goldsmith Maid 2:14. It is well known that she trotted more heats in 2:30 or better, and that she won more money than any other American trotter. I am acquainted with men who would be surprised to find out her exact breeding.

I wish now to call your attention to Lady Patriot, the dam of Volunteer, Sentinel, Marksman, Hertzel's Hambletonian, Heroine, Green's Hambletonian, etc., etc. Volunteer was recognized as in many respects the greatest sire of racehorses that ever lived, and not many years ago figured as the premier stallion of America. His get were noted for their game and lasting characteristics. They were not early trotters, but when they did arrive they came to stay. Volunteer's produce are well-known racehorses and money horses. It is conceded by all writers of ability that the Volunteers' differed widely from any other line of the Hambletonian family. They were gamer, finer-haired, and showed apparently more thoroughbred. H. T. Helm says Volunteer looked like a thoroughbred, though a powerful one. His neck was long and slender, (being four inches longer than his sire's), his head was fine and bony, his legs and feet less coarse, with that hard and close-grained look that an infusion of hot blood generally gives. Sentinel 2:29¾, his full brother, was considered, in his day, the leading stallion of his section. He was in the stud but a few seasons, dying, I think, when about nine years old, yet he sired eight trotters, and most of them were of the right sort. Green's Hambletonian, Hertzel's Hambletonian, and Marksman have all sired a trotter or two, while Heroine is the dam of Shawmut 2:26, by Harry Clay. Lady Patriot was a running bred mare. I find no other line of blood in her except running blood. She was in some respects one of the greatest brood mares that ever lived. A study of her blood and offspring would prove interesting to the "running" foolishness men.

I would next call your attention to Woodbine, by the thoroughbred horse Woodford. She is the dam of Woodford Mambrino 2:21½, and Wedgewood 2:19. One of these stallions was sired by Mambrino Chief, and the other by Alexander's Belmont. Both will be recognized by horsemen as two very game and reliable racehorses. The races of Woodford Mambrino are memorable, while it is claimed that Wedgewood went through the circuit without even losing a heat. Woodford Mambrino is the sire of a dozen trotters, and of eight sires, that have in turn sired twenty-seven trotters, among these sons being Pancoast and Princeps. Pancoast is the sire of Patron 2:14¼, and others, while Princeps comes to the front with seventeen or eighteen trotters, with records from 2:14 to 2:30. Wedgewood is rapidly coming forward as a valuable sire, having several in the "charmed circle," among whom is Favonia 2:15! His son Nugget is the sire of Nettie Leaf 2:24¼, and Newton 2:28¼, both acquired as four-year-olds. It would look to a man up a tree as if these two stallions had been very successful, both as trotters and as sires.

Golddust (150—Dorcey's) was sired by Vermont Morgan, dam by Imp. Zilcaadi (Arabian). This horse was a great early day stallion. He sired four trotters, the slowest having a record of 2:25, and from that down to 2:16¼. He produced seven sons, who figure as the sires of seven trotters. He also sired the dams of seven trotters and one pacer. This is certainly a praiseworthy showing for a horse of Golddust's opportunity. From a mare by Imp. Sythian, whose dam was Sally Russell, by Boston Golddust, produced the stallion Zilcaadi Golddust. This latter stallion was the sire of Cigarette, the dam of Rosaline Wilkes 2:14½! Rosaline is the only trotter that I know of by Conn's Harry Wilkes. She certainly has extreme speed. Zilcaadi Golddust may be considered three-quarters thoroughbred, as he is thoroughbred and Arab combined.

Almonarch, by Almont, dam thoroughbred by Lexington, second dam by Imp. Sythian, etc., is the third sire, numerically, of all the entire horses of his illustrious family. While he has two ahead of him, he has 23 or 24 behind him.

Lula 2:15, whose dam was by Imp. Hooten, was a great race mare, and one of the few trotters who beat Goldsmith Maid a race, and that by fairly out-trotting her, though the Maid finished at her best clip, and fought out every heat with the tenacity of a bull-dog.

Cassius M. Clay's only trotter was Geo. M. Patchen 2:23¼, whose dam was sired by a son of Imp. Trustee. He is known as a great racehorse, and he sired trotters, and his son, Geo. M. Patchen, Jr., sired twice as many as his sire did. This horse, as I have previously stated, sired Lucy 2:18¼, out of a mare by Mayday. Lucy was a grand mare.

This is as far as I desire to carry this subject. In opposition to this treatise can be produced an equally strong list whose foundation was "trotting blood." This teaches that all the equine greatness of our fair land is not bound up within the hides of a certain family of horses, or a certain line of blood, and when a man develops into a "one-idea" man, he usually is a complete and dismal failure; a nuisance to himself, and an annoyance to his friends.

How Rifleman Beat Four Minutes.

In the winter of 1862-63, Senators Doll, McNabb, Bryant, Crawford, Atkison and others were in the habit of trotting and running their horses around the hotel stove at Sacramento. Doll had but lately come into the sole possession of Rifleman, the son of imp. Glencoe, now better known or remembered among trotting horsemen as the sire of Col. Lewis, 2:18¾, when McNabb boldly averred the opinion that this thoroughbred could trot a little bit. Doll laughed at McNabb's horse-lore; but finally the latter bantered him into accepting a wager of a basket of champagne that Rifleman could trot under four minutes without further preparation.

The following Sunday saw a buss-load of horsey legislators on the way to the track to enjoy the fluid contents of the basket at McNabb's expense. Rifleman was warmed up a bit and then started (under saddle, of course) on his trip, which he accomplished, to the surprise and discomfiture of Doll, with several seconds to spare. The basket was broken, but not at McNabb's expense.

Of The

FRISON.

The Frison is Less Wise than the English, but no Horse goes better in the Mannage, either upon the Ground, Terra a Terra, or in all Ayres; and no Horse is of more Use, either for a Single Combat on Horse Back, or in the Warrs for the Shock.

He is Hardy, can Live of any Thing, and will Endure either Heats or Colds; and on no Horse whatsoever doth a Man Appear more a Sword-Man, than on this Horse, being so Quiet, so Bold, and so Assured.

He is also Manly, and Fit for Every thing but Running Away; though he will Run fast for a while, yet, I doubt, not Long; because his Wind is not like that of Barbs: Yet a Heavy man Well-Armed upon a Barb, and the same Weight upon a Dutch-Horse, the Dutch Horse's Strength is so much Above the Barb's, as, Compared thus, I believe the Dutch Horse may Run as Fast, and as Long as the Barb; for the Barb's Wind serveth to no Purpose, when his Strength is not able to Carry his Weight: And thus the Barb will want his little Light Jockey on him, with a couple of Trenchers for a Saddle, and a Lute-String in his Mouth for a Bitt.

OF THE

DANEMARK and HOLLAND

HORSE.

The Denmark-Horse is an Excellent Horse, in the same Kind, and commonly Apter to Learn, and Leighter: There are more Leaping-Horses of those Countries and Kinds, than of any Horses in the World.

But now, to make more Profit, they Geld all in Holland, for Coaches, and to keep the Trade, sending Five Thousand every Year into France, and diverse other Places, that you can hardly get a Stone-Horse worth any thing; their Colts at two Years old Springs their Mares, and then they Geld them; so, Avarice spoyls their Breed. A Town will Joyn, and give above Two Hundred Pounds for a Stallion; but then he Covers all the Mares that belong to that Town, like a Town-Bull.

OF THE

ALMAIN, or GERMAN

HORSE.

Those that Write, That they are like Flanders Horses, are much Deceived; they mean the common Country Cart-Horse: But let me Inform them; there are few Princes in Germany, but have Excellent Races, and Breeds of Horses; and their Stallions are alwayes either Coursers of Naples, Spanish Horses, Turks in Abundance, and Barbs; and Breeding of these Stallions, their Mares come to be very Fine, like their Sires, and very Pure Breeds.

I had one, no Neapolitan in the World like him, for Shape, Stature, Colour, Strength, Agility, and Good Nature; He would make Thirty two Capriols, the Highest that ever I saw, and the Justest, without any Help in the World; and then upon the Ground, to Gallop and Change, and go Terra a Terra, it was another Action than ever any other Horse did, being in some Manner above the Rate of Horse-Kind: This was a German Horse, but his Sire was a Courser of Naples.

I had once two Horses of the Count of Oldenburg's most Excellent Breed, as Fine Horses as ever I saw, and One was the Hopefullest that could be seen. That Prince was Pleased to Present those Horses to me, and said, If I Liked them not, he would send me Others: which was like a Prince, and most Generous. The Prince of West-Friesland did also Send me a very Fine Horse.

COURSER of NAPLES.

I Have not seen Many of them; but, La Broue, in his Book, sayes, That the Race was mightily Decayed; and that was almost a Hundred Years ago: And Pluvinel, in his Book, sayes also, That we have not now such Neapolitans as we have had; for all the Races are Bastarded and Spoyled.

The Arch-Duke Leopold, when he Governed the Countries of Flanders, Brabant, &c. sent into Italy for Eight or Ten Coursers whilst I was at Antwerp, which Cost him above Three Hundred Pounds a Horse, Journey and all. They were Great vast Horses, with Huge Heads, and Thick Necks; Heavy, with no Spirit in the World, nor any Strength; Dull heavy Jades, fitter for a Brewers-Cart than the Saddle: And the Marquess De Carasene, a Spaniard, that Governs all those Countries, a little Man, but both Witty, and Wise; an Excellent Souldier, both for Conduct and Courage, and a Good Horse-Man (which Few Spaniards are) and my very Noble Friend, told me, That the last Warrs in Naples hath Ruined the King of Spain's Race of Horses in that Kingdom; but that they Began now to Repair it, and that he Hoped within Fourteen Years it may be Established as formerly it hath been.

Thus you see Things do not Stand at a Stay: for what hath been Formerly, is not so now; as in the Neapolitan, and in all the rest of the Races of Italy, which are Decayed. The Duke of Florence hath the Best Race at this Time in those Parts.

OF THE TURKISH HORSE.

I Have seen very Few of them; but, Two Merchants brought Three Turkish Horses to Antwerp, very Fine Horses, but Oddly Shaped; their Heads were very Fine, but like a Camel's Head: They had Excellent Eyes, and Thin Necks, excellently Risen; somewhat great Bodies; the Croup like a Mules; Leggs not Great, but marvellous Sinewy; good Pasterns, and good Hooffs; and their Backs risen somewhat like a Camel.

I had a Groom, a Heavy English Clown, whom I set Upon them, and they made no more of him, than if he had been as Leight as a Feather.

They appeared not so Fit for the Mannage, as for to Run a Course, which, I believe, they would have Scoured; they Trotted very Well, and no Ambling at all.

The Horses about Constantinople, Mr. Blundevil sayes, Are very ill-favoured-Jades; but he was mightily Deceived with his Old Authors: For, I have Spoken with many Gentlemen that have been There, as likewise with diverse Merchants that came from Thence; who all Agree, That there are There, the most Beautifull-Horses in the World; saying, That in Soyl-Time, there are many Hundred Teddered, and so Shift Places when they have Eaten that Bare: Every Horse hath a Man to Look to him, and every Man a little Tent to Lie in; and they say, That it is one of the most Glorious Sights to see those Horses that can be; and the most Beautiful Horses in the World. And certainly they are Brave Horses!

The Price of One of these Horses, is about a Hundred, or a Hundred and Fifty Pounds a Horse; and there is great Difficulty to get a Pass; for the Grand Signor is very Strict, in not Suffering any of his Horses to Go out of his Territories.

When that Difficulty is Over, there is Another; which is, If you have not a Turk or Two, for your Convoy, they will be Taken from you by the Way: There is also the Difficulty of a Long Journey, and the Danger of Sickness, or Laming; For, you must come Thorow Germany, which is a Long Way; and you must have very Careful Men to Conduct them, a good Groom, an Expert Farrier; and by no Means, to suffer any to Shoo them but Him; for when they perceive there is a Fine Horse, they will Hire a Farrier to Prick him, or Spoyl him, that they may have him: Which is Practiced dayly.

OF THE ARABIAN HORSE.

He is Nurst with Camels-Milk; there are the strangest Reports in the World of those Horses; for I have been Told by many Gentlemen of Credit, and by Many-many Merchants, that the Price of Right Arabians is, One Thousand, Two Thousand, and Three Thousand Pounds a Horse, (an Intollerable, and an Incredible Price) and that the Arabs are as Careful, and D ligent, in Keeping the Genealogies of their Horses, as any Princes can be in Keeping any of their own Pedigrees.

They Keep the Genealogies of their Horses with Medalls; And when any of their Sons come to be Men, then their Fathers give them Two Sutes of Armes with Two Cymeters, and one of these Horses, and Prayes to God to Bless them; That is every ones Portion, and his Horse Lyes alwayes in the Next Room to him. (I believe, not Above Staires). They Talk, they will Ride Fourscore Miles in a Day, and never Draw the Bridle; When I was Young, I could have Bought a Nagg for Ten Pound, that would have done as much very Easily.

I never saw any but one of These Horses, which Mr. John Markham, a Merchant, brought Over, and said, He was a Right Arabian: He was a Bay, but a Little Horse, and no Rarity for Shape; for I have seen Many English Horses farr Finer. Mr. Markham sold him to KING JAMES for Five Hundred Pounds; and being Trained up for a Course, when he came to Run, every Horse Beat him.

OF THE

HUNGARIAN HORSE.

They are not Worth speaking of; but if you will Believe those of that Nation, they will Magnifie them Extreamly; and so will all Nations whatsoever Mightily Commend their Own Horses: But I have Seen Hungarian Horses, and They are not worth Commendations, I assure you.

OF THE

POLANDER HORSE.

When the King of Poland Sent an Extraordinary Embassadour, with Many of his Nobility and Gentry of Poland, to Conduct the Princess Mary, Eldest Daughter to the Duke of Nevers, from Paris, to Poland to be his Queen, I was then at Paris, and Saw his Entry; which was one of the most Glorious, and Manly Sights that Ever I saw, after the Polack Way, with very Rich Clothes, Polack Capps, and great Feathers; and all the Masters of Academies were Commanded to Wait on the Embassadour, with All their Schollars, and Horses, in their Rich Clothes and Saddles, all A la Mode, their Manes full of Riobons.

I Protest, in comparison of the Polacks, they Lookt like Hobby-horses; not but that their Horses were Better; the Difference was meerly in the Manly Habit of the Polanders, who were also very Rich.

But their Horses I do not like at all; for they are, for their shape, just as the common and ordinary Horses and Geldings in England; and the Bitts they Use, are just like our Snaffles, and have only Rings for the Bridle to be Fastned to, as Ours are, wanting those little Crosses that ours have: But if you will Believe the Polanders, they will tell you, That their Horses are the Bravest Horses in the World, which I have not Faith to Believe: For, when we say, (and it hath been an Old Saying) That the Poland Horse is the Best Horse in the World; we mean the Men to Fight on Horse-back, and not the Horses.

By Grim.

At least a score of times in each twelve months, that estimable journal the N. Y. Spirit has some paragraph Re the naming of horses, and keeps hammering away at the American breeders to give the young ones distinctive titles. Now far be it from me to decry such good intentions, for I am willing to confess that the jerky haphazard way many of the colts and fillies are named in this country is simply a disgrace, and ignorance is no excuse for the breeder or owner who would call a son of Sir Modred, John Smith, or a daughter of Firenzi, Kansas City. Yet still the Spirit claims that English breeders study nomenclature, and that but two or three of the Americans pay any attention to the matter. Now, out of curiosity I have waded through the pages of the English stud book, and come to the conclusion that the breeders on the other side of the big pond are as bad, or even worse than those on this side of the water. It is true within the past twenty years, nomenclature has improved wonderfully in England, but within the same time it has improved equally in this country. I should like to see an American who would name his horse Bloody Buttocks, I'm-Sure-He-Shan't or Jack-come-tickle-me, and as the fifteen volumns abound in many such oddities, the readers of the Breeder and Sportsman who have never seen the stud book may be interested in knowing a few of the names that seemed amusing to the writer.

Lady Cow was aptly named, being a daughter of John Bull, but Lady Legs and the Duchess of Limbs were not related, except distantly. Little Devil was a full brother to Kill Devil, by Rockingham, dam Nelly, but there is no trace of that blood in Dare Devil.

Let's be-jogging, was a celebrated filly in the stable of Sir Thomas Gascoigne, while Little-Thought-On and Look-about-You, were two cracks when Sir Thomas was a boy. From 1725 to 1730 the Castaway mare had foals regularly, but from then until 1738 she was barren, when upon her casting a foal the youngster was named Long-looked-For. Louse and Lousecatcher were not related, but should have been. Bag-of-Bones, Cock-a-doodle-do and Conscientious Juryman were hardly any worse than Here-I-go-with-my-eye-out or Duchess-of-old-Humbug. Jock-the-Laird's-Brother was so called from his being a full brother to The Laird, a great race horse about the year 1820. Nobody and Somebody had the same dam, but Orange and Lemon had no blood relationship. Orange-Squeezer and Lemon-Squeezer were dam and daughter, but Beggar Boy and Beggar Girl were not kin.

The Cat family were all great race horses, so it does not seem surprising to see Puss, Kitten, Pussy, Pussy Cat, Black Cat, etc., but it does look odd to see Quail, Grouse, Mallard, Pigeon and Duckling. Brandy Nan and Brandy Bet lived many years apart, still had no like blood lines, and it is probably unnecessary to say that Brown Teapot and Caifacaratadaddera were not of the same family. Dot and Go-one, Painted Lady, Penny Trumpet, Toil-and-Trouble and Worse-and-Worse, were all worthy of better names for they were good horses in their day.

One would naturally suppose that Pot8's, Turnips, Lettuce and Mushroom must have been owned by vegetable dealers, and the medical and pharmaceutical societies were represented by Doctor, Quack, Physician, Chamomile, Peppermint and Pennyroyal: and they must have had a very honest lot on the turf in olden times, for Lord Lowther called his son of Bustle, Beggar-my-neighbor.

In Black-and-all-Black we have a very appropriate name for one of Mr. D. D. Withers' colts, yet Bull-calf would hardly answer for any racehorse of the present day. The Burning Beauty was a great horse, and the name much nicer than Cocky-ride-a-rouzie. Fancy Sam Whitehead of San Francisco, or Dave Johnson of New York offering odds on a horse with a name like that.

I have heard quite a number of ladies say that the owner of Brookdale was inclined to be improper because he named the Chamois filly Chemise, yet he had a good precedent, as Sir William Maxwell named a daughter of Cutty Sark Chemisette. I-wish-you-may-get-it, does not seem a desirable cognomen for an American thoroughbred, but it may have satisfied the English breeder, and I-am-not-aware, was a colt by Tranby, who was no better named than Lord-catch-him-who-can. Unfortunate Youth, Wait-a-while, Anything-you-like, and Angel-of-the-rock, are some more of peculiar selection, all of them, however, being better than Ask Mamma, Bab at the Bowster, Bloodsucker, and Chicken come-clock.

Stuff-and-Nonsense and Down-with-the-Dust might not be inappropriate for some of the short horses which run on the Pacific Coast. When his owner named Dear-at-a-gift, he evidently thought but little of his filly, and Good for Nothing would have answered nicely last year for Broughton, Blaze Ban or Argo. Without question the owner of I'll-gang-nae-mair-to-yon-toun was a Scotchman, and the owner of Ladye-of-Silverkeldwell must have been in love when he named his mare. Many American papers have mentioned the odd name given to the son of Musket, Son-of-a-gun, still there has been a horse named the same in England many years ago, he was by Artillery, dam Alice Gray. At a sale at Tattersall's in 1862, a mare named The Unprotected Female was disposed of to Mr. S. H. Stewart, and in 1864 she cast a foal that was afterwards called The Maiden All Forlorn. Vingt'un and Seven-and-a-half are found, showing that these games were then popular enough to warrant the names being used. Religion was a colt thought a good deal of, but The-devil-to-pay did not amount to much.

The Fiddler's Wife, My Grandfather's Clock, and Who Dare Say Boo, seem peculiar, while I also find Mustard, and Pepper and Salt. The drinking community is represented by Drunkard, Whiskey, Gin Drinker, Fire Water, and John Barleycorn, while the blue ribbon people have The Sober Boy. California was evidently in the namer's mind when he called his filly The Golden West; while an American bit of slang is found in the name of Mr. H. E. Linde's mare She-takes-the-Cake. It may be interesting to the lovers of the trotting horse to know that there can be found in the book, Hambletonian, Wilkes, Sultan and Goldsmith Maid. Some base ball crank was evidently around when Mr. Igoe called his colt Not Out, and in all probability the owners of Squaw and Mahala have both visited this country.

In the above I have studiously avoided mentioning any names that would grate harshly on sensitive ears, and am very sorry to say that there have been names used on the English turf which are a disgrace to the supposed gentlemen who named the animals, and no one of the American owners would dare, for a moment, to call horses by the appellations used in years gone by in England.

Advertising Notes.

Once more the advertisement of the justly celebrated Toomey Sulkies appears in our columns. The character of work turned out by this firm is surpassed by no one in the country; and it is not alone in Sulkies that they have established their reputation, for their Skelton, driving and business wagons are rated second to none. Toomey & Co., have received six patents for improvements in springs, running gear and axles, showing them to be a progressive firm and up with the times. Any information required will be be cheerfully given by W. D. O'Kane of Market Street, San Francisco.

One of the best of the Morgan type of horses now in this state is Ohio Boy 4286, the property of Mr. L. P. Baker of Oakland. This well known stallion will stand at Oakland, Haywards and Walnut Creek, in Alemeda Co., from March 1st to June 1st. The service fees have been placed at such a low figure that the book should fill in short order.

Mr. G. W. Brown of the Nucleus Stable, offers for sale in this issue of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, the registered Percheron Stallion Tonty. The breeding of this horse is all that can be desired, and would prove a valuable addition to the stud of breeders engaged in raising heavy draught horses.

Messrs. Killip & Co. have had such success with the imported stallions offered for sale a few weeks ago, that Mr. J. Trestail has placed in their hands for sale four imported mares of the same breeding. These splendid specimens of the Clydesdale family can be seen after next Saturday at the Bay District track, whence they will be taken immediately on their arrival from Australia.

An addition to the stallion list is announced in Mr. A Weske's advertisement from Santa Rosa, his handsome Prince Imperial having been placed in the stud there. Prince Imperial's pedigree is of the royal sort, and should attract the attention of intelligent breeders. Peter Brandow the well known trainer says that this horse is one of the best in the state, and that he can show 2:20 with but little training.

Lancelot is another of the Electioneer colts offered for service in this issue, and as his breeding is unexpectionable, will undoubtedly have many patrons. In the same stable with Lancelot is a well known son of Nutwood, whose get have proved valuable in breeding, and as there are many who fancy the Nutwood blood in preference to that of Electioneer, undoubtly Saladin will have a full share of the trotting mares in Santa Rosa and vicinity. In these two fine stallions Mr. E. W. Brooks can satisfy the most fastideous of of breeders and should have a most successful season.

In last week's issue a notice was given of some of the horses in the Seale Stable at the Bay District Track, which, when it was written, was without the knowledge, that the larger portion of the stable would shortly be sold. An announcement is made this week through Killip & Co. that on Thursday, February 28th, by order of the executors of the estate of the late H. W. Seale, a sale will take place at which the pick of the entire stable will be sold, thus affording an opportunity to procure a first class trotter at a reasonable price. The horses may be seen daily in exercise at the track, and on the day of sale each horse will be shown in harness.

Dr. R. Watkins a veterinary dentist from Hartford, Conn., solicits patrons through our columns this week. The Doctor is well and favorable known throughout the far Eastern States, and will probably soon be in receipt of a large practice here. He may be found at his office, Crittenden's Club Stable, 409 Taylor Street, where he will prepared to treat all ailments of the horse's mouth. Examinations are free.

There is no need to write words of praise for such a stallion as Almont Patchen. Those who saw him defeat Adonis and Belmont Boy in this city last year know that 2:15 is an easy task for this wonderful horse to beat. His breeding is of the very best, and that his get will prove equally good, is almost a certainty. The advertisement gives pedigree, performance and description, and any other information will be readily afforded by Mr. C. H. Corey of San Jose.

Jim L. and Adrian, the property of Mr. J. A. Linscott, are advertised to make the season of 1889 at Watsonville. These two stallions are well known for speed and endurance, and their breeding is of the highest order. Jim L. has already done service in the stud, and has proven himself a sure foal getter. Adrian has stood for several years and has uniformly bred good colts, showing speed, size and excellent disposition. A glance at the advertisement will show price, pedigree, etc.

The description of Election given elsewhere is so elaborate that there is absolutely nothing further to say. Now that the Electioneer blood has become so fashionable, owners of his get have little trouble in securing all the mares necessary, and without doubt it will be so in the case of Election.

As usual, the Cook Stock Farm presents to our readers the stallion notices of Steinway 1808, and Charles Derby 4907. These two fine studs, than whom there is no better bred, have limited books, so it will be necessary to make application immediately, by those who wish to secure the services of either of them. Steinway needs no recommendation at our hands, as his performances on the turf and the performances of his get are so well known that they speak for themselves. Chas. Derby, as a two-year-old, made a record of 2:36, and before the end of the season will have lowered it considerably, he having shown many trials lately inside of 2:30, while in the hands of Mr. O. A. Hickok.

Mr. W. B. Sanborn, the lessee of the Santa Rosa Track, is out with a notice in which he offers free stalls, free track, and free water to those who will patronize him. These advantages should secure him a large run of customers, as the track there is considered the equal of any in the State.

Mr. Frederick Gebhard, of the Guenoc Stud, Lake County, through his Superintendent, Mr. Alby, announces to the public that the grandly bred stallion Greenback, of which a full description was again in the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN last week, will stand for public service at the home farm. There are many owners of brood mares who wisely think that the breeders of America have been nicking in too closely, and that outside strains are desirable. To those who so think, nothing could suit better than this magnificent specimen of the English thoroughbred, in whose veins runs the blood of Great Britain's choicest horses. If you should desire a horse for running in the mud and one who will never quit, then breed to St. Savior, a worthy son of Eolus. A score of years since, the Vandals were the noted mud horses, but now the Eolus stock stands pre-eminent. With two such sires in the stud, Mr. Gebhard should receive his full share of custom. Full particulars will be found in the advertisement.

From Langtry Farm comes a timely notice about Friar Tuck. He will stand in Lake County this year at the very low price of $50. As this is the only representative of the Hermit family west of the Rocky Mountains, the management should have a plentiful supply of mares to serve. He has seen hard work on the track, was a consistent performer, and has been very successful at the stud. It will be very surprising if the breeders of the State do not take advantage of this rare opportunity to mingle the blood of England's most noted sire with the rich strains now in the California horses. Read the advertisement.

Mr. T. Lamoureux, of Oakland, gives notice that his two well-bred stallions, Jib and T. O., will stand at the Oakland Trotting Park this season. They are two exceptionally fine bred horses and should command attention from the breeders of California. Read the advertisement in another column.

What necessity is there to call our reader's attention to the advertisement of Alexander Button, he has stamped himself as one of the best sires in the country, Yolo Maid having made a name for him that will last forever. It is a curious fact, Alexander has never had a standard mare, and yet has uniformly produced very speedy colts, and that he can get fleety youngsters from any mare. Mr. Woodward in the advertisement, gives full particulars about this marvelous stallion.

The thoroughbred, Prince of Norfolk, a full brother of the world-wide celebrated Emperor of Norfolk, will make the season at Sacramento this year. Owing to the remarkable success achieved by the Emperor, Prince of Norfolk should be in demand by the owners of good thoroughbred blood mares. Considering the blood lines of this horse, the price is placed at a very low figure, a fact that will be appreciated by those who desire service.

The old time driver, Richard Havey, has the highly bred trotting stallion Bonanza, whose services he offers this week to the readers of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN. Bonanza is a half brother to the noted Arab, 2:15, and his dam is the dam of Albert W., 2:20. Although only having a record of 2:29 himself, that's no measure of his speed. Coming from producing families, he should and undoubtedly will be a grand producer himself.

At The Bay District.

The Bay District track is a great resort at present for those who delight in trotting, as day after day the horses there are put through their paces and the attendants are trying to "get a line," which may be of advantage when the regular trotting season opens. Having already written up the Hickok, Griffen and Seale's stables, the next to claim attention is that of Peter Brandow, one of the oldest drivers now on this coast.

Mr. Brandow has been regularly engaged in handling trotting stock for a quarter of a century, and his well-known ability brings him plenty of owners, who wish "Pete" to handle their fast horses for them. There are in his stable at present half a dozen likely candidates for turf honors, any one of which may prove famous before the coming season finishes.

The first one shown was a dark bay five years old, by Alexander, dam The Stykes mare. She has no record, but is speedy, and has shown several good trials as a four-year-old. The next one exhibited is called Topsey, and from her extreme black color the appelation is a good one. Topsey is five years old, by Orange County, he by Rysdyk's Hambletonian. Her dam is a Bellfounder mare. Topsey, as a two-year-old gained a record of 2:53½, but since then has not seen hard service. She will be bred this year to either Palo Alto or Piedmont. A beautiful bay, five years old, was in the next stall, his sire being Arlington, dam by Whipple's Hambletonian. This horse can show a 2:30 gait at any moment, and when given the proper amount of work will probably beat that time several seconds. The reporter was then shown Prince Albert, a five-year-old colt, the property of W. D. English, Esq. He is a rich dark brown, with exceedingly fine action; a magnificent colt to look at, and should prove himself worthy of his family. He is by Albert W., he by Electioneer, the dam being an Elmo mare. A member of the renowned Wilkes family was next inspected, this representative being Sol Wilkes, by Guy Wilkes, dam Flora Langford. Sol Wilkes is only four years old, and has a record of 2:47, but in training is beating 2:30 almost every day.

His record was secured in the Occident Stakes, and although he was beaten for the honor of first place, secured the second money. He is a pretty, light bay, with dark brown legs and one white hind foot. He has a small white star on forehead and white stripe down the face extending to the muzzle. Sol Wilkes is owned by that enthusiastic horseman Capt. Johnson, and there is every likelihood that he will gladden the Captain's heart before the entries to the "30" list are published in the fall.

Mr. C. Smith is the owner of Lucy A., a very promising Abbotsford mare, her dam by Whipple's Hambletonian. Lucy A. is a beautiful sorrel, with a white stripe down her face, and shows every indication of lowering her present record of 2:32 ere many months have passed.

From Mr. Brandow's stalls the writer went over to have a look at the horses under the charges of Mr. Green. John was in his usual good humor, and showing off the good points of his string to that clever, good-all-round horseman, Mr. P. Egan, the owner of the trotting horse Old Sport. Many stories of the early days among the trotters were told, and the merits of many discussed which will prove of interest in future articles anent the turf.

The first stall contained Melrose, who has already faced an audience and gained a record for himself of 2:35. Mr. Green had him hitched up, and drove him an easy mile in 2:31, the last half being driven in 1:12. He is by Sultan, dam a California Ten Broeck mare, is nine years old, and is owned by Mr. James Hunter.

Mr. Faxon D. Atherton, who dearly loves a good horse, has a good one in President, a five-year-old Fallis colt, the dam being by Whipple's Hambletonian. This grandson of Electioneer has had no chance to get a warming up yet, as he has been troubled with a bad cold, but is now nearly well, and will, within a few days, begin his preparatory work. President has no record, but as Mr. Green says, "that won't trouble him long."

A very beautiful black filly, two years old, by Sterling, dam Madge, by Privateer, has all the requisites necessary for a successful turf condidate, and will be seen this year among the young contingent. That knight of the pencillers, Mr. Chas. Kingsley, has a two-year-old called Patriarch, which is being given gentle exercise by Wm. Fieldwick. He is a handsome specimen of the California bred horse, and may prove, as Charley says, a world beater. Patriarch is by Sterling, dam Lillian, by Romolus, he by Rysdyk's Hambletonian. The breeding of this colt is enough to warrant the supposition that he will prove very fast.

At this juncture a great disturbance was heard out at the main entrance to the track, and investigation showed the redoubtable D. J. McCarty, with about thirty head of trotting horses, some good ones being among the number. Dan has the happy faculty of being able to buy good horses at low figures, and usually has a clipper or two on hand when a purchaser shows in sight. A hasty examination—such as was had—could not possibly give our readers any thorough idea of all the horses congregated there, but among the number was seen California, a five-year-old bay colt by Belnor, he by Strathmore, dam Leah, by Woodford Mambrino; Castro, two-year-old colt, by Clovis, dam Carrie Stoner, by Steinway. An unnamed filly by Nutwood, dam by John Nelson, looked very well. About the best appearing of the lot was the chestnut gelding St. David, by Geo. M. Patchen, Jr., dam Mattie Howard. Among the others were Gaston 2:37½; James F., four years old, by Steinway, dam Ned Fay's Kentucky saddle mare; Grey Eddy, by Alexander, grandsire of Yolo Maid, dam Belle, by Whipple's Hambletonian; Pride of the Bay, by Algona, he by Almont, dam, the dam of Confidence; Roy, by Electioneer, dam Rivulet, by Rivoli, he out of Topaz, by Glencoe. The balance consists of colts and fillies by Nephew, Stamboul, Sidney, Dexter, Prince, and many others of the celebrated California sires.

VINELAND BREEDING FARM.

Whippleton, 1883,

STANDARD UNDER RULE 406.

The most successful stock horse in California for his opportunities. WHIPPLETON has no equal as a producer of carriage and general purpose horses. Sire of Lily Stanley, record 2:17½, dam's breeding unknown; Homestakes pacer, 2:16½, dam's breeding unknown; Flora B., 2:30, dam's breeding unknown; Cora C., three-year-old pacer, 2:33¾, dam by Nauduc, Rachel, 2:38, dam's breeding unknown.

DESCRITPION.

WHIPPLETON is a beautiful black, tan muzzle and flanks, and exceptionally strongly made all over. He stands 17 hands high and weighs 1400 pounds. He is beyond doubt the most uniform breeder on the Coast for size, color and finish. Most of his colts are 16 hands or over, and all bay, brown or black in color. He has never sired a sorrel or white faced colt; if he does I agree to refund service money.

PEDIGREE.

WHIPPLETON, sired by Hambletonian Jr. (sire of Hancock 2:29¼, by Whipple's Hambletonian; dam Lady Livingston; dam of Lady Blanchard 2:27¾, Bloomfield Maid, trial 2:22½; by General Taylor (sire of dam of Wells Fargo 2:18¾, Nearea 2:24¾, Bickford 2:29¾, Lady Blanchard 2:26¾, and Stella 2:30, son of the Morse horse.

TERMS.

Fifty dollars, with usual return privilege.

ALCONA, 730.

By the great Almont (sire of Westmont, 2:15¼, Puritan, 2:16, Fannie Witherspoon, 2:16¼, Piedmont, 2:17¾, and 31 others with records better than 2:30, and grandsire of Bell Hamlin, 2:13¾) by Alexander's Adaliah (sire of Goldsmith Maid, 2:14), he by Rysdyk's Hambletonian. Alcona's dam, Queen Mary by Mambrino Chief, sire of Lady Thorn, 2:18¼, Woodford Mambrino, 2:21½ and 4 others in 2:30 list, and sire of the dams of Piedmont, 2:17¼. Director, 2:17, Onward, 2:25¼, and many others; 28 of his sons have produced 2:30 trotters.

Almont has 38 sons that have produced 2:30 trotters, which number is only equaled by his grandsire, Rysdyk's Hambletonian.

DESCRIPTION.

Alcona is a beautiful chestnut, 16¾ hands high, and weighs 1,300 pounds. His colts possess speed, style, finish and beauty, and if they don't trot fast they command the highest price for carriage and general purpose horses. Eleven of Alcona's colts that have been sold UNTRAINED brought $7,810, an average of $710 per head.

TERMS: $35. Usual return privilege.

Grandissimo,

Sired by La Grante (son of Almont and out of Jessie Pepper, by Mambrino Chief; Jessie Pepper is the dam of Iona 2:22, Alpha 2:23¼, Sterling Wilkes 2:33¾, and others) dam Norma, by Arthurton (sire of Arab 2:15, Joe Arthurton 2:2½, etc).

Grandam Nourmahal, (full sister to A. W. Richmond, sire of Arrow 2:13¾, Romero 2:19, and sire of Columbine, dam of Anteeo 2:16¾, and Antevolo 2:19¾ at 4 years old),

DESCRIPTION.

Grandissimo is 3 years old, will make a sixteen hand horse; he is a rich mahogany bay in color and perfect in style and action. Limited to ten mares, at $50 for the season. Usual return privileges.

In case any of my horses are sold before the next season, parties breeding mares have the privilege to return them to any other stallion I have making the season at the same price. Mares kept in any manner desired. Best of pasture the year round, at $4 per month. Some choice young stallions, colts and fillies by Whippleton, for sale reasonable. Correspondence solicited.

FRED W. LOEBER, Proprietor.

AMBERINE.

PEDIGREE.

Sired by PROMPTER No. 2805, with six weeks training at the close of a stud season, he won a stallion race of five heats, winning the last three heats and getting a record of 2:33¾; he has never been trained since.

His sire, Wilson's BLUE BULL, No. 75, has more of his progeny in the 2:30 list than any horse that ever lived, except it may be George Wilkes, and it is a disputed point between the two which has most.

PROMPTERS' dam, PRAIRIE BIRD, 2:28¾, is in the GREAT BROOD MARE TABLE, a proved producer, and of a family of wonderful producers, as an examination of the produce of Flaxtail mares will prove.

AMBERINE'S dam, "BONNIE," owned by G. W. Hancock, of Sacramento, is one of the best road-mares in the State; she has many times covered 50 miles on the road in five hours, and 125 miles in 17 hours. She is the dam of Daisy, yearling record, 2:38¾; her sire is John Nelson, sire of the dams of Albert W., 2:20, and Valensin, 2:24.

AMBERINE is a beautiful bay, three years old, very powerfully built, 16 hands, and trotted a mile in his yearling form in 3:20, and has never been trained.

Will serve 15 outside mares at the low price of $25 the season. Should the mare not prove in foal, the money refunded or mare bred following season. Service fee payable, when I pasture the mare, at the time of her removal; but if served outside, payable at time of service.

He is full brother to DAISY: yearling record, 2:38¾. THE BEST IN THE WORLD. Two-year-old; trial, two miles, 5:07; last mile in 2:28.

Good pasturage for a limited number of mares only, at $5 per month. Ranch 18 miles from the City, San Pedro Valley. Horses taken down at owner's risk.

This horse will stand in San Francisco, San Mateo, or Alameda Counties. Owned by

And now Woodnut is sold.

Galore has arrived in New York from England.

A. J. Feeks, the well-known trotting-horse driver, is at present in California.

Mr. M. A. Whidden has his fine brood mare Grey Dale in foal to Sidney.

At last the great son of Bonnie Scotland, Barnum, has been turned out to grass.

There are letters at this office for James Garrett and Mr. A. G. McCarthy.

Enoch Yates, of Santa Rosa, has sold his thoroughbred stallion, Oscar Wilde, to Mr. Pierce for $600.

Mr. J. B. Chase will send several of his thoroughbred mares to be served by imp Greenback.

Mr. Hickok has turned out Adonis and Mr. Ariel Lathrop's promising Electioneer colt, at Palo Alto.

A. G. McCarthy (Knap) has arrived from Los Angeles, and is talking horse to his friends at the Palace Hotel.

Mr. G. Valensin has taken the stallion Valensin from the public stud and will keep him for his own brood mares.

Mr. M. Smith has taken the two-year-old Lynette to Sacramento to train her for the stakes in which she is entered.

Mr. Trestail has sold another of his imported Clydesdale Stallions to Mr. Grey of Haywards, Alemeda Co., for $1,300.

The four mares brought to California for Mr. Gebhard are Glen Queen, by King Ban; La Lee, Mineral and Her Lilyship.

Parties who wish entry blanks for the Montana Circuit races can have them by applying at the office of the Breeder and Sportsman.

In St. Louis the odds of 40 to 1 are being laid against Terra Cotta winning the Suburban, and the same odds rule about Elkwood.

Dave Yandle, the horse that won the great Omnibus stakes at Saratoga in 1885, now works to a cart about the streets of Salt Lake.

Mr. Walter H. Byington has purchased the principal livery stable in Santa Rosa, and secured the services of Martin Rollins as foreman.

Very few of the New York bookmakers will open, what are known as winter books, on the Suburban or Brooklyn Handicaps.

The St Louis Jockey Club has offered a purse of $10,000 for 2:30 trotters, the race to take place at the fair meeting Oct. 1st to 5th.

Ajax, owned by C. F. Bunch of Ione Valley, was trotted a quarter last Thursday at a 2:22 gait. Ajax gives promise of proving a very fast horse.

If it had not been for the efforts put forth by Mr. M. C. Boots, the Garden City Jockey Club would not have been in the flourishing condition it now is.

From the evidence given by Mr. Porter Ashe before the pool bill committe on Saturday evening, it seems he thinks $40,000 a fictitious value for a colt.

English exchanges show that Donovan and Chitabob are equal favorites for the Derby. The ruling price is 100 to 30. Rather short for so early in the year.

Pittsburg Phil has been enjoying himself lately in Los Angeles and San Diego. His visit to Santa Anita was to inspect the "dark ones" in Mr. Baldwin's stable.

Walter Gratz who is at present in San Francisco, recently sold to Dan Honig the thoroughbred Cartoon for $2,500. Dan is highly delighted with his new purchase.

David Young of Stockton has sold to the well known driver James Dustin a yearling colt by Dexter Prince, and a two-year-old by Elector, dam a John Nelson mare.

Mr. James Dustin of Oakland has sold to James Golden of Boston, Mass., a three-year-old colt by Dexter Prince, dam a General McClellan mare. The reported price is $1,500

Mr. Percy Williams, of Union Island, has purchased from W. R. Ruggles, the running mare Rachel, and also a young colt of hers by Kyrle Daly. The price given was $1,000.

Prospective backers of horses for the Suburban should bear in mind that The Bard, Hanover, Elkwood, Egmont and Kingston have all had "legs" and are even now under suspicion.

Mr. L. E. Clawson's Damiana, W. B. Bradbury's Little Hope, Chas. Haven's Racket, and Harry J. Agnew's Mink will probably meet in a pacing race before long. Each owner thinks he has the fastest.

Patrick Eagan says he is going to drive old Sport in the match race against Concord, and wishes Mr. Erban was going to drive his own horse. He says then he could beat him sure.

There is a big war on between the Louisville Jockey Club and the Nashville Association. It all comes about because Col. Clark of Louisville will not allow the bookmakers to run the track to suit themselves.

I want a correspondent in every town on the Pacific Coast. If you cannot spare the time, speak to some one who can, and on application the Breeder and Sportsman will send on the necessary credentials.

A bill has been introduced in the New York Assembly making it unlawful for any person to ride or drive running or trotting horses on any racing track unless he has paid an annual licence of $250.

Mrs. John Splan, who is one of the proprietors of "Life with the Trotters," says that from her share of the profits she is going to build a residence in Cleveland, and call it "the house that Jack built."

Ten Doy, formerly the property of Mr. J. B. Haggin, was shot by Dr. Sheppard last week, by order of the owner, Mr. McMahon. Ten Doy was by Regent, dam by Miss Ella, and was sold by Mr. Haggin last fall for $3,500.

Trainer McCormack has been ruled off at New Orleans for telling his jockey to pull Sympathic's Last. The horse was pulled, and Power, the jockey, was suspended, whereupon he informed upon McCormack, with the above result.

Sam Bryant has definitely stated that he will not start Proctor Knott in the Kentucky Derby. Knott will run at Nashville and Lexington, but will not be in shape for the mile and a half before the Chicago meeting.

James S. Trask of Preston, Walla Walla Co., W. T., has sold his running mare Rolly Bolly, four years old, by Banquero, he by Dr. Lindsey by Lexington, dam April Fool, to John Maloney, who has shipped her to Montana. Price not stated.

I want to return thanks to Mr. J. I. Case of Racine, Wis., for the two admirable pictures of his celebrated stallions, Phallas, 2:13¾, and Brown, 2:18¾. They are truthful representations of these grand trotters, and are worthy of the place which they now occupy in the office of the Breeder and Sportsman.

Mr. J. B. Haggin has had Firenzi declared out of the Suburban, Sheepshead Bay and Bay Ridge Handicaps. Quite right to, Mr. Lawrence has put three pounds too much on the mare, and the chances of early training are not worth taking.

Did you ever see the English Derby? Well I did, and under the guidance of C. H. Kenny and L. Kelleher, both of whom are at present in this city with the Lydia Thompson Co. Some time I will give you my impressions of Epsom Downs on Derby Day.

The Los Angeles Tribune is authority for the statement that Mr. James Golden of Boston, has taken an option on Stamboul, the price being $50,000. There are at least half a dozen gentlemen who will give $35,00 for the stallion.

Some, not over careful correspondent, has telegraphed to the Eastern papers that Matt Storn will train this year for Mrs. Langtry and Mr. Gebhard. There is no truth in such idle talk, nothing of the kind being contemplated at present.

Like the balance of the drivers who have visited the Pacific coast this winter, A. J. Feeks could not resist the temptation, but parted with a goodly sum to Wilber F. Smith, and bought a California horse. Adrian, like a lot more, will travel East.

The mare Peri, by Holmley, dam Fairy Belle by Wingrave, brought to California by Dr. C. W. Aby for Mrs. Langtry, died at St. Helena last week, from nervous prostration. She was valued at $1,500. She was brought to America in the spring of 1888.

The Dwyer Bros. want to reduce their stable to about fifteen or twenty horses. The enormous expense attendant on keeping up such a stable as they have at present, has determined the gentlemen to dispose of their surplus stock, and thus reduce the expenses.

A race took place last week on the Bay District Track between Jack Brady and Minnie B. for $200 a side. Jockey Hazlitt was on Brady, O'Neil having the mount on the mare. The distance was eleven-sixteenths of a mile, Brady proving the winner. Time, 1:10½.

The following horses each won $5,000 in a single race last year: Aurelia, Auricoma, Bella B., Caliente, Emperor of Norfolk, Firenzi, Gypsy Queen, King Ernest—Mimi filly, Los Angeles, Prince Royal, Reporter, Salvator, Sorrento, Sensation—Faverdale colt, The Lioness, and Proctor Knott.

A small crowd assembled at the Sacramento race track on last Saturday afternoon to witness a pacing race between Mr. Hodson's Johnnie Skelton and Mr. Ober's Little Doe. Johnnie Skelton was not in good form and was easily defeated in straight heats; best time 2:34.

The Garden City Jockey Club met on Wednesday and elected officers pro tem. For President, Mr. Williamson was elected and C. T. Boots, Secretary. It was decided to hold a spring meeting on the following dates: March 30th, April 2nd, 4th and 6th. The programme will be published next week.

A meeting of the directors of the twenty-sixth agricultural district was held at Ione February, 2d. A committee was appointed to report on the advisability of giving a spring meeting. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, U. S. Gregory; Secretary, C. T. LaGrave; Treasurer, Geo. Woolsey.

Senator Hearst's horse, Glen Echo, is in the Brooklyn Handicap at 100 pounds, and some of the Eastern journals already notice him as a dangerous horse. He certainly is very speedy, and last spring while exercising with Gorgo, always showed up as the best of the two.

Ellwood, by A. W. Richmond, dam Crighton's First, has again reduced her record. On a wager, she was driven by Charles Durfee a mile, at Los Angeles, on Thursday of last week, and paced the mile in 2:17¾, thus taking 2¼ seconds of her former time. She will, in all probability, be bred before long to Del Sur.

The Edgewood Stock Farm, situated near Terre Haute, Ind., suffered severe loss last week, by the death of the celebrated brood mare Reina Victoria, for whom $7,000 was paid. Two days afterwards Mohican, by Hambletonian, 10, dam Maggie Jones by American Star, was taken with congestion, and also died. The stallion cost the company $17,000.

There will, in all probability, be a good trotting race at the Bay District Track on Washington's Birthday. The horses that are spoken of as starters are Thos. Searles' Sunflower, James Hunter's Melrose, A. B. Sprockles' Gracie B., D. J. McCarty's St. David, and Bonanza, owned by Richard Havey.

At the San Jose race track there are at present twelve horses belonging to the Elmwood Stable; W. L. Appleley has six. Cy. Mulkey, in charge of the Babb Stable, is looking after half a dozen, while Reavey & Co. have two, and W. Donathan one. At Cayote, in the same county, Thomas Fisher is taking care of ten good ones, and all are in good condition.

Sam Gamble says it would be a good idea for the various fair associations to offer a good liberal purse for trotting and pacing stallions that have never beaten 2:18. He also suggests that during the latter part of the season there should be one or more two mile heat races, to test the speed, courage and endurance of the same class of stallions.

Mr. I. DeTurk has placed under the charge of Mr. McGraw at Santa Rosa, a four-year-old colt by Anteeo, dam the Button mare, dam of Alexander Button, sire of Yolo Maid; also a two-year-old Anteeo filly, dam a Nutwood mare, both of which are showing in good form.

Mr. D. D. Streeter, president of the Overland Park Club of Denver, accompanied by George H. Esterbrook, is paying a visit to the breeding farms of California. The gentlemen made a pleasant call a few days ago and report themselves as highly pleased with the Pacific coast.

Mr. Joseph Battell, of Middlebury, Vt., is at present in San Francisco hunting up information for his book, "The Morgan horse." Mr. Battell has been engaged in the work for five years and will probably have the book in shape so that it can be published this fall.

The Los Angeles Tribune says that Mr. L. J. Rose has a record as a breeder which no one can equal. He bred the dams of Sable Wilkes, Bell Boy and Hinda Rose, three of the fastest three-year-old trotters in the world. Beautiful Bell, the dam of Bell Boy, is by The Moor out of Minnehaha. The dam of Sable Wilkes is Sable, who was sired by The Moor, and who is a full sister to Del Sur.

The John Dowdy ranch, says the Gilroy Advocate, has been leased to Mr. and Mrs. James, of San Francisco. Mrs. James has been known until lately as Miss A. L. Wilson, assistant editor and business manager of the Breeder and Sportsman. The stock interests of this part of California will without doubt enlist the intelligent attention of these new comers.

Mr. Porter Ashe, in his testimony before the committee who have the pool bill in charge, stated that Mr. George Hankins, of the celebrated Chicago stable, was coming to California for the purpose of starting a breeding farm. Mr. Hankins may probably think that he would like to have a farm, but when it comes to starting the matter going, I am under the impression that Mr. Hankins will buy at the public sales instead of breeding.

About two weeks ago, Brother Baker of the Rural Spirit, commended to my care J. N. Crabb, of the Walla Walla Agricultural Society, with the admonition that "Joe was a bit of a crank." Mr. Crabb is just the sort of a crank I like, and I am satisfied that if every Agricultural Society on the Pacific coast, had a few such on their Board of Directors, much money would have been saved that has been frittered away.

The Petaluma Argus suggests that a syndicate of gentlemen purchase Dawn, so that he may not be taken from the state, and the Los Angeles Tribune wants the same thing done about Stamboul. You had better be quick about it gentlemen, for there are parties now in California looking after both horses and also after Sidney. Eastern breeders have evidently determined to break the boom in Californian stock, by getting the stallions away.

Capt. Guy E. Grosse of Santa Rosa has his stable in training at the track there, under the able management of J. H. Lawrence. Among the number are to be seen four splendid specimens of the Anteeo stock, and one grand-daughter of the same sire. Mr. Lawrence also has in charge a bay gelding, by Alexander, three years old, the property of W. P. Fine, and a roan gelding of the same age, by Capri, owned by Mr. Joseph Tillner.

The Breeder and Sportsman gets brighter and brighter each week. Alex. F. Waugh, who hides his identity under the nom de plume of "Grim," dishes up all the local happenings in a crisp, gossipy manner, and his page of pungent paragraphs, containing the news of the trotting and running world, is a feature which is gaining many readers for the representative turf journal of the West.—"Los Angeles Tribune."

Mr. William McGraw has a fine black stallion, four years old, which he is handling at the Santa Rosa track. He is by Alcona, first dam Fountana by Almont, is a splendid mover, shows himself speedy, and may make a mark before the season closes. The same gentleman also has a bay gelding, which he has named Lookout, and my correspondent there whispers quietly that a good many will have to look out for him, as he is a very promising horse.

In answer to a dispatch sent by the Breeder and Sportsman, Mr. B. C. Holly states that he has sold his ch h Woodnut to Mr. R. Steele of Philadelphia for the sum of $20,000. When Dr. Eckstein was in San Francisco last month he got an option on the stallion, the sale of Woodnut being the result. Woodnut is beyond question the best of the foals got by Nutwood, and has been one of the representative stallions of the state. He is by Nutwood, dam Addie (dam of Manon 2:21) by Hambletonian Chief (Hasbrouks), son of Hambletonian, 10; g d called a Harry Clay mare, pedigree not traced. Woodnut was bred by Peter Coutts of Mayfield, Santa Clara county.

Many of our idle moments are spent in reading the Breeder and Sportsman. It is a genuine pleasure each week to peruse "General Topics" and "Grim's Gossip." The editor, Jos. Cairn Simpson, is an acknowledged authority on all horse matters, having had many years of practical experience, and, although coming down the home stretch on the last heat, he still writes with such vim and vigor that unknowing ones could but imagine that he is a young man, with no aches, pains or sorrows which accompany old age; and we could not wish for less than to see him live beyond his allotted time, and give us still more of his practical knowledge of the noblest and grandest animal God has given man.—"Lake County Examiner."

Mascotte, the celebrated two-year-old trotter, by Stamboul, out of Minnehaha, has not been sold after all, says the Los Angeles Tribune. The negotiations for the sale of Mascotte were conducted by telegraph. Mr. Bradshaw telegraphed Mr. Rose that the price was satisfactory and he would purchase the well-bred youngster. A few days later he telegraphed again that he could not be here for some time to come. Next day Mr. Rose telegraphed that unless Mr. Bradshaw closed in a day or two that all negotiations would be off. The breeders of America will now have a chance to bid for one of the grandest two-year-olds in this country, as Mr. Rose has concluded to send Mascotte east with the balance of Stamboul and Alcazar's youngsters which are to be sold in New York next month. The trotter will be shipped from Rosemeade next Saturday week. Lee Rose will go east with the horses.

Oakland Trotting Park.

A meeting of the directors of the Oakland Trotting Park Association was held at the office of R. T. Carroll, 109 Front Street, San Francisco, on Tuesday last. The meeting was called, principally, to elect a president to fill the unexpired term of the late James Adams, Esq. Mr. R. T. Carroll was unanimously elected to the position, the term of which extends to June 16th. Several bills were presented and ordered paid. A general discussion was entered into relative to the advisability of giving a meeting in the near future, and a committee was appointed to prepare a programme and report to the directors at the next meeting. The association is in a flourishing condition, and the members enthusiastic, two elements which combine to make such societies successful. Another meeting will be held on the 23d of this month, when action will be taken about the proposed race programme, as the committee appointed will report on that date.

Spring Handicaps.

The records of the spring, or rather of the early summer, handicaps in this country, show very few won by three-year-olds, says the "Republic." Of the thirteen important handicaps run at Brooklyn, Jerome and Sheepshead, between the middle of May and the end of June last year, the winners were: Richmond and Favor, six-year-olds; The Bard, Elkwood and Eurus, five-year-olds; Aurelia, Belvidere, Ordway and Terra Cotta, four-year-olds. Nor do the "away back" records show many winning three-year-olds. The Fordham was first run at Jerome Park in 1868, and it has only been won three times by three-year-olds, viz., by Danger in 1878, Ferida in 1879, and Oriflamme in 1887, the last-named running second to Eurus for the Suburban in 1887. Many of the answers to the English questions were supplemented with opinions of general interest to race-goers. In this respect, Mr. John Porter, trainer of the famous Kingsclere stable, and of Ormonde and other horses that have run in England during the past few years, made an excellent point in connection with cup races and horses able to go a distance. He says:

Under the present system, whereby all the rich prizes are given to two and three-year-old races, averaging from five furlongs to a mile and a half in length, I question whether, in a short time, we shall have any cup races, or horses to run in them, or jockeys with sufficient judgment and patience to ride them, as the preponderance of sprint races tends to do away with that patience and judgment which is so requisite in long races, and which has been so notably displayed by jockeys of the old school.

This is a very brief paragraph, but it shows the situation both in England and the United States, not only in the question of horses but of riders. Attention has been called to the almost entire elimination of stallions able to go a distance. The old style of sire that, like Glenelg and Fellowcraft, ran four miles, ends with their deaths; while even those that did run cup distances, like Aristides, Bramble, Hindoo, Longfellow, Springbok and Wanderer of the homebreds, or Mortimer and Rayon d'Or of those imported, can only be replaced by such horses as Pontiac and Sir Dixon, whose greatest distance run was a mile and a half. Neither of them lacks speed, but with mares no better the produce can only be expected to go about a mile. Until the present time we have had horses that under the old system of training, would have stood the test of distance, and there are still a few that, with especial preparation, can run two, three, or even four miles.

ATHLETICS.

Golden Gate Club.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—The club year in the Golden Gate Amateur Athletic Club is drawing to a close, and as is customary the Nominating Committee met on Tuesday evening last at the gymnasium, and nominated the following gentlemen, subject to the ratification of the club at the general meeting and exhibition to be held on Wednesday, February 20th. For President, Hon. J. A. Steinbach; Vice-President, W. B. May; Secretary, J. J. Jamison; Treasurer, Frank Jones: Board of Directors, L. G. Flannagan, C. H. Smith, Cress. Unger, Dr. V. A. Chaigneau, Henry Lunstedt, A. Rudyear, and W. W. Shannon. The condition of the Club is satisfactory in all respects. Its finances are all that could be desired, and its membership includes many of the best known devotees to athletics in the city.

J. J. JAMISON, Secretary.

SAN FRANCISCO, February 14, 1889.

That famous general sportsman and athlete, Phil Jacoby, came near being exterminated on Wednesday evening last. He is a musical genius in addition to to his other accomplishments, and while sitting in a music hall enjoying himself, had a tray of heavy tumblers tipped upon him by an awkward waiter. A lot of contusions and a passing faint were the only injuries, which might easily have been more serious.

CANOEING.

"Sail and Paddle," an aquatic monthly journal, published by W. C. Pentz in New York, has taken the place of the "American Canoeist." The new publication is strictly a class journal, and is carefully prepared to meet the needs of canoeists, a very critical clientage.

Oakland Canoe Club.

Active preparations are being made for the trip to Tiburon on Washington's birthday, to enjoy the hospitality of the Corinthian Yacht Club. The canoes will be towed over on the Friday, returning on Sunday evening. Saturday and Sunday will be devoted to sailing around those waters, Friday being the occasion of the reception by the Yacht Club.

The canoe Frolic cruised over there last Sunday. It was dead calm at the start, and until Goat Island was reached it was hard paddling. Here a breeze from the north sprung up, and soon blew stiff. With reefed mainsail the canoe made splendid time, the sea being quite heavy, owing to the wind blowing against the ebb tide, reaching Tiburon at 11:30, just three and a half hours from the boat house. When the paddling to the island is considered, and the remainder a dead beat to windward, this shows remarkable speed in a seaway, and pretty readily disproves the idea that the Frolic is a racing machine. Pirate, Conchita, Mab and others were out in the creek, and had some fine sailing. The former does not seem to do very well to windward with her new big sails. Whisper has received a new coat of varnish and looks very smart.

ROD.

Among the Redwoods.

CHAPTER XIV.

A FEW WORDS 'SIGNIFICANT OF MUCH."

To be wise is one thing, and to gain credit for wisdom because driven from the ordinary routine through force of disagreeable circumstances is another. The first state, presumably, brings with it a satisfactory degree of exaltation, while the second is productive only of morbid depression.

Our friend Philip, lounging idly on the verandah at Myrtle Heights, teasing Nestor, or meditating with much seriousness on a quarrel with Erl which had come about the day previous, was in an extreme stage of the second condition, although Dick, who by this time had left the hotel with his charges, and could in no way evade Rachel's sarcastic pleasantries, Natalie's heavy attempts at poetical remarks, or the intense heat which beat directly on his head, was accrediting him with unparalleled wisdom for staying at home.

Perhaps if Philip had known this, it might have afforded him some comfort, but he did not, and was therefore without even the salve of friendly, if erroneous approbation.

It is astonishing how some miserable, little, biting thought can poison the very best springs of existence, and render a man who has really slight cause for unhappiness as wretched as one who is staggering under a load of sorrow. Looked at from all sides, it was but a petty thing that troubled Philip, and yet it had kept him in misery ever since he opened his eyes at daylight. And Dick would have laughed heartily had he known that at the very moment he was planning departure, Philip was also speculating how arrangements could be made for his mother and sisters, and adieux be said to the Selden household.

A slight investigation forced him to see, however, that such a plan was impracticable at the present time, for Mr. Selden had been called unexpectedly to Felton, Erl was invisible, and Mrs. Morrison too closely occupied with household affairs and Rob's weeding—like himself, a trifle lacking in finish—to have eyes or ears for anything else. At least, such was Philip's conclusion in regard to her, but it is vastly amusing to picture what consternation would have attacked him had everything she found eyes and ears for been suddenly demonstrated for his edification. Whether the training of sons brought keenness, or love for the girl who had grown up beside her gave insight, I know not, but many odd thoughts mingled themselves with domestic cares, and added uncertainty to the future.

"Come, child!" she said repeatedly to Erl, "Come, child, wake up! You don't seem to have no more notion o' what you're doin' than the little birds that drag themselves out o' the nest before their wings are right fur it. Wits bright, and eyes open fur daylight! That's what I always tell my boys!"

And Erl would try to shake off the benumbing sensation that gave everything such an unreal, dreamlike aspect, usually to find she had wrought some irremediable harm to the cooking, and to hear Tommy get the scolding that should have come to her.

Three weeks ago such injustice would have caused active remonstrance, but now she seemed capable of nothing except stealing away by herself to pass the time in listless reveries. In spirits, too, she varied more and more. One hour her laughter echoed from corner to corner of the house, and song followed song until the very birds tired of following. The next all was quiet, and she sat in tears beside the tarnished harp in her mothers's room. Favors to Ben and Wolfgang grew fewer with every passing day, and careless romps with Nestor were at an end. The change which Mr. Selden had so long wished for was come, and his daughter's heart was no longer the heart of a child. Not the slightest atom of all this escaped Mrs. Morrison, who daily grew more doubtful whether to be pleased or sad, and made resolve after resolve to talk with Erl.

"Because," she said to herself, "I remember when Tom first came into my mind. Sakes alive! even my old sun bonnet and all. And young folks don't change. Her father 'll never see this; and if he should, ten to one his heart ain't young enough to stand it. Life goes on that way quiet and full o' the same things for years, then all at once it changes, and you don't know where you're standin'. Well, thanks to the Lord, my heart's young as it ever was. 'Taint changed a mite since I told Tom I'd go with him and work up hill and down. And it's been that way pretty much; but I wouldn't a missed bein' loved by him for ten times more."

The result of such thoughts was usually an additional turn to the meat or flavor to the pudding, which only shows how, after the pulses have become regulated, good within makes good without.

There were days, however, when the brisk matron was sorely put about by her darling's vagaries and this was one, for Erl had been absent since early morning, and Mrs. Morrison had worried until her bread was threatening failure, and her pot-pie exacted attention, when she put everything from view but dinner, and calmed herself by the promise to start on a search immediately after, at the same time forbidding Rob who had signified his willingness to perform this duty, to have a single idea in such a direction.

For all that was eaten, the dinner might have remained uncooked in the pantry.

"And next time it'll not be so tasty, you may count on that," said Mrs. Morrison, as she quickly removed one thing after another. "It's poor food that's better for a second seasonin'."

With this terse remark she opened the door to give Nestor his bone, and saw Erl coming slowly toward the house carrying a small basket of white flowers, saw too that Philip came down from the verandah, took the basket and followed her into the hall.

"I thought violets were past," he said as he placed the basket on a window sill and looked at her.

"These were planted very late, and have not come out well. They are so crumpled and yellow." Her eyes were bent on the flowers, and she twisted her hat strings nervously.

Notwithstanding Erl's height, her exceedingly slender figure and marked expression of innocence lent a childish air which appealed forcibly to all that was tender and loving in Philip. And this was a very great deal; for although he had not the intense passion of a more romantic temperament his self controll was quite as deeply moved by what he did feel, and, maybe because he was an only son; accustomed to having every wish fulfilled, he found it exceedingly hard to strive against the impulses of his nature.

Still I doubt not he would have done better had not that singular force placed by the ancients under full control of the Fates, and which plays a much greater part in the lives of ordinary individuals than the coldly scientific intellect may admit, announced itself by declaring to Philip that his power of restraint would be increased through the possession of a violet. Without pausing to consider he placed his hand in the basket.

As he did so Erl laid her fingers impulsively on his arm. "Please do not," she said.

"Then it is impossible to forgive me yet?"

"Oh, no, but I—" she stopped and looked up, her eyes appearing larger and softer because of the tears they held.

The sight of them robbed Philip of all prudence and self-control. He leaned forward and drew her toward him finding only voice enough to whisper:

"Tell me, what is it, dear?" Much as one would to a troubled child.

There was a moment's yielding on Erl's part, but no reply, and as he drew her closer and bent to kiss her, she darted away and left him standing alone by the flowers.

THE GUN.

Shooting notes are scare and not likely to become more plenty. The best sport going is at canvas backs on the Suisun marsh. Baron Von Schroeder and Mr. J. M. Adams on Monday last killed forty birds each at the Tulle Belle, getting sixteen "cans" for the Baron and thirteen for Mr. Adams. On that day Dr. Davis and Mr. Ben Stickney shot at the Cordelia and brought home about ninety birds, forty being canvas backs. Mr. John G. Kittle and Mr. "Flip" Bates shot at the Ibis Club on a foggy morning early in the week and had poor sport, there being no flight. On the Petaluma marsh big bags of canvas backs are daily being made.

Gun Club Handicaps.

In sending the regulations and handicaps which will govern the season's shooting by members of the Gun Club, Mr. J. K. Orr, of the Executive Committee says: The first match of the season will take place at San Bruno on February 22d, the club going down by the 8:30 A. M. train from Fourth and Townsend Streets. It has not yet been decided where the club will shoot the balance of the season, but probably at Adam's Point.

The Executive Committee for the year are Messrs. J. K. Orr, H. W. Woodward and Geo. Leviston. The prizes, regulations and handicaps are as follows:

First prize, a Gold Match Box.
Second prize, a Flask.
Third prize, a Hunting Suit.
Fourth prize, a Revolver.

The first prize to be for the best average of any five matches during the season.

The second and third prizes to be for the second and third best average of any five matches during the season, but not to be contested for by any member of the first class.

The fourth prize shall be contested for only by the members in the fourth class, and is for the best average in this class of any five matches during the season; but should any member in this class win either the first, second or third prize, he shall relinquish all right to the fourth prize, and in that event the fourth prize shall be awarded to the member of this class making the next best average.

All ties shall be shot off at the respective distances of each class at four single birds. There will be eight regular matches during the season of 1889.

For any member to participate in the above prizes, it will be necessary for him to shoot in at least five matches during the season.

Any member who shall shoot in all the eight matches, may select his five best scores, and the average will be made up from them.

The first match of the season will be held at San Bruno, on the 22d day of February, and the following matches at times and places to be fixed by the Executive Committee.

In all sweepstake and pool shooting, the members shall shoot at the respective distances as laid down in this year's handicap.

HANDICAPS.

First Class—To shoot at 30 yards, and no allowance made for gauge of gun. Ewing, Orr, Butler, Babcock, Jellett, Laing, Wilson, Wattles.

Second Class—To shoot at 30 yards with 10 gauge gun, or 28 yards with 12 gauge gun. Golcher, Gillette, Kilgariff, Sweet, R. B. Woodward, Geo. Leviston, Grant.

Third Class—To shoot at 28 yards with 10 gauge gun, or 26 yards with 12 gauge gun. Havens, Howard, Hamilton, H. W. Woodward, Shorb.

Fourth Class—To shoot at 26 yards with 10 gauge gun, or 24 yards with 12 gauge gun. Smith, Wm. Leviston, Riordan, Coleman, Bourn, Hill, Haggin, Fox, Stitt, Webster.

SAN FRANCISCO, February 5, 1889.

From the Extreme North End.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—News notes in a sportsman's way are few about Tacoma, and not easy to find. The shooting has not been as good as usual this winter. Our principal sport is at ducks, and the weather has been so mild and pleasant that they have kept out in the open water of the lakes and ponds, most of them going into the shallows only to feed by night. Our wildfowl shooting is generally of the very best, particularly at mallard and canvas backs, while for snipe shooting there is no section equal to Washington Territory.

But little interest has been shown as yet in bird dogs, the country being new and very heavily timbered, so that, although there are a good many birds they cannot be hunted successfully over staunch dogs. We read however, with the greatest interest, the reports of the field trials at Bakersfield, and expect in time to meet our brethren, with dogs of our own breeding and training, and show them that we are fully in sympathy with every higher development of sportsmanship.

Interest here at present centers in the fifth annual tournament of the Sportsmen's Association of the North West to be held here some time in June. We shall have three days at live birds and blue rocks, and many good prizes will be hung up. Programmes will be sent to the famous shots of California, Dr. Knowles, Frank and Henry Bassford, Crittenden Robinson, Al. Donaldson, Martinez Chick, Gus. Knight, and all the rest whose names have become familiar because we see them so often in the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN in connection with brilliant accomplishments at the traps. We extend a cordial invitation to brother trap-shots in California, and hope many of them will attend our tournament.

Our committee of arrangements are already making preparations for the tournament, and the interest shown by our leading sportsmen and citizens speaks well for the affair. Among those most active are Messrs. E. E. Ellis, W. R. Dodge, R. B. Mullen, T. A. Bringham, H. P. Hoagland, W. E. Box, R. S. Albright, W. A. Berry, Joseph Bunvell, R. Varth and S. G. Lister. We shall have two thousand live birds on hand, and good ones.

THE KENNEL.

Dog owners are requested to send for publication the earliest possible notices of whelps, sales, names claimed, presentations and deaths in their kennels, in all instances writing plainly names of sire and dam and of grandparents, colors, dates and breed.

At instance of the Knights of the Trigger, the Supervisors of Kern County have by ordinance made the close season for quail from February 15th to October 1st. The change from the general law is made necessary by the climatic conditions prevalent in the county, the birds pairing early. If the Bakersfield sportsmen would throw a little buckwheat or wheat in spots on the field trial grounds, it would concentrate the birds, and insure the fullest needed supply for the trials of next year.

Friend Sherman of Bakersfield insists that "Mr. Schreiber's pointer, Mountain Boy, is a handsome dog, almost as handsome as is Sirius in that valued picture of ours, where the dog's tail and the sportsman's gun both point backward." Our friend is too severe in his demands about "pointing," when he expects a dog's tail to point forward.

Mr. J. B. Stoddard of Tom's River, N. J., writes that he is thinking of coming to California to set up a breeding and training kennel, if he receives encouragement. Mr. Stoddard formerly lived here, is familiar with the game and country, and can give satisfactory references.

Doctor A. C. Davenport, of Stockton, after a series of deaths in his Cocker kennel, calculated to discourage any but a really enthusiastic fancier, is now in a way to establish a good stud of cockers, having secured two good brood animals and sent to Iowa for a dog.

Mr. John Stack has placed his Irish setter, Grouse, in the hands of Mr. DeMott, and will run him in the All-Aged Stake of '90. Grouse is a very fast, staying dog, sure on birds, and will probably run into a good place in the stake.

Mr. W. D. Howe brought his six months old pointer Elko, by Profesor—Belle H., to our office on Tuesday last. The dog has been fed Spratt's Biscuit, and his splendid developement is a tribute to the excellence of that food. He is of good size, fine quality, immense bone and power, and very keen. He will go in the next Pacific Coast Derby.

Sales.

Mr. W. S. Kittle has sold the English setter Beautiful Snow, by Dan—Sibyl, to Mr. Fred Wooster, San Francisco.

The Fleetfoot Kennel, Delhi, N. Y., has sold to Dr. A. C. Davenport, Stockton, Cocker Spaniels

Pet H., liver and white ticked, whelped November 8, 1883. By Col. Stubbs (Captain—Flirt) out of Beauty (Grip—Flirt).

Dot H., liver and white, whelped November 18, 1883. By Brag (Wildair—Little Buttercup) out of Chipper (Jet—Fannie). In whelp to Black Harry (Black Pete—Althea).

Mr. R. E. Culbreth, San Francisco, has purchased the rough St. Bernard dog puppy Chequasset Olive, by Monte Rosa—Lady Hanley, from the Chequasset Kennels, Mass.

Visits.

Mr. Fred Wooster's English setter Beautiful Snow, Dan—Sibyl, to Mr. W. S. Kittle's Luke (Carl R—Bessie) on Jan. 25th, 1889.

Mr. H. R. Brown's pointer Donna Sensation (Sensation—Seph G.) to Mr. E. W. Brigg's Climax (Bang Bang—Bellona) on January 28, 1889.

Mr. Basil Heathcote's May, fox terrier bitch, February 10, 1889, to J. B. Martin's Regent Jock.

Mr. G. Debenham's Snip, fox terrier bitch, February 11, 1889, to J. B. Martin's Regent Jock (Regent Vox—Blemton Saffron.)

The American Kennel Gazette.

The initial number of the "American Kennel Gazette," the official journal of the American Kennel Club is at hand, and is in every respect a credit to the club and its officers. The "Gazette" will in no way infringe upon the province of the regular sportsman's journals, but will merely be an official medium for the publication of the proceedings and announcements of the A. K. C., and will keep and publish a complete and official record of all that transpires during the year, in connection with shows, field trials or other matters affecting breeding and management of dogs.

Occidental Coursing Club.

The regular monthly meeting was held at 539 California Street on Tuesday evening last, President Gregory in the chair, and Messrs. H. Deane, P. Lyman, H. Wormington, S. L. Abbot, Jr, T. J. O'Keeffe, J. R. Dickson, P. Gallagher, J. F. Carroll and H. Boyd present.

T. Cooney and F. C. Long, of San Jose, D. N. Swan, of Merced, and J. D. Share, of Los Gatos, were elected to membership. Notice was given that at the next regular meeting of the club a proposition to raise the annual dues to $5 would be introduced, the present nominal sum paid as dues being insufficient.

It was ordered that the draw for the Birthday Stake, to be run on Washington's Birthday, be made on Tuesday night, February 19th at 539 California Street, the size of the stake to be fixed at that time. Entrance to the stake to be six dollars.

Messrs. H. Deane, Henry Wormington and Thomas J. O'Keeffe were appointed a committee to nominate officers for the ensuing club year, to report at the next meeting.

President Gregory stated that interest in the coming coursing meeting of the club was very great, and prospects were that a great meeting would be given. The club then adjourned.

California Kennel Club.

The California Kennel Bench Show and Field Trial Club met at 539 California street, city, on last Wednesday, J. B. Martin presiding. A special committee on field trials reported progress and was given further time. A similar report was heard from the committee on transportation, and the club then adjourned.

Pacific Kennel Club.

President Wilson occupied the chair at the P. K. C. meeting in Parlor A, Palace Hotel, on Wednesday evening last. Those present were William Schreiber, Clarence Haight, John H. Wise, James E. Watson, H. W. M. Sandbach, J. F. Carroll, H. R. Brown, and Ely Hutchinson.

Secretary Watson reported $199.92 in the treasury.

It was ordered that entries to the coming dog show close on May 14th, the show date being May 22d to 25th inclusive. The qualifications and general desirability as judges of Messrs. C. H. Mason, Wm. Graham, John Davidson, J. M. Tracy and James Mortimer were discussed, the club strongly favoring the latter gentleman, who is Superintendent of the Westminster Kennel Club of New York and a good judge.

A general discussion on the projected show then took place. Secretary James E. Watson, in reply to inquiries, stated that last year's show had run $800 behind, even though the guaranty fund of $350 had been called in and used. The club had seventy members in good standing.

John H. Wise thought it would be a good idea to assess the members $10 or $15 each, and thus create a reserve fund. He did not see why a few members should assume the responsibility of a guaranty.

President Ramon E. Wilson thought difficulties were obviated by the guarantee fund being subscribed by the few. He had no doubt that the coming show would be a thorough success and pay its own debts. Last year the expenses were very heavy, and it was a fact that bench shows, owing to the unsavory one previously held in Platt's Hall, were not in good repute. The club's show in 1888 had surprised people, and instead of having a total entry of 250 dogs, he felt sure that this year's entries would aggregate 350 or 400. The date was more suitable also, as when the last show was held (April) the dogs were not in good condition.

Mr. Wise asked if no other building than the Pavilion could be secured. The rent, $125 a day, seemed large.

The general feeling was in favor of having the Pavilion, and it will be secured.

The Committee on Admission to Membership reported favorably of William S. Browne of Santa Clara and Joseph Morizio of San Francisco. The names were balloted on and the gentlemen declared elected.

John F. Carroll, who acted as superintendent of last year's bench show, stated that he would be unable to fill the position this year. Mr. Carroll promised to suggest the name of some suitable person to act as superintendent.

The committee appointed to revise the premium list recommended the following alterations and additions with reference to last year's list: For Newfoundland puppies under 12 months, premiums of $5 and a diploma will be offered; the same for great Dane puppies. Foxhounds will be classified as follows: English, dogs, $10, $5 and diploma; bitches, same; puppies $5 and diploma; American, premiums on same scale.

Irish water spaniels—Dogs, $10, $5, diploma; bitches, same.

Cocker spaniels, same scale as Irish water spaniels.

Collie pups, under 12 months, $5, diploma.

Black-and-tan terriers over seven pounds, $10, $5, diploma; under seven pounds, same.

In the special prize-list the $10 premium and diplomas for the first and second respectively were struck out in the cases of best pointer, best English setter, best Irish setter, best black-and-tan, best greyhound, best fox-terrier and best bull-terrier. There will be substituted a special prize of $25 for the best kennel of three dogs entered by any one owner who is a non-resident of this State.

The report was adopted.

It is proposed as an additional attraction to have exhibits of fancy fowls and pigeons. Those interested in this direction will be invited to attend the next meeting of the Executive Committee to confer in the matter.

A. K. C. Notes.

The Executive Committee of the American Kennel Club, at its last meeting, decided upon the following matters, which should be carefully noted and kept in mind by members of the Pacific Kennel Club:

The American Kennel Club Stud-Book, after the completion of the present volume, will be issued annually; will contain a full index, and will be published bound in cloth. Numbers will be assigned upon the receipt of each entry, and will be published monthly in the "American Kennel Gazette." Registry in the Stud-Book can be made only under the following conditions:

Where sire and dam are already registered, or are directly descended from dogs already registered in said book.

Where dogs possess an authenticated pedigree extending back three generations.

Where dogs (not eligible under the provisions as above required) have won not less than two first prizes in the regular classes, at any show recognized by the American Kennel Club.

All entries for the Stud-Book will be published in the issue of the "American Kennel Gazette" following the receipt of said entry, to enable inspection, and the correction of any errors that may appear.

The fee for entry in the Stud-Book will remain, as heretofore, fifty cents for each dog entered.

All dogs shown at any show held by a member of the American Kennel Club, and not already registered in the Stud-Book, must be registered in the "American Kennel Gazette." The fee for such entry will be twenty-five cents.

The "American Kennel Gazette" will be published on the last Thursday of each and every month.

AMERICAN KENNEL CLUB ASSOCIATES.

1. Any person who, in the opinion of the American Kennel Club Committee, has not misconducted himself or herself in any way in connection with dogs, dog shows, or trials, or in any way acted in opposition to the fundamental rules and principles upon which the Club has been established, or in any other manner which would make it undesirable that he or she should be an Associate, shall enjoy the privileges upon an annual payment of five dollars.

2. They shall be entitled to a copy of the American Kennel Club "Stud Book" annually, and also to a copy each month of the "American Kennel Gazette," post free. To enter two dogs, bona fide their own property, in the American Kennel Club "Stud-Book" each year, free of charge.

3. They shall be entitled to delegates to the American Kennel Club in proportion to their membership—one delegate for every one hundred members, who shall be elected by ballot at their annual meeting, held in New York City during the first week in January of every year. Voting for delegates by proxy, or by mail to the Secretary of the American Kennel Club, shall be allowed.

4. Their delegates shall be qualified, without the concurrence of his colleagues, to individually present any grievance of an Associate member to the American Kennel Club for consideration, and in all such cases the American Kennel Club shall assume original jurisdiction.

5. The names of all persons who wish to become Associates shall be submitted to the Committee of the American Kennel Club.

6. Subscriptions shall be due on election, and again on the first January in each year. Any Associate who has not paid his or her subscription on or before February 1st following, may be struck out of the list of Associates.

7. Any Associate who, in the opinion of the Committee of the American Kennel Club, has infringed Rule No. 1, as above, shall cease to become an Associate.

8. No Associate shall be entitled to any of the above privileges until his subscription for the current year has been paid.

Another Hunt Club.

Editor Breeder and Sportsman:—From a correspondent who lives at Pasadena, I learn that a club known as the Valley Hunt Club has been formed there to encourage coursing and equestrianism. The officers are: President, Theodore D. Barnum; Vice President, Mr. C. F. Holder; Secretary, Mrs. B. M. Wotkyns; Treasurer, Mrs. F. F. Buell-Masters of the Hounds, Mr. J. DeBarth Shorb, Jr., Mr. W. E. Browning of San Rafael Ranch, Mr. Robert Vandevort, and H. N. Hall, M. D. The club numbers eighty or more members, active and honorary, and when in the field, mounted and on coaches, presents a fine appearance.

The regular meets occur once a month, and the club rides over one of the finest hunting countries to be found.

To Pasadena hunters, one or two hares caught amply repay the hard riding, and make a fine day's sport, and many find sufficient pleasure in the mere chase. It is not the slaughter of hares that is desired, but the pleasure obtained from watching the fine work of the dogs—the intelligence displayed in their methods, and the magnificent sight of a pack going at full speed over the country.

My correspondent adds: "In Southern California, coursing, in a strict sense, is not followed. The hounds are ridden after as though by fox hunters, and the turns and tricks of the hare all enjoyed and appreciated, but no points or turns are counted. The dog that catches the hare, or makes the longest and finest runs, shows the best staying power and capacity for quick turns, and catches the hare, carries off the honors with the ladies or gentlemen in at the death; a number of the lady members of the Valley Hunt ride home with the mask of the hare pinned to their habit, won after a run that in speed and danger is equal to any made in eastern fox hunting. In the meets of the Valley Hunt from three to eight hares are generally started, and two catches are made on an average, though a single one would be considered eminently satisfactory, as here the hare has the advantage, and when caught has thoroughly tested the dogs and riders. Cotton tails are not chased, the dogs being called off, and baiting them with fox terriers finds no favor. The object of the Hunt Club is to elevate the sport, if possible, to the highest plane."

Now, Mr. Editor, I believe I voice the sentiments of all lovers of out-door sports, and particularly of those who have had the great pleasure of witnessing genuine coursing, when I doff my hat, and make my acknowledgements to my correspondent for his exceedingly interesting note, as well as for the introduction it gives us to the Valley Hunt Club of Pasadena. The names of the officers afford ample guarantee of the high character of the club, which only makes it the more incomprehensible why they should have substituted "rabbit hunting," as practiced by their club, for the magnificent and time-honored sport of coursing.

Not only is the killing of the hare no test of a greyhound's quality or ability, but the veriest "lurcher" which ever escaped from slips will kill more hare in a day than the game, true, staunch courser, who bears his hare from start to finish, giving you an exhibition of all those qualities of speed, dash, courage and agility, which the ideal greyhound must possess. But worse than this our good friends of the Valley Hunt Club turn loose a pack of six or seven greyhounds and two or three stag hounds after one poor little jack, and they call this sport. I wonder what the jack thinks about it? From the earliest history of coursing, one of the most ancient sports of which we have record, the rights of the hare have always been considered. Under no rules or circumstances should more than two dogs be slipped to a hare, and never is true sportsman more happy than when puss by her speed adroitness and staunchness is able to elude the pair, as she has accomplished the whole object of the course—that of thoroughly testing the merits of the two dogs.

I trust our good friends of the Valley Hunt Club will accept this criticism of their methods in the spirit in which it is intended, that of promoting one of the grandest and most elevating sports vouchsafed to man, and which is so peculiarly adapted to our magnificent California, as well as to the temperament of our people. Here in Central California while winter's azure sky, verdant fields and balmy air are all that heart could ask to make a perfect day's outing, the density of population within any striking distance of the city has long since put open coursing out of the question. We are therefore left to inclosed or Plumpton coursing, which indeed is now the principal method of coursing in England. While to those who are accustomed to the open, the Plumption has some objections, it on the other hand has many advantages, and take it all in all furnishes as grand trials and as perfect sport as the other. The Occidental Coursing Club of California, a club organized for the purpose of advancing the true interests of coursing, and which numbers in its membership gentlemen from all parts of the State, will hold its next meeting at Newark Coursing Park, Alameda County, on the 22d inst, at which time the Birthday Cup will be competed for. On behalf of the club I take pleasure in extending to the members of the Valley Hunt Club, a cordial invitation to be with us and accept our hospitalities on that occasion. We will insure you a cordial welcome, a royal day's sport, a coursing meeting conducted strictly to rule, a field of dogs fit to compete anywhere for any prize, and an insight into the beauties of genuine coursing that will be a source of unalloyed present and future joy.

Samuel O. Gregory.
President Occidental Coursing Club.

The Napa Colt Stakes.

We are much pleased to learn that the directors of the Napa Agricultural Society have stricken out the clause barring Sunol and Fleet from the three-year-old and two-year-old stakes, and now these are free for all in fact.

When stakes close so long before the date set for them to be decided, there is little necessity for discriminating against colts which have shown even phenomenal speed. Especially in California. The climate gives an opportunity for winter training, so that colts which have been backward when the fair circuits came to a close, may have progressed so rapidly as to make them "good company, for others which rated far superior, and then again we hear of colts which have been broken only a few months ago, which gave promise of speed which will place them in a good position though contending against top sawyers.

There is another consideration. If a man has had the good fortune to secure a colt which is at the head of the class, he ought to have an opportunity to obtain the benefit, and the parties who would like to keep him out may be in the same situation hereafter when the precedent established would work to their injury.

We hope that the Napa Colt Stakes will secure a whole lot of nominations, and have the utmost confidence that the response from breeders will be satisfactory. There are abundant reasons for a liberal support. The association is popular, the track one of the very best in the State, the location is central, and the facilities for transferring stock to the grounds all that can be desired.

Readily Amended.

Judge Heoffer showed us an amended bill which, by the striking out from the original "inclosure of the race-track, building, hall, structure, course or place, or the part thereof, within which such trial, contest, lot or pasture," and substituting "beyond or outside of this State." That covers the point entirely, and will meet the wishes and ensure the support of every horse-breeder in California.

The Bill to Regulate Veterinary Practice.

We trust that the bill now before the Legislature to regulate the practice of veterinary medicine and surgery will become a law, provided section nine is stricken out. In all other respects it is commendable, but the endeavor to do away with proprietary remedies by imposing a prohibitory tax is, to say the least, too arbitrary to meet with support.

There are remedies which are approved by a large majority of horse owners, and though we are not prone to use medicines, lotions, embrocations, etc., there are some which we would not like to dispense with.

It is all very well for a veterinarian to say I can give you a formula which will be fully as efficacious as that you value, and we do not doubt that many of them are capable of doing so, but to run with a prescription to a drug store, wait until it can be prepared, is not as handy as sending to the depot for a supply. Residents of the country are still more dependant, and such a clause will be against their interest.

It Has a Bearing.

It is not likely that people who are entirely ignorant of the bearing that pool-selling and bookmaking have on the horse-breeding interests of the State, should appreciate the connection. Regarding any system of speculation on races as gambling, somewhat akin to staking money on the turn of a card or cast of dice, it is not surprising that utterances like the following are common. "It is extraordinary that men of lucid intellect do not see that there is no connection between horse-breeding and book-making, and that the breed of horses would go on improving, even though pool-selling were made a capital offense." That sentence was also a part of a "leader" in a morning paper, and the author, unquestionably, believed firmly in the position assumed.

Like everything else in this world, racing and fast trotting, and the breeding of race-horses and fast trotters, are stimulated by the hopes of reward. A premium which is inadequate to cover the cost of production is not an incentive, and unless there are other sources of remuneration the expense will not be incurred. Horse-breeding is emphatically a speculative business. There are chance to be taken at every stage, and from the time that the stud is formed or the mare obtained, Fortune has a good deal to do with the result.

Premiums, purses, stakes, whatever shape presented, there are risks attached. "Show premiums" before rendered available to the exhibitor, entail a payment before the animal can compete. Purses as a rule are burdened with an entrance fee and stakes are a combination of sums subscribed by the nominators, and generally an addition from the "racing fund" or association. Exhibitors in the show-ring, those who "enter" in purses, subscribers to stakes, accept the risks in hopes of securing the prize. Similarly to those who own the contestants, pool-buyers accept the hazard, or rather are impressed with the idea that their judgment is superior to that of others, and feel a greater or less degree of confidence that their knowledge will prove correct.

Although chance is an element, pool-buying is not gambling in the sense which applies that term to results beyond the power of man to control. If a die is cast from a box, without fraudulent manipulation, the chances for an ace or six to come up are equal. Pool-buying is more nearly akin to the purchase of grain or other speculative merchandize, in which the buyer is guided by what he considers will influence future values He depends on superior knowledge, or fancies that his penetrative faculties are keener than those who purchase on the other side. The person who pays ten per cent. on the amount of the purse does so with a belief that he will gain by the operation, and the buyer of pools, or the acceptor of wagers, is governed by the same motive.

But there is a more intimate connection between pool-buying and horse-breeding than the opportunity offered to invest with hopes, however fallacious, of an increase of capital from the venture. To take the California State Fair as an example, the part of the percentage, which goes to the society, represents the large amount of an annual income of from six thousand to upwards of ten thousand dollars. Decrease the premiums by that sum and the entries would be cut down to less than one-half, and that source of revenue be also curtailed.

With smaller fields and inferior animals the attendance would be so greatly inferior that "gate receipts" would shrink to a paltry pittance, and the grand institution, of which Californians are so justly proud, degenerate into a trivial exhibition, a disgrace to the country and a reproach to the people. It may appear somewhat anomalous to claim that if pool-selling be done away with, there will be a smaller attendance of those who argue that it is an evil in any form. The "innate propensity" again figures. There is an increased desire to witness contests when large sums are at stake. A match for $10,000 will draw a big concourse, one between the same horses for a purse of $100 will be passed, although the route leads by the entrance gate of the track on which it is to be decided. If the morning papers report that the pool-sales of the night preceding were "spirited," and that the place of selling was thronged, good people will be anxious to witness that which incites unwonted speculation. Therefore, although the writer shall fail to see the connection between pool-selling and horse-breeding, the fault lies that the intellects of the editor is not as lucid as it might be were there a better understanding of the relation between the two.

A Common Sense View.

The quotation from a morning paper, which concludes an editorial, is well worthy of the close attention of those who are so deeply interested in the bearing that pool-selling and bookmaking have on the horse-breeding interests of California. In it there is a key to the situation. The regulation of the "innate propensity of the human heart to bet on uncertain events" is all that sensible men seek to accomplish. They recognize the fact that all attempts to eradicate the speculative leaning must prove abortive, and the wiser course to give a fair share of freedom, while exerting so much restraint as to keep the passion within moderate bounds. Another portion of the sentence, in which the "innate propensity" is recognized, is, "but that is no reason why we should allow poolrooms to open their doors to boys, and tempt young clerks to steal from their employers."

With a law such as we have advocated in the Statute Book, a poolroom in the sense implied would be unknown in California. With poolselling and bookmaking restricted to home contests, the cheapest room obtainable, where boys and young clerks could congregate, would be beyond the profits. The whole business will then be conducted where few minors or those who are classed as young clerks can be troubled, and the speculative propensity surrounded with safeguards. There is no danger of corrupting society in this form of poolselling, and the risk of becoming "flagrant" or "offensive" reduced to a minimum. Confined to what may be termed the legitimate sphere, speculating on races or other contests will not give such offence as to lead moralists to seek its suppression, but permitted full sway, and should action be postponed at this session of the Legislature, the next Assembly will be likely to insist on a clean sweep.

Meeting at the Palace Hotel.

Saturday evening last there was a meeting of the committee on Public Morals held at the Palace Hotel. It seems to us that there is a strange confusion of ideas regarding the question of poolselling and bookmaking. That it should be so intricate as to necessitate numerous meetings of a legislative committee, before which are summoned a troop of witnesses, the evidnce of which, in the main, has neither relevancy or pertinacity is a phase which is surely inexplicable. Outside of the question of morality there is nothing which requires a great deal of study to comprehend.

There are benefits connected with the speculation on races, advantages to those who have investments in fast trotters and race horses, and to people who have expended money in constructing tracks and the necessary structures appertaining to grounds on which exhibitions of speed are presented. These benefits are derived from a certain percentage, a commission exacted for doing the business, and from an increased attendance, due to the increased excitement which speculation engenders. This enables managers of fairs and associations to give far larger premiums than otherwise would prevail, and this reverts, directly or indirectly, to the breeder.

The drawbacks attendant on unlimited poolselling and bookmaking are readily stated and easily understood. With four or more "rooms" in San Francisco doing business on Eastern events, there is little interest taken in home contests. The circuit of California fairs occupies a season of the year when Eastern courses are holding some of the most important meetings and when people can choose between a free seat in a comfortable room, with a vivid report of the race on which their money is betted placed before them, or a journey of many miles travelling and other expenses to meet, the trip to Santa Rosa, Petaluma, San Jose, not to mention places further away, will be given up in favor of the cosey corner in "Pauper Alley." But the counter excitement is not the greatest hinderance to home sports, as the immense amount of money which is divested from channels which ought to increase the stream of prosperity to those who are interested in developing superior horses is an important feature. According to the testimony of Mr. Jaynes, Superintendent of the Western Union Telegraph Company, the receipts for telegrams during the racing season were $250 per day. Therefore our estimate, published last week, of $50,000 for the expenses of the rooms for a year, was much below the real state of affairs. When profits are added to expenses it is safe to say that $100,000 is below the amount, not one dollar of which is a benefit to breeders. Further than this, that when bookmakers are doing a good business they are prone to indulge in the luxury of a fast trotter, and in New York some of the best which are driven on the roads, are owned by members of the fraternity. Unfortunately the roads in the vicinity of San Francisco do not tempt anyone to indulge in speed, unless that which can be made available for track purposes, and until the speed drive is thrown open to the public, investments in fast trotters will be limited.

But there is a still greater danger threatened than reduced attendance at the meetings and fairs, even when coupled with the absorption of money which otherwise might aid in giving increased premiums for the encouragement of breeders. That is, that with unlimited opportunities to wager on racing events, and that opportunity covering nearly every day in the year, the evil will become so pronounced that whatever good there is will have to suffer, being so far overborn with the bad that public opinion will demand the entire abrogation. Already the daily papers are taking texts from some foolish evidence presented before the committee, and though the evidence is twisted somewhat, it gave a color of right to the arguments based upon statements made. To claim that unrestricted betting on horse races is not an evil, either proves that the person making the claim has not a thorough knowledge of the bearing it has, or lacks in perception. We must admit that with all due care, and under laws which will eradicate by far the largest part of objectionable features, there still will be a chance for rigid moralists to denounce the practice of poolselling and bookmaking. But while admitting that much, we emphatically assert that the good will far overbalance the evil when the only opportunity to speculate on races will be confined to events which are decided in this State. Thousands and tens of thousands have been ruined in what are considered legitimate speculations to each individual that has suffered by betting on horses, and it would be equally as logical to insist that all "boards," "bourses," and "exchanges" should be abolished, as that risks on horses should cease.

We copy the last paragraph of an editorial which appeared in an influential San Francisco daily a few mornings ago, in order to show that sentiment is trending towards seeking remedies to abate the ills which are too apparent to be ignored, and that if the people who are the most interested in reform do not lend their assistance, there is eminent danger of a total collapse.

The propensity to bet on races or other events of which the issue is uncertain, appears to be inate in the human heart; but that is not a reason why we should allow poolrooms to open their doors to boys and tempt young clerks to steal from their employers in order to make good their losses on the turf. Some forms of vice may be incurable, but the fact does not imply that we should not try to prevent them from becoming so flagrant and so offensive as to corrupt society.

There has been received at this office the registration certificates, from Mr. J. H. Wallace, of the following horses:

Arab's New Owner.

As was noticed in our issue of last week, Arab has been bought and sent East, Messrs. Hickok, Williams and Ramsdell selling him to James Golden of Boston for the sum of $8,000. $10,000 was the price stated, but as nearly all prices quoted now-a-days are placed at a much larger sum than is actually paid, so it was in this case, the figure given being as above. Many rumors have floated around as to the cause of the purchase, it being generally accepted that Arab was now to be used as a road horse by a gentleman living in Boston, while not a few thought that he was going East to be worked in the big circuit. The real facts of the matter are, that Mr. John Shepard of Boston has long desired to own the fastest pair of trotting horses in the world, and in this purchase he thinks he has attained his desire. When Mr. Shepard made his record with Mill Boy and Blondine, the time was considered wonderful. Then Mr W. H. Vanderbilt drove Maud S. and Aldine a mile in 2:15¼. Ever since then Mr. Shepard has determined to break that record, and he thinks now he is in a fair way to do it. Mill Boy can cover his mile in 2:15, and has always been too fast for Blondine. In Arab, Mill Boy will have a worthy mate, and if the pair hitch up well together, Mr. Shepard may realize his ambition. A mistake has also been made in mentioning the name of the breeder of Arab; it was not Col. Frye, but Mr. F. S. Malone. Arab is now eleven years old, being foaled in 1878; he is by Arthurton, first dam Lady Hercules, second dam Nettie George, by Norfolk.

Ownership of Bonnie Scotland.

There appears to be a good deal of difficulty in overcoming an erroneous impression in regard to the ownership of Bonnie Scotland, when he was first brought to Illinois. In a late article in the N. Y. Sun, of which "Veritas" is the author, in alluding to our horses, writes, "and also at one time controlled the famous thoroughbred Bonnie Scotland."

There was a distinct right to control him, inasmuch as we traded a farm in Iowa for him, receiving some "boot." The following spring we sold a half interest in him to D. A. Gage, and the next year our remaining interest to C. C. Pards, who afterwards became his sole owner. We were instrumental in his transfer to Tennessee. General Jackson, accompanied by John P. Reynolds, came to our place near Chicago, the intention of General J. being to purchase Malcolm. We persuaded him to make the trip to Waukegan, where Bonnie was kept, and following this advice Belle Meade became his home. There is another error in the commonly accepted history, that being coredited failure previous to the change. For the number of mares, he was what may be termed remarkably successful, showing such cracks as Malcolm, Regent Ontario, Frogtown, Nell Gwynne, Scotland and many others, most of them from the few mares owned by Mr. Reber.

While correcting errors, it may be as well to rectify some which appeared in the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN of last week. Too much romance, in turning out Bonnie Scotland on the Moors to die, when he was the sixth foal of his dam. But as "The Druid" gives a pleasant bit of history in relation to the family, it is hereby annexed:

QUEEN MARY'S BLOOD.

Many of the modern cracks have been drawn out of the Doncaster lucky-bag, and Mr. Ramsay found himself wavering between Mendicant and Queen Mary on the morning of Fa'gh-a-Ballagh's St. Leger. Something put him against the brown, for whom Mr. Gully gave 400 gs., and he got the bay for a hundred less. Strange, indeed, that one of the pair should be destined to win the Oaks and throw a Derby winner, and that the other should be the dam of Blink Bonny and the grandam of Caller Ou as well. Mr. Ramsay died five years later, and there was so little promise about the puny Haricot, that I'Anson heard a remark in the crowd to the effect that "some madman has given twenty pound for her and the foal (Braxey)" (which is now in the Hampton Court Stud), and smiled to think that he had given the commission. Balrownie (a very good-looking horse), Blooming Heather, and Bonnie Scotland made about £6,000 gs., in stakes and sales, and then I'Anson was compensated for Queen Mary missing to Touchstone by the suspicions which ripened into certainty, when he had sent her Melbourne filly along for a few weeks.

BLINK BONNY.

She was the first of the family he ever trained as a two-year-old, and he never gave one more work, but a short T. Y. C. was not her line of business, and she was always a most moderate beginner. William Scott, Sir Lydston Newman's present stud-groom, took a great fancy to her, both for her own and his old Melbourne's sake, and advised Lord Londesboro' to give the three thousand which I'Anson offered to take her for, after the Beverley meeting. This price was contingent on his being allowed to train her, and when he found that such was not his Lordship's intention, he raised it a thousand, and the bargain went off; and at the Northallerton meeting he refused £5,000 from Mr. Jackson. She throve pretty well till late in the autumn, but then the dentition fever, which was always peculiarly severe with the Melbournes, came on, and she sank, as Blooming Heather had done before her, to a complete skeleton. She was always leaning to the offside, as if flying from some unseen fury on the near, and they only dare tie her up with a string, to snap if she ran back in one of the paroxysms. Newminster's teeth had punished him a good deal before the Derby, but his state must have been bliss in comparison. After the One Thousand, where her looks fairly shocked the public, I'Anson told his family that he wouldn't take £1,000 to 1 d. about her Epsom chance. Still on his return from Chester she seemed to have got some relief, and although she would seize her corn and then drop it as if it was red-hot shot, she ate grass greedily, started her work once more, and crept on very fast.

She seemed to improve on the journey up, and when she galloped with Strathnaver at Epsom, she drew away from him with her head down in her rare, old fashion. Charlton's orders were never to try and win till close on the post, and he did it without asking her a question. I'Anson hardly knew what to think before they started, or when the race was running. He twice thought she looked like her old self at the whins, as she was setting her ears back and flinging up her tail as she always did when she meant vengeance. Then, although he swept the thirty backwards and forwards with his glasses, he could never find her yellow cap again, and when he did, he mistook it for something else, till they were close at home. On the Oaks day, her form was fully half a stone better, but Charlton as nearly as possible broke his stirrup iron, coming round Tattenham Corner.

Balrownie was troubled with sand-cracks, and was bad to train in consequence. I'Anson thought he had tried him high enough to win the St. Leger; but he injured his hock in his trial, and had to be stopped in his work; and with a view to the Doncaster Stakes, he was not ridden out when winning was hopeless. Mr. Padwick gave £2,000 for him; and old John Day was delighted with his trial, and so was Wells, who rode him. He was a very unfortunate horse When he ran with Virago, at York, he was so severely kicked at the post, that the starter felt bound to give him a little time to recover from it; and he got pricked in his shoeing before he met Rataplan, at Manchester. Blooming Heather shyed at a butcher's cart coming through London, and was still quite stiff from slipping upon the stones, when she went for the Oaks. Bonnie Scotland nearly broke his leg at two years old, and never could be got thoroughly fit. He had the greatest constitution of the family, and was the most indolent at exercise that I'Anson ever had to do with; and the last heard of him was, that he had won the Great Prize for sires at Cincinnati, Ohio, against Lexington and all comers.

Dates of Fairs.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—Breeders seem to have some axe to grind on fair dates. The managers of the State Fair are given choice by California of choosing a date. They would not do their duty if they did not choose the best date for their fair. The 9th of September may not be any better than the 17th, but would the 17th suit those who come after better, and those who come before as well? If so, why so? There does not seem to be any point in breeders views except to show a desire to fix the State Fair date. Believing that the State Fair is of more value to me than my district fair, I concur in the date fixed by the managers of the State Fair, and will also in the date of my district fair.

Petaluma Colt Stakes.

Owning to the pressure of business last week we were unable to notice the Petaluma Colt Stakes, but with pleasure do so this week. This Association has always had a misfortune to have their fair week at the same time some other prominent city or town held theirs, yet still we find that the Petaluma Fair is always a success, notwithstanding the opposition, and those who go once always return. This year, as usual, the directors have produced an excellent programme, three being two-year-old and three-year-old stakes, free for all, with liberal purses, while the district is not forgotten, four stake races being given for it alone. The conditions and terms will be found under its proper heading and is worth perusing by all who have colts or fillies of merit.

Balkan 2:29 1-2.

Owing to an error in date, Mr. Wallace has heretofore refused to accept Balkan's record of 2 29½ as a public performance, but the matter has been explained so satisfactorily to him, that the following notice appears in the last number of "Wallace's Monthly:"

Since going to press with the forms containing the 2:30 list of the year, we learn that the performance of Balkan, 2:29½, at Oakland, Cal., was erroneously published as occurring on October 9th, instead of November 9th. This removes the objection against accepting the performance as a record, and Balkan will appear in the next Year-Book with a record of 2:29½.

Names Claimed.

I claim the name of Antecello for bay colt, black points, star in forehead, foaled March 23, 1887, bred by C. R. Lewis, Oakland, Cal. By Antevolo, 1st dam Ruby by Winthrop; 2d dam the dam of Mt. Vernon 2:21, by Chieftain.

I also claim the name of Antevenio for bay filly, foaled March 27, 1888, both hind feet and pastern white to above ankle, near fore foot touched with white; white oblong mark in forehead and white snip extending from nose some way towards eyes. "Full" sister to Antecello.

JOS. CAIRN SIMPSON.

OAKLAND, Cal., February 14, 1889.

I hereby claim the name Hathaway, for a brown colt, four white feet, foaled on January 19, 1889. Hathaway is by Ironclad, dam Skipaway by Wildidle. RICHARD FALLON.

Cheatham and Black Hawk.

Will you kindly give me the pedigree of Billy Cheatham, thoroughbred, and also of David Hill's Black Hawk?

Answer—Billy Cheathem, by Cracker, he by Boston; first dam Lucy, by Mingo; second dam by Brunswick; third dam by Moses; fourth dam by Sumpter; fifth dam by Top Gallant.

Vermont Black Hawk, by Sherman Morgan, son of the original Justin Morgan, dam a small black mare of breeding unknown.

L. G. Simmons.

I am trying to prove that Black Ralph is eligible to registration. Can you tell me if David Hill (McCrackens) is a standard bred animal. Has Black Ralph ever trotted in this State in 2:25?

Answer—David Hill is standard, and registered in Wallace's Register as 857. Black Ralph was third in a race on Oct. 30, 1873, the fastest heat being 2:45. There is no record of any better time being made by him. You will have considerable trouble in proving that Black Ralph was by David Hill; we have every reason to believe he was not.

Moorcroft.

Can you kindly furnish me through your columns with the pedigree of imp. Mid-Lothian?

Answer.—By Rataplan or Strathconan.

1st dam Lufra by Windhound.	9th dam by Starling.
3d dam Vanilla by Velocipede

DOBLE, 2:14 -:- SPLAN, 2:13 1-4 -:- DUNBAR. 2:14

THE GREAT HORSE BOOK,

"LIFE WITH THE TROTTERS,"

NOW READY.

JOHN SPLAN

Gives the history of the celebrated horses he has driven, and a full account of how they were prepared for their races, chapters on stable management of the trotter, on how he should be made ready for any style of race, on how the old-time trotters were trained, and all about the stable and track history of such famous performers as RARUS, the pacer JOHNSTON, WEDGEWOOD, MATTIE HUNTER, CHARLIE FORD, KANSAS CHIEF, KING WILKES, COL. LEWIS, FANNIE WITHERSPOON, MINNIE R., REVENUE, PROTECTION, FRED FOLGER, WILSON, J. Q., CLINGSTONE, GUY, MAMBRINO SPARKLE, ADELAIDE, BELLA, BRIGADIER, SWEEPSTER, CALMAR, GOV. HILL, BELLE E., OLIVER K., and many others that have at one time and another been in Splan's stable, and to most of them he gave their best records. In fact it will be a comprehensive treatise on the subject of trotters and pacers, and how to drive and train them, by a man whose reputation is world wide. That the book will have a tremendous sale is not a matter of doubt. No work of the kind has appeared since that written by Hiram Woodruff more than twenty years ago, and since then the history of the trotting horse has been made. John Splan has been thirty years with the trotters, and that he should write a book in which there will be an uninteresting line is impossible.

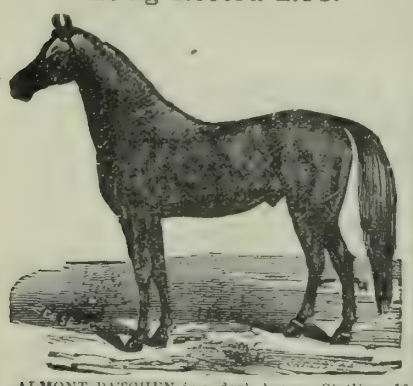
BUDD DOBLE

Tells in a graphic manner the interesting circumstances of how the famous old-time trotter, DEXTER, was placed in his hands by Hiram Woodruff when Doble was but a boy; how, in his first race, the youthful driver made the son of RYSDYK'S HAMBLETONIAN beat his best previous record; how he won races with him at all ways of going- in harness, to wagon, and under the saddle, finally terminating a brilliant turf career by beating all the trotting records when he went a mile at Buffalo in 2:17¼. The peculiarities of DEXTER as noted by the man who trained and drove him, are now made public for the first time, and the recital is one that cannot fail to interest and instruct every man who reads it.

Mr. Doble's name is known the world over in connection with that of the peerless mare, GOLDSMITH MAID, a wonderful animal in more ways than one, and in this book he lets the public know just how she was trained for her races with other horses, and her exhibition against time. It was with GOLDSMITH MAID that Mr. Doble lowered the trotting record to 2:14, and in addition to being the fastest trotter of her day, she was also a wonderfully intelligent mare. The story of her life on the turf reads like a romance,

T. J. DUNBAR

The rearing, management, and education of trotting bred colts is a subject in which not only breeders, but thousands of men in other walks of life who have a fancy for horse flesh are deeply interested, and no man is better qualified to write on this subject than Mr. Dunbar, who is Superintendent of the Fashion Stud Farm at Trenton, N. J. That he has done so in a manner that is at once entertaining and instructive will be apparent to every reader of the book, and this feature of the work is one that must be read to be fully appreciated. Mr. Dunbar is, first of all, a thorough horseman, a first class driver and trainer, and his mind is of the thoughtful sort, and achieves good results in any work to which it is applied. In this book he tells just how a foal should be treated from the hour of its birth until it develops into a full-fledged trotter, and at the same time the narrative is so constructed as to be intensely interesting even to those who do not own a colt. Mr. Robert Bonner says that in securing Mr. Dunbar, the editor of the book has made "a decided acquisition," which is praise enough.



SPLAN drove RARUS in 2:13 1-4; DOBLE drove GOLDSMITH MAID in 2:14, and DUNBAR drove CLINGSTONE in 2:14.

ALMONT PATCHEN.

Pacing Record 2.15.

Sire JUANITO, dam Gildey, by GLADIATOR, the sire of James H. 2:21, Boss 2:29½, and the pacer Damiana 2:26¾; second dam by HENRY BELMONT, third dam a sir Archie mare. JUANITO is by Tilton Almont, record 2:26, dam Berlena by Signal (Singleterry's Rattler), sire of Marysville Queen, wagon record 2:16, and the pacers Prussian Maid 2:19, Carrie T. 2:20¾, and Handy Andy 2:20½; second dam a mare bought of J. W. Moore of Marysville, Cal., from the Harper Stock Farm in Kentucky. Tilton Almont, 2:26, is the sire of Daisy S. 2:24¾ and is by the gr at Almont, dam by Clark Chief. Henry Belmont is a full brother to Venture 2:27¾, being by Williamson's Belmont, dam Miss Mostyn, by American Boy, Jr., second dam Fannie Mostyn by Grey Medoc.

To his excellent blood lines Almont Patchen adds performances which show him a worthy descendant of famous families. He is a large, well-formed, rangy and stylish horse, of great power and unsurpassed staying qualities, and cannot fail to get fast and useful horses. In 1886 he started in Chico and in Sacramento in two races, winning both, making in the latter a record of 2:23.

In 1888 ALMONT PATCHEN started in eight races, winning six and coming in second in the other two. In his last race at the Bay District Track, San Francisco, he defeated Adonis and Belmont Boy, making a record of 2:15. A few days later, in private, he paced a mile in 2:13½, on same track.

Almont Patchen will make the season of '89 at the Race Track, San Jose, commencing February 1st and ending in May.

TERMS: $100 for the season, payable when mare is bred. Good pasturage furnished at five dollars per month. All mares taken at owner's risk. For further particulars address,

By GROSVENOR, he by ADMINISTRATOR, he by RYSDYK'S HAMILTONIAN.

First dam Lady Nutwood by Nutwood 600; second dam Lady Mac, standard, by American Boy; third dam a thoroughbred mare imported from Australia.

NUTGROVE is a beautiful bay, 15¾ hands, and is one of the finest appearing young horses in the State. He took the first prize for best two-year-old standard bred horses at Oakland in 1888, also first prize at the State fairs in the same class. He has been worked for speed but a little, but showed quarters in 33 to 40 seconds. His dam took first prize for standard mare at the Oakland Fair, and also took first prize at the State Fair, 1888, for best mare of any age or breed. For further particulars apply to

Cost of Wintering Race-Horses.

Few turf frequenters, says the "St. Louis Republic," think or care much about how race-horses live during the winter. They watch the last race of the season and then dismiss the whole thing from their minds until the spring rolls around and their interest is awakened by seeing the bookmakers break into print. Horse owners, of course, are not to be counted in this class. The Dwyers, for example, ever since last fall, have been feeding and lodging 50 horses and 100 employes. They are barbored at Gravesend, and make a little community of themselves, with trainer Frank McCabe as their mayor, governor, president or doctor, whichever term may suit your fancy best. The stable-men are colonized in a roomy collection of apartments, embracing a kitchen, dining-room, sitting-room, the latter having an immense stove, around which the men sit and swap prevarications. The kitchen is presided over by an ebony cook, who, on corn bread, fried chicken and sweet taters, can beat the world. This number of employes will not appear excessive when it is considered that a race-horse of anything like good standing has a man and a boy for attendants. His keep, at a low average, is $4 a day, for his 12 quarts of oats must be of the best, and the carrots the choicest to be found in the market. He has three of the squarest kind of meals a day, a thorough grooming and careful exercise. Breakfast consists of oats. At 8 o'clock he is given his canter, out doors or under cover, according to the weather. At 10 o'clock he is back in his stall, nibbling at a hay lunch. At noon he is given oats mixed with chopped carrots, the latter to keep his bowels regular. At sundown, in order to give him something that will stand by him through the night, he is fed with a hot mash of oats, bran and cracked corn. This generous hospitality to about 50 horses and 100 stablemen costs the Dwyers about $6,000 a month.

W. H. Wilson, Abdallah Park, Cynthiana, Ky., has sold the ch. colt King Fisher, foaled in 1888, by Simmons, record 2:28, first dam Brownie Lass by Pacing Abdallah, 6038; second dam by Sharp's Boston, to John Harrison, Philadelphia, Pa. The same gentleman has also sold to A. L. Wilcox, of Detroit, the bay mare Carrie Elgin, by Simmons, dam Nora Bright by John Bright, 566; second dam Mattie, by Alexander Norman, 25.

About San Simeon.

The following news from the Hearst stable is clipped from the N. Y. Sporting World:

If any one wants to see the pick of Matt Allen's at exercise, they will have to get down here very early, as Matt is up before the sun every morning. In the last two or three letters from here I have spoken of San Simeon, who at 105 pounds looked like having a good fighting chance for the Suburban. I have been told recently, however, that unless he is a very different kind of a horse from what he has shown himself in his work, he will be nowhere. The principal fault with him is the distance, as it is entirely too far for him. Last year, in his work, to get him to cover seven furlongs in any kind of time whatever, it was necessary to fan him very vigorously. He certainly looks grand just now, and is better, his people claim, than he ever was before in his life. All the rest of the horses in Allen's charge are doing exceedingly well, but they will not be worked seriously before the middle of March.

The Electioneer Stallion LANCELOT,

SEAL BROWN STALLION, 15½ HANDS, FOALED APRIL 15, 1881.

Bred by C. C. BEMIS, San Francisco, Cal.

Sire Gov. Stanford's ELECTIONEER; first dam Lizzie Harris by Comus; second dam by Arnold Harris. Comus by Gree..'s Bashaw, dam Topsey by Prophet, son of Hill's Black Hawk.

All the sons of Electioneer in the Eastern States have their books filled for the season. This is a rare opportunity to breed to Lancelot at a very low price. Lancelot has shown quarters better than a 2:30 gait, and had it not been for an accident would have had a record as low as the fastest of the sons of Electioneer.

The Nutwood Stallion SALADIN.

Bred by C. C. BEMIS, San Francisco.

SALADIN, chestnut stallion, 16 hands 1 inch high; foaled April 9, 1880. By Nutwood; first dam Lady Utley Jr. by Speculation, son of Rysdyk's Hambletonian; second dam Lady Utley. Grandam of Western Girl. Record 2:27½.

NUTWOOD (record 2:18¾), half brother to Maud S., 2:08¾, by Belmont, son of Alexander's Abdallah; first dam Miss Russell by Pilot Jr.; second dam Sally Russell by Boston; third dam Maria Russell by Thornton's Rattler; fourth dam Miss Shepard by Stockholder; fifth dam Miranda by Topgallant; sixth dam by imported Diomed; seventh dam by imported Medley; eighth dam by imported Juniper. Nutwood is the sire of Felix, 2:18¾; Dawn 2:19½; Manon 2:21; Menlo 2:21¼; Nutbreaker, two years old, 2:29½; Nutwood Jr. 2:26; Mount Vernon 2:21; Woodcut 2:16¾, and several others that have trotted under 2:30.

The above stallions will make the season of 1889 at the Hoag Stables, corner 1st and B Streets, Santa Rosa.

TERMS: $40 for the season for either of the above stallions.

Pasturage $3 per month. All mares at the owners risk. Apply or address,

The Thoroughbred Stallion Judge McKinstry,

Will make the Season of 1889, from March 1 to July 1, at San Felipe Rancho, near Gilroy.

PEDIGREE.

Foaled 1879, by Grinstead or Thad Stevens, dam Katy Pease; second dam Minnie Mansfield by imp. Glencoe; third dam Allegrante by imp. Young Truffle.

DESCRIPTION.

JUDGE McKINSTRY is a bright bay with black points, 15¾ hands in height, of a conformation combining power and speed. His breeding is one that cannot be excelled. The families on both sides being noted for their gameness and fleetness. Speakin of JUDGE McKINSTRY, Matt Storn, the well-known trainer, says: "He is the fastest race-horse I ever saw on the Sacramento track. He has shown me trials that were marvelous, one especially of a mile and a quarter that was ahead of the present record." He was started in several races when not in condition to run, and even then developed an amount of speed that is characteristic of the noted families from which he descends. His performances are too well known to need repetition here. Good judges of horses state positively that there can be no doubt of his sire, as he is a perfect picture of Grinstead, but rule compels us to name both sires.

TERMS: $75 payable when the mare is moved from ranch, or, $100, with the usual privilege. Good pasturage, $3 per month. Mares at owners risk. All communications must be addressed to Prince Imperial.

DESCRIPTION.—PRINCE IMPERIAL is a black horse, 15-3 hands high; weighs 1 150 pounds, and is a model of beauty, action and power.

PEDIGREE.—Sired by Black Prince, he by Dictator, own brother to Dexter, dam Daisy by Witherell Messenger, he by Winthrop Messenger, son of imp. Messenger.

Mr. Peter Brandow's statement in regard to Prince Imperial: "I met A. Weske in the Park in 1887 driving the above horse, both strangers to me. I was driving a good horse, but the above horse, hitched to a phaeton, beat me easily. I followed him to find out what horse it was, and he finally allowed me to hitch him to a sulky, which I did, and drove him easily in 2:32½. I think him one amongst the best horses in California, and firmly believe that in six months I can drive him in 220." PETER BRANDOW.

Trainer of trotters for 25 years.

In 1881, while visiting Salt Lake City, I saw the colt Prince Imperial, and bought him for my own use, and have used him for family purposes ever since. In offering him for public service last year, not knowing anything about horses' pedigrees I made a mistake in his. I wrote to the owner of the mare in Salt Lake, Dr. S. B. Young, and he says she was by Henry-Clay, brought from Kentucky by him.

Will make the season of 1888 at the farm of A. Weske, 2½ miles from Santa Rosa on the Healdsburg road. Season commencing March 1st.

SIRE OF YOLO MAID, 2:14.

Alexander Button.

Alexander's Record, 2:31 1-4!

DESCRIPTION.

Alexander Button is a dark bay with fine flowing mane and tail; stands 15 hands ¾ inches high; weighs 1,200 pounds, and is of excellent disposition. When three years old he made a record of 2:28½, and when four years old, in his first race, he obtained a record of 2:26¾. Has been driven a mile in 2:16 in his four-year old form, and has been drive a last half in 1:0 . Alexander Button is a natural trotter, inherited through the speed-lines of his ancestors, and imparts his speed to his offspring with uniform certainty. Yolo Maid, as a three-year old, paced 18 heats, never leaving her feet—carrying the world's record of 2:14. Rosie Mc, as a five-year-old, rarely ever breaks; has a record of 2:20¾. R. H. Newton's colt, with very little handling, paced a 2:16 gait, and there are several other colts that show gaits from 2:16 to 2:20. Considering that Alexander Button has never been mated with a standard-bred mare—his colts show him to be a wonderful producer—and with his breeding, and terms of service, he is the cheapest and most wonderful horse in the State.

PEDIGREE.

Alex. Button was sired by Alexander, he by Geo. M. Patchen, Jr., his dam Lady Button by Napa Rattler by Biggett's Rattler, he by Sir Henry, and he by imported Henry, dam of Biggett's Rattler by Rysdyk's Hambletonian, dam of Napa Rattler, thoroughbred.

TERMS: $75, payable at end of season. Mares not proving with foal may be returned next season free of charge. Good pasturage will be furnished at $2 per month, and due care taken to prevent accidents or escapes, but no liability whatever assumed.

Will stand at City Stable, Woodland, on Thursday, Friday and Saturday of each week. The remainder of the time he will stand at my ranch, which is situated about 1½ miles west of Yolo station.

All mares sent to Fashion Stable, Woodland, Yolo County, will be forwarded free of charge.

Thoroughbred Stallion RATHBONE.

RATHBONE IS A VERY HANDSOME SHADE of brown, the only white a small star in forehead. He is of almost unexceptionable form. 15 hands 3 inches in height, of immense power and substance, and also of the highest quality.

He was never in "order" to run, and yet he has shown well, better by far than could have been expected under the circumstances.

March 11, 1886, on the Bay District course, carrying 5 pounds over-weight (115 lbs.) he defeated, in a stake for two-year-olds, Voltigeur, C. H. Todd, Notidie and Leap Year, the h lf mile being run in 49¾ seconds. He has shown quarters in 33 seconds, and is so stoutly bred that he could hardly fail to go a distance at a high rate of speed.

His blood lines could not be improved. His sire, Young Prince, is the only stallion that I can recall imported from England to the United States with near strains of Stockwell and King Tom blood, these noted horses being the paternal and maternal grandsires of Young Prince. The family of his dam, Lady Amanda, ranks high among the noted clans of America. Malcolm, Regent, Ontario, McWhirter, Lady Middleton, etc. The following is a tabulated pedigree:

RATHBONE.

- Young Prince (imported.)
  - Knowsley
    - Stockwell.
    - Orlando mare.
  - Queen of Spain
    - King Tom.
    - Ma Mie.
- Lady Amanda
  - Hurrah (imported.)
    - Newminster.
    - Jovial.
  - Lady Lancaster
    - Monarch, (imported.)
    - Lady Canton.

Stockwell, King Tom, Newminster and Monarch, the best sons of The Baron, Rataplan, Touchstone and Emilius, and the dams of the same remove, by Orlando, Jerry (a St. Leger winner), Pay Middleton and imported Tranby, present such a combination of ultra fashionable blood as is rarely equalled. Young Prince was bred by James Smith, England; foaled 1870. See English Stud Book, Vol. XIII., page 363.

With proper mares there is no question that RATHBONE will get race-horses, with a certainty of getting, from any good mares, valuable horses for harness and saddle, with a fair show of a fast trotter, as RATHBONE is a capital road-horse and shows a good gait without any trotting practice further than occasional drives on the road. He is one of the "best disposed" horses imaginable without trick or vice of any kind.

In order to place his services within the reach of those who feel that they cannot pay the high price demanded for fast trotting sires, his services are put at the exceedingly low price of $25 the season.

NOONDAY.

No Record, Foaled 1884.

Standard No. 10,000.

THIS CELEBRATED TROTTING-BRED STALLION will be limited to 40 mares the ensuing season at Oakland Trotting Park, Oakland, Cal., commencing February 1st and ending July 1st, at $100 the season, with the usual privilege of returning the mare next season if not proving in foal. The names of his patrons will be entered on his book in order of their application. He will be limited strictly to forty mares. Pasturage at five dollars per month, hay and grain extra.

NOONDAY, sired by Wedgewood (692), record, the fourth heat, 2:19, (sire of Favonia, record, fourth heat, 2:15, and Nugget, record 2:26, he the sire of Nettie Leaf, four-year-old record 2:23¼), and five others better than 2:26.

First dam Noontide, record 2:20½, by Harold (413), sire of Maud S., record 2:08¾, Mattie Graham, 2:21¼, and 17 others in 2:30.

Second dam Midnight (the dam of Jay-Eye-See, record 2:10), by Pilot Jr., sire of the dam of Maud S., 2:08¾, Nutwood, 2:18¾.

First dam (the dam of Woodford Mambrino, 7:21), by Woodford (thoroughbred son of Kosciusko), he by Sir Archy.

NOONDAY is well formed, evenly balanced and handsome; his color is dark seal brown, small star, right hindfoot white, 15 1¾ inches high, weight 975 lbs, strong back and good gaited, short and rapid, and will make a fast and game campaigner.

Breeders will please remember that this horse is not owned by me. I have only leased him for two years for the benefit of the State and breeders on account of the speedy lines and blood that this State is in need of, and no stallion now in public service can show a pedigree with such fast records as enrich the blood of NOONDAY.

I will also handle and train a few horses for gentlemen at fair terms. Address

THE WILKES STALLION

Mambrino Wilkes, 6083

Sire of Gus Wilkes, 2:22; Alpheus, 2:27; Balkan, 2:29½, three-year-old; John O'Brien, lapped out the winner in 2:36 as a three-year-old; H. A. W.'s Black Colt, trial 2:29 with very little work as a four-year-old.

Will remain in the future at San Miguel Stock Farm, Walnut Creek, Contra Costa County.

DESCRIPTION.

MAMBRINO WILKES is a black horse, 16 hands high, and considerably longer than his height; has immense muscular development and weighs 1,200 pounds. He has the utmost symmetry of proportion and elegance of finish. No competent judge who has seen this horse has failed to pronounce him a perfect individual, and his breeding is certainly fashionable enough to satisfy the most fastidious. His colts are large, stylish and handsome, and Balkan has been pronounced by many the most stylish trotter on the turf.

PEDIGREE.

Sired by George Wilkes, dam Lady Chrisman by Todhunter's Mambrino; second dam by Pilot Jr.

Todhunter's Mambrino by Mambrino Chief, dam Ripton's dam by Hunt's Commodore, son of Mambrino by imp. Messenger; second dam by Potomac, son of imp. Messenger.

George Wilkes sired 65 colts that have beaten 2:30. Of these 39 have average records of 2:24, 14 of 2:19 and 12 of 2:18.

TERMS.

Mares from a distance will be received at the Dexter Stables, Oakland, or Livery Stable, Martinez, the owner notifying Smith Hill, Superintendent at the farm. Good pasture and plenty of water. For the purpose of placing the service of a Wilkes within reach of breeders, the same rate will be maintained as last year, to wit, $75 for the season. Although it is not admitted thereby that this horse is inferior as a producer to the horses whose fees are placed at from $100 to $500.

BALKAN,

Three-year-old Record 2:29 1-2; trotting many heats faster, when he did not obtain a record.

PEDIGREE.

Sired by Mambrino Wilkes, dam Fanny Fern by Jack Hawkins, son of Boston; second dam S. T. B. by Jim Crow.

It will be readily seen that this colt is from strong producing lines on both sides. Fanny Fern having produced Mollie Drew, May Queen, Onyx and Fred Arnold, all noted trotters and all by different sires.

This colt will be kept at the Oakland Trotting Park, and will be stinted to ten approved mares at $100 for the season.

LONGWORTH.

High Bred Trotting Stallion.

WILL BE FOUR YEARS OLD IN MARCH.

Dark Bay, Black Points, by Sidney.

OWNED BY A. C. DIETZ, OAKLAND.

Also the owner of Bay Stallion Ringwood, four years old, by Sidney, half bro her to Longworth, which has showed trials over the Oakland Track, 2:30; quarters, in 34 secon s—2:16 gait —as a three-year old.

LONGWORTH, for finish, style and form cannot be excelled by any four-year-old horse in the State. His g it is perfect; going low to the ground, with smooth, easy motion, and has shown wonderfu speed with but two month's work. As a two-year-old, he showed a 2:40 gait; as a three-year-old showed—trial full mile over the Oakland track, 2:26; half mile, 1:10; quarters, 34 seconds; eighths, 16 seconds—a 2:08 gait.

Longvort h is the result of a long line of distinguished ancestors, endowed with speed on the sire and dams' side that foll. ws back for generations—consequently he cannot help but produce great speed.

He is half brother to the great three-year-old Adonis, record 2 14¼.

Memo, three-year-old trial, 2 20½.
Sister V., two-year-old trial, 2:32
St. Nicholas, three-year-old trial, 2:27¼.
Ringwood, three-year-old trial, 2:30.
Miss Sidney, one-year-old trial, half mile, 1:38.
Brown colt, three-year-old trial, 2 45.

Sorrel colt, two-year-old trial, quarter, 34 seconds, and a number more that have shown remarkable speed. One yearling that has shown one-eighth of a mile in 16 15 seconds—a 2:10 gait.

Sidney, the sire of Longw rth, has a record of 2:19¾; Santa Claus, the grand sire, has a record of 2 17½; Sweetness, the grandam, record 2:21¾; Strathmore, the sire of Santa Claus, has twenty-two that have trotted below 2:30; Volunteer, the sire of Sweetness, has twen y-six that have trotted below 2:30. Volunteer is the sire of St Julian, rec rd 2:11¾.

Longworth's first dam Grey Dale, the dam of Daisy C., Silver Threads, and grandam of Phaeola; Grey Dale by American Boy, Jr.; he by American Boy, the sire of Belmont. Second dam Grey Poll by Winfield Scott, by Edward Everett; third dam by Morrel Poll by Sir Henry; fourth dam Daughter of Printer.

All letters pertaining to the s rvice of this horse should be addressed to J. J. FAIRBANKS, Oakland Alameda County, Cal.

TERMS: Fifty dollars, payable at the end of the season or sooner if the mares are taken away. Season will close June 15th 1889. The number of mares limited to twenty-five. The best of care will be taken to insure mares with foal. Pasture $5 per month, which can be procur d at the Oakland Race Track. Mares at the owners ris k as to escapes or accidents.

The stallion will be kept at the stables of the undersigned, at the junction of San Pablo Avenue and Park Street.

ELECTIONEER STALLION

EROS,

Standard No. 5326.

Electioneer, his sire, has more 2:20 trotters than any living horse, and more 2.30 trotters than any stallion LIVING OR DEAD.

Eros has a record of 2:29½, made in the fifth and decining heat against a field of eight horses in his maiden race, and with only four weeks preparation after coming out of the stud.

Progeny.

Eros had last fall but three colts trained; the oldest a three-year-old trotter, an exhibition mile during the San Jose Fair in 2:34, last quarter in 36½ seconds. A two-year-old (timed by the judges) made a mile in 2:16¾, and the other two-year-old in 2:47. All of these trials being made without a single skip, and none of these colts had then been handled three months from the bitting harness.

TERMS: $50 for the season, from February 1st to July 1, 1889. Due at time of service.

T. E. MOORE, Shawhan, Ky.

GROVER CLAY,

Bay Stallion, bred by Hon. W. M. Traylor, San Francisco. Foaled 1883. By ELECTIONEER.

First dam MAGGIE NORFOLK by NORFOLK, son of Lexington.
Second dam by BILLY CHEATHAM.
Third dam by DORSEY'S GILDDUST.

GROVER C is a very handsome shade of bay, 15¾ hands high, and showing as much quality as a majority of thoroughbreds. He is as square-gaited a trotter as can be, and has shown a great deal of speed for the amount of handling. Has been worked very little, though he can show a thirty gait or better whenever called upon.

TERMS.

Fifty dollars the season, payable at time of service. Proper care will be taken, but no responsibility incurred for accidents or escapes. Mares will be pastured inside of the Oakland Trotting Park, which is especially safe, having two fences which give ample security against escape. There is a never-failing stream of water which runs through the field, and the food is good.

Season commencing first of January and ending the first of July.

This is the only son of Electioneer standing in Alameda County, and the high breeding on the side of his dam is a guarantee that his colts will inherit qualities already made famous through the mixture of Electioneer and Lexington blood. Ansel, 2:20, is from a Lexington mare, and Sunol's grandam, two-year-old record 2:18, was by Lexington, both Sunol and Ansel by Electioneer, Lexington the sire of Norfolk.

Thoroughbred Stallion

Prince of Norfolk,

Will Make the Season of 1889, from Feb 15th to July 1st, at Sacramento.

PEDIGREE.

PRINCE OF NORFOLK, chc, foaled 1881, by Norfolk; 1st dam Marion by Malcolm; 2nd dam Maggie Mitchell by imp. Yorkshire; third dam Charmer by imp. Glencoe; 4th dam Betsy Malone by Stockholder; 5th dam by Potomac; 6th dam by Imp. Diomed; 7th dam by Pegasus, etc. Norfolk, the unbeaten son of Lexington, is the sire of Winters, Twilight, Conover, Ballot Box, Trade Dollar, Flood, Duchess of Norfolk, Lou Spencer, the Great Emperor of Norfolk, and many others. Marion's sire, Malcolm, was one of the first horses to bring Bonnie Scotland into notice. Through the Maggie Mitchell cross comes the blood of two of the most celebrated race mares of their day, Charmer and Betsy Malone. The combined speed of these great families seem to be concentrated in the get of Norfolk and Marion, as is instanced in the case of the Emperor of Norfolk, who is a full brother to the Prince of Norfolk.

The blood lines here displayed cannot be surpassed in the world, there not being a single cross that has not been celebrated for speed and endurance, and it is fair to assume that the get of this stallion will show equally well with those of past generations.

TERMS, $50 for the season. We offer first class pasturage on our own ranch, at $4 per month and the best of care will be taken of mares sent to us, but no responsibility can be incurred. For further particulars address

W. P. TODHUNTER, Sacramento.

MEMO.

The Fast Trotting Stallion, the Best Son of Sidney.

He was bred by G. Valensin at the Arno Stock Farm, Sacramento County, California; foaled spring of 1885.

By Sidney.
First dam Flirt by Buccaneer.
Second dam Mohaska Belle by Flaxtail.
Third dam by John the Baptist.

Sidney by Santa Claus, 2:17¾, his dam Sweetness, 2:21¾. Strathmore, the son of Santa Claus, has 22 of his get which have trotted in 2:30 or better, up to close of 1887, several having entered since, and Volunteer the sire of Sweetness, has 26 in the same list. Buccaneer is the sire of Shamrock, two-year-old record 2:25, and of Flight, 2:29, and in him are combined the strains of Long Island Blackhawk, Vermont Blackhawk, and the dam of Rysdyk's Hambletonian. Flaxtail figures prominently in both pacing and trotting descendants, and is the sire of the dam of Apex, 2:26, Flight, 2:29, J. H. McCormack, 2:29, and Shamrock, 2:25.

PERFORMANCES.

Memo only trotted in public in his two-year-old form, obtaining a record of 2:49, though he was close to Grandee in a race on the Bay District Track, the second heat of which was made in 2:31¾, the first in 2:32. He exhibited phenomenal speed when three years old, and had it not been for a slight strain of his fore fetlock there is little question that he would have shown in public very close to the best record. On the Oakland track he was timed a mile in 2:20¼, and frequently trotted quarters in from 32½ to 34 seconds.

DESCRIPTION.

He is nearly if not quite sixteen hands high, and of powerful build throughout. His color is a glossy black, with both fore-feet white and a touch of white on his off hind quarters. His disposition is all that could be desired, and his set o nsmerb

TERMS: One hundred dollars the season, which will commence on the 5th of February and close on the 1st of July. Due care will be taken of mares, but no responsibility for accidents or escapes.

Mares taken and kept as desired by the owners, and at reasonable rates.

Pasturage at $5 per month within the track enclosure; feed first rate, and a living stream of water in the field. There is a double protection against escape, as in addition to a strong fence on the i side of the track, the gates of the outer fence a e enclosed at night, which gives almost positive assurance of safety. BONANZA.

This Highly Bred Trotting Stallion

Will make the season of 1889 at the OAKLAND TROTTING PARK, commencing Feb 5th, and extending to July 1st.

TERMS.

$40 for the season. Due care taken to prevent accidents and escapes, but no responsibilities assumed. Mares kept in any manner desired and at reasonable rates. Pasture inside of the Oakland track at $5 per month.

PEDIGREE.

Bonanza was bred by A. Waldstein of San Francisco,
BY ARTHURTON.

His dam, the dam of Albert W., record 2:20, by John Nelson. He is one of th purest gaited trotters imaginable, and his record of 2:29 is no measure of his speed. He is nearly 16 hands, a very handsome shade of chestnut, and of comunanding form.

THREE CHEERS

Will make the Season of 1889 at Oakland Race Track, Oakland, Alameda County.

Pedigree.

Newminster by Touchstone (winner St. Leger 1831), dam Beeswing (winner of 3 races out of 64 starts) by Dr. Syntax (winner Doncaster Cup 1887, 40, 41, 42, the only horse that ever accomplished that feat.)

THREE CHEERS is bred in the speediest and stoutest lines. His dam, Young Fashion was the dam of Surprise, Scotland (the only horse that ever beat Asteroid a heat), Liverpool, Columbia and Bonnie Kate, the dam of Little Buttercup and the flying Bonnie Lizzie. His grandam, Fashion, was the greatest race mare of her era, defeating Boston in that historical match at four-mile heats, that is recorded as one of the greatest events in the annals of the turf. He is thoroughly sound in wind and limb, his family on both sides being noted for their exemption from curbs, spavins, roaring, or any other hereditary unsoundness. Horsemen, who can appreciate the highest type of the thoroughbred, are specially invited to inspect Three Cheers.

TERMS: $75 for the season. Mares not proving with foal can be returned the next season free of charge. Good pasturage at $5 per month. Mares cared for in any manner owners may desire, and fed on hay and grain, either or both, at reasonable rates. None but competent grooms employed, but no responsibility assumed for accidents or escapes.

N. B.—Mares sent from a distance in care of J. W. Morshead, City Front Stables, San Francisco, will be forwarded without delay.

NUTWOOD JR.,

FOR SALE OR LEASE.

This Speedy Son of the Great NUTWOOD can be Bought for $2,500, or Leased for the Season for $1000.

He is a sure foal getter, and can show as fine colts as are in the State. He earned $3,400 last year in the stud, can take care of 100 mares with ease. This is the best opportunity ever offered for any live man to make from two to three thousand dollars clear in a few months, with one of the most popular and fashionably bred horses in the land. The services of this style of horses never goes begging. His sire commands more for his stud services than any living trotting stallion, $500. He can be seen at Sacramento by calling at the address below. Other engagements prevent his owner from caring for him in the stud the coming season.

DESCRIPTION.

NUTWOOD, JR., is a mahogany bay horse, 16¼ hands high, weighs 1260 pounds. Foaled April 14, 1879, bred by L. U. Shippee of Stockton, Cal.

He is a horse of powerful mold, symmetrical form and in striking resemblance to his sire, NUTWOOD. He has never been trained but his action is faultless and his disposition most unexceptional.

PEDIGREE.

Nutwood, 2:18¾, (half brother to Maud S., 2:09¼) by Belmont (Alexander's), dam Miss Russell by Pilot Jr.; second dam Sallie Russel by Boston; third dam Maria Russell by Thornton's Rattler, etc. He is the sire of Felix, 2:19¼, Manon, 2:21, Jim Mulvenna, four years, 2:27½, Nutbreaker, yearling, 2:42¼, and many other fast ones.

Belmont, by Alexander's Abdallah, dam Belle by Mambrino Chief, second dam by Brown's Bellfounder, son of Imp Bellfounder. He is the sire of Wedgewood, 2:19, and five others in the 2:30 list. Alexander's Abdallah, sire of Goldsmith Maid, 2:14, and others.

Pilot Jr. sire of the dam of Nutwood, is also the sire of Midnight, the dam of Jay-Eye-See, 2:10, and seven in the 2:30 list.

Two Nutwood Stallions

One is Bay, dam by G. M. Patchen. He is nine years old, never been trained, shows lots of speed, has taken several premiums at our County Fairs as a Roadster Stallion. His name is BAYWOOD black legs, mane and tail, and free driver. Weighs 1,200 pounds; 16 hands high, and is a sound horse.

FLEETWOOD is eight years old, dam by Young America, is sorrel, looks like his sire, fine style and lots of action; close to 16 hands, and weighs 1,100 pounds. In perfect health; good mane and tail. All they want is work to make them trot better than 20, as they are bred right for speed and staying qualities and has had the best of care up to the present time.

Horses can be seen at my Stable, corner THIRD AND EMPIRE STREETS, SAN JOSE.

OSSIDINE

KALAMAZOO, Mich., Sept. 15, 1888.

GENTLEMEN:—We have used Ossidine for the past two years and consider it invaluable for Sprung Tendons, Curbs, Ringbone and Spavins; there is nothing equals it; and for us it effected a permanent cure where firing failed, although performed by one of the most successful veterinarians on the continent. We have recommended it to others with like success, and believe it has more merit than any blister ever used.

Very respectfully yours, S. A. BROWNE & Co., Prop's.

Owner of Eole, St. Saviour, Eolist, etc, says; I have long used it in my stables, and find it to be all that is claimed for it in removing callous and unnatural bony growths, without leaving the slightest blemish. From my experience, I most strongly recommend the use of Ossidine, and feel that it is a necessary adjunct to every stable. Yours respectfully,

LONG BRANCH, July 28, 1888. F. GEBHARD.

This scientific preparation is an absolute cure for all bony or callous lumps on horses, and is a more powerful absorbent than "firing," without creating the slightest blemish. After a few applications the excrescence is so palpably reduced that even the skeptical frankly acknowledge that it is by far the most valuable outward remedy for horses ever invented.

The ONLY preparation in the world that will remove a Bone Spavin after it has become ossified.

No. 313 BUSH STREET.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 1889.

SUBSCRIPTION

ST. NICHOLAS.

The above cut is a very good representation of this favorite son of Sidney, and were the color reproduced there would be little necessity for further description. He is a very truly proportioned colt, his color a bright bay, and is action good. He has shown so much speed from the training he has had that it is nearly certain that he will trot very fast when his education is completed.

St. Nicholas has four crosses of Rysdyk's Hambletonian, three from Sidney; and one from his dam. As will be seen from the following pedigree, there is also a cross of Harry Clay and American Star. Sidney, his sire, has proved to be the most wonderful progenitor of pacers that has ever been known, two of his get showing phenomenal speed last year, when only three years old, viz.: Adonis, who paced in 2:14¼, a fourth heat, and Gold Leaf a third heat in 2:15. Fleet was the crack yearling of last year, having made a mile in 2:36, and another good yearling was Geo. V., who in 1887 gained a record of 2:51¼ in an actual race.

St. Nicolas was bred by G. Valensin at Arno Stock Farm, Sacramento Co., Cal., and foaled in 1885. He is 15⅝ hands high, with plenty of length and muscular development. As will be seen by the accompanying pedigree, his ancestry on all sides have gained distinction. His first dam is Towhead by Echo; second dam Silvertail, claimed to be by a thoroughbred horse.

Victor 2:22¼, and five others better than 2:30, and the dam of Direct, three-year-old stallion record 2:23.

First dam Sweetness, record 2:21¼, by Volunteer, 55, sire of St. Julian 2:11½, Gloster 2:17, Alley 2:19, Bodine 2:19¼, Driver 2.19½, and twenty-two more from 2:20¼ to 2:30; also sire of dams of sixteen from 2:19¼ to 2 30.

Second dam Lady Merritt, by Edwin Everett, 81, sire of Judge Fullerton 2:18, Electric 2:20, Sheridan 2:20¼, and ten more in the 2:20 list, and the dams of seven better than 2:30.

Third dam by Harry Clay, 45, record 2:29, sire of two in the 2:30 list, and of the dams of St. Julian 2:11½, Bodine 2:19¼, Elaine 2:20, and fifteen more in the 2:30 list; also Electioneer, the great sire of trotters.

Echo, 462, by Rysdyk's Hambletonian, 10, sire of Dexter 2:17¼, Nettie 2:18, Orange Girl 2:20, Jay Gould 2:20½, George Wilkes 2:22, and thirty-seven more in the 2:30 list, and sire of the dams of Trinket 2:14, Stamboul 2:14¼, Orange Boy 2:18¾, Wilton 2:19¼, David L. 2:19½, Princeton 2:19¾, Ruby 2:19¼ and thirty eight more from 2:20 to 2:30.

First dam Fanny Felter, by Magnolio, 68, sire of Magnolia, record 2:26¼, and dam of Chester F. 2:28¼, by American Star, 14, four in the 2:30 list, and of the dams of Dexter 2:17½, Driver 2:19¼, Joe Bunker 2:19¼, Nettie 2:18, Orange Girl 2:20, Robert McGregor 2:17⅞, and thirty-seven in the 2:30 list.

Second dam by Webber's Kentucky Whip.

Third dam by Shakespeare, a son of Duroc.

Items From Arizona.

PHOENIX, ARIZONA, February 15, 1889.

Horse matters have been so dull here that I have had nothing of interest to write for months, and although my items now are of little moment, still they may prove readable to the horsemen and breeders of this section. On the 26th ult. we had a trotting race here, in which considerable interest was manifested. The owners put fifty dollars each in the pool, there being six entries, with the proviso that the second horse was to save its entrance money. One of the entries was scratched, leaving five to contend for the honors. Two of the horses were handicapped, inasmuch that Harry D. and Roxie gave the balance 100 feet start. The following is the summary:

B. Goldman's Sorrel Prince	1 1
E. J. Edward's Harry D	2 2
G. E Loring's Roxie	3 3
M. McCann's Bessie	4 4
P. Cobel's Major B	5 5

Roxie, who is by Index, was driven in this race by the twelve-year-old son of Mr. Loring, and handled the ribbons with the coolness of a Doble or a Splan. By the way, I have never heard of so young a lad driving in a match race, and doubt if its equal can be shown.

We are to have a three days' meeting here on March 14th, 15th and 16th, at which purses for trotters, pacers and runners will be offered. There will, in all probability, be a three minute class, 2:40 class and a free-for-all. Although so far from the haunts of the Eastern horsemen, we are at times visited by Californian representatives; Sleepy Dick having run here, being announced as a full brother to a horse used by one of the cowboys. Lida Ferguson was called Red Bird, and Wells Fargo for the nonce travelled under the name of Frank. Lida was evidently not at herself when she ran, as one of our local celebrities beat her; half mile and repeat in 50, 50½ and 50 seconds, which shows we have good short distance horses in this territory.

Frank, or Wells Fargo, was identified by a gentleman who had seen him trot in 2:29, so a protest was entered and the so-called owner placed under oath. He swore that Frank was eligable to the three-minute class; a hard way to gain possession of a few dollars, is it not? The residents are beginning to take an active interest in breeding good horses, and we have many here who can beat three minutes. Index was the first well-bred stallion brought to this valley, and has left many of his get to remember the grand old horse by. There is also here the stallion Adrian, by Almont, a very well bred horse, who has coursing through his veins the blood of the Black Hawks and Clays. There is also a horse called Pacific, by Sultan, dam by Dan Voorhees. Climax, another good one, and several others less well known. It will not be long before this section will turn out some first-class trotters, when you are likely to hear from them. The climate here is delightful, and puts me very much in mind of Los Angeles.

San Jose Blood Horse Association.

Last Saturday afternoon a party of gentlemen interested in horse racing met at the office of Montgomery and Rea in San Jose, and instituted the San Jose Blood Horse Association. A large number of names were proposed for membership, each member agreeing to subscribe $25. The election for permanent officers resulted as follows: President, W. M. Williamson; vice-President, T. S. Montgomery; Secretary, T. C. Boots; Treasurer, San Jose National Bank. On motion it was decided to have seven directoro, four in addition to the three officers already named. Balloting resulted in the election of W. J. Casey, T. F. Burns, T. W. Hobson and D. J. Murphy. Messrs. Williamson, Casey and Boots prepared a speed programme for four days' racing, March 30, April 2nd, 4th, and 6th, which was agreed upon. The following is the card:

FIRST DAY.

No.—Introduction stakes, sweepstakes for all ages; $25 entrance, $10 forfeit, or $5 if declared out by March 25th, with $200 added, $75 to second, $50 to third horse. Five furlongs.

No 2.—Vendome stakes, 3 years old; $25 entrance, $10 forfeit, $5 if declared out by March 25th, $200 added, $85 to second, $50 to third horse. Seven furlongs.

No. 3.—Garden City stakes, sweepstakes for all ages; $35 entrance, $10 forfeit, $5 if declared out by March 25th, $250 added, $75 to second, $50 to the third horse. To carry 100 pounds on each. One mile.

Dates, March 30th, April 2d, 4th and 6th; P. C. B. H. A. rules to govern; extra days and races if thought advisable.

Racing at Sacramento.

Every Saturday afternoon one or more races is given at the Sacramento track, and as it is becoming better known the crowd increases from week to week. The following notice is clipped from the Bee.

The announcement of races at Agricultural Park on Saturday afternoon had the effect of drawing a fair crowd of lovers of turf sports to the race track.

The first event on Saturday was a pacing race, $100 a side, between Ober's Little Doc, to cart and carrying 175 pounds, and Hodson's Johnnie Skelton, to harness and carrying rule weight—150 pounds. Johnnie Skelton proved the victor, taking the third and fourth heats in 2:34½ and 2:31. The first heat was a dead heat in 2:36, and Little Doo won the second heat in 2:35.

The second race was a trot between Mason's Woodbine, by Jim Mulvenna, and Gardner's St. Lucas. St. Lucas captured the first heat in 2:52, and Woodbine the next two and race in 2:47 and 2:50.

Trotting Colt Stakes.

No. 1—For two year-olds; $50 entrance, of which $10 must accompany nomination; $15 payable July 1st, and remaining $25 payable August 10, 1889. $300 added by the Society.

No. 2—For three-year olds; $100 entrance, of which $25 must accompany nomination; $25 payable July 1st, and remaining $50 payable August 10, 1889; $400 added by the Society.

No. 3—For four-year-olds. Conditions same as for three-year-olds.

In all stakes failure to make payments as they become due forfeits entry and money paid in. Five to enter; three or more to start. Money in each stake divided as follows: To winning colt, all the stakes and 50 per cent. of added money; second colt, 33⅓ per cent.; third colt, 16⅔ per cent. of added money.

Two-year-old stake, mile heats; three and four-year-olds, three in five, to harness. No added money for a walk-over. If only two start, they must contest for the stakes paid in, and divide two-thirds and one-third. Otherwise National rules to govern.

Stamboul.

The name of Mr. Crawford, of Lexington, Ky., has been used quite freely within the past few days in connection with the purchase of Stamboul. We made mention last week that Mr. James Golden of Boston had an option on him for ten days, presumedly for a wealthy breeder of Massachusetts. Mr. Golden started at once for the East, to try and consummate the sale, of which he had very strong hopes, and it is altogether probable that before this issue reaches our readers the sale will be effected. Other parties, however, desire to purchase the now celebrated stallion, and Mr. O. A. Hickok received a telegraphic message from the East on last Thursday night, authorizing him to pay a deposit on the horse, and stating that the balance of the money would be forwarded at once.

In compliance with the request, Mr. Hickok started at once for Los Angeles, and, much to his chagrin, was confronted with the annoying fact that Mr. Golden's option had not expired, and that he would have to wait until the 24th inst. before his offer could be listened to. Mr. Hickok examined Stamboul, and says he never witnessed such a perfect horse, sound in every particular, or, to use his own phraseology, "he hasn't a pimple." Mr. Rose, who is at present in the city, declares that Stamboul is capable of trotting in 2:12, and he fully means to have him do it unless sold. The horse has served twenty-one of Mr. Rose's high class mares, but his service has not been public, the owner having refused quite a number of mares from other owners.

Waxy's Pedigree.

Some few weeks ago we were pleased to meet Mr. Levi S. Gould, of Boston, who was on theis coast trying to ferret out the pedigree of Waxy. Every facility was given Mr. Gould by all who could in any way contribute to the success of his mission, Mr. Charles M. Chase of this city, especially giving much time and attention to the matter. Mr. Gould has returned to Boston and has had an interview with the editor of the Cultivator, and the following is from that paper:

We were lately favored with a very pleasant call from the champion pedigree tracer, Mr. Levi S. Gould of this city, who in company with Mrs. Gould has spent several weeks in California this winter. Mr Gould though less voluble than some horsemen, has as keen an eye for a good one as the best While in the Golden State he visited several of the most prominent horse-breeding establishments, including the famous Palo Alto ranch, where he was highly entertained by the courteous superintendent, Charley Marvin, of Smuggler (2;15¼) fame. When the beautiful phenomenon Sunol (two-year-old 2:18) was led out and admired, Mr. Gould inquired the breeding of her second dam.

Mr. Marvin assured him that several horsemen had attempted to unravel the mystery which enveloped her origin, but had failed. She was bought as a thoroughbred daughter of Lexington, but present appearance indicated that upon the future pages of history the gandam of the fastest two-year-old trotter ever foaled must be classed among the long list of "unknown." Now Mr. Gould's scent for an obscure pedigree is as keen as that of the finest fox hound ever bred, for the trail of Reynard, and he suggested that as he had a little spare time which he would like to devote to the receration of pedigree hunting, he would see what could be done in the way of getting at the facts regarding Waxy's origin.

He set about the task at once, soon struck the trail, followed it persistently, going 1600 miles upon one trip away up on the Columbia River, to find a man who went across the plains in the same train with Waxy, and at the end of six weeks time succeeded in learning her breeder, and getting at all the facts concerning her ancestry. These facts are at present only known to Mr. Gould and Senator Stanford, but will soon be given to the public. Every horse breeder in America will rejoice to know that the blood lines of Waxy are established, no matter whether she originated from the slowest and coarsest of cart horses, the more insignficant Canuck, the choicest of thoroughbreds or the swiftest of Narragansett pacers.

Valuable Horses Lost.

The following account of the loss of Prince Io and Ossary was telegraphed to the San Francisco daily papers:

The English racehorses Ossory and Prince Io died at sea on the 3d and 8th inst. respectively, while on their way to this port in the National line steamer Queen, and their bodies were thrown overboard. Both were consigned to William Easton of this city, but Ossory was owned by Milton Young of McGrathiana's stud, Lexington, Ky., who will deeply regret his loss.

The horses died from exhaustion, due to the severity of the voyage.

The Queen left Liverpool on January 31st, and the animals were then in the pink of condition. They occupied boxstalls expressly fitted for them, and were in charge of a careful and experienced man named Brett. Gale after gale struck the vessel, and the racers were knocked off their feet time and again. It was almost impossible for them to stand up, and when not thrown down in their stalls they were smashed against the sides with terrific force. There was no let-up to the terrible usage. Night and day the gale continued, from the time of the steamer's departure from Liverpool, and Brett was almost wild at his inability to save the horses from injury. Ossory succumbed on the 3d inst., and was thrown overboard. Prince Io stood it five days longer, and he died on the 8th inst., when his carcass was weighted, and thrown into the raging sea.

Young, through his agent, paid the Duke of Westminster $10,000 for Ossory. He was chestnut in color, and a full brother to the great Ormonde, being by Ben d'Or, dam Lily Agnes, by Macaroni. As a two-year-old Ossory won the Criterion stakes, six furlongs, at the Newmarket-Houghton meeting, from a field of eight. As a three-year-old he ran nine races, winning three—the Prince of Wales stakes at Ascot, and the great Yorkshire stakes and Royal Post stakes at Newmarket. He also ran a dead heat with Galore.

Against Trotting Frauds.

One of the special misfortunes of the trotting turf, and one that has caused more chagrin to its true friends than any other during its entire existence as an American institution, has been the successful execution of various frauds. These have been mainly in the way of "ringing" and in the fixing the racing so that an inferior horse should win over those that have more speed and quality. Schemes of these kinds have been successfully attempted over the best tracks, because their projectors are, as a rule, very shrewd men, but they have been shamefully prevalent over the tracks of the smaller associations and at the numerous county fairs. To defeat these schemes, which lay the axe at the roots of the popularity of the trotting system, has been one of the special functions of the National Trotting Association and of its young associate, the American Association, and much has been done in the way of detecting and punishing such offenders by these great organizations; but the percentage of punishment to turf crime committed has been very small, and the necessity for other and closer scrutiny of what is done is evident. The grand circuit tracks and others of approximate class usually detect arrant frauds and punish them fearlessly, but the great mass of the trotting races occur at the half mile tracks and at the county fairs, where the greed for entries prevents the prompt and severe punishment of offenders. The inevitable result of this is that the public, distrusting the honesty of the alleged contests it is invited to see, loses its interest in the sport, and does not give it its practical support.

Very close to the management of most trotting tracks are the trainers and drivers, especially those who live in the near vicinity of each track. They are shrewd men as a class, and they are out for business, one and all. They have found in the most practical way that they have made their money through the crooked ways of the turf, rather than otherwise, and they have become wedded to those ways. The fair association that wishes to succeed, therefore, finds that it must wink at much that is off color, or it will lose the powerful aid of this class, and the association usually yields the point.

All this is not because the horsemen are naturally dishonest, As a class they are as strongly in favor of square dealing as any other, but the unfortunate early influences that controlled trotting matters still control them, and the results are as have been described, to the shame of the great and eminently respectable interest that breeds and trots horses. Given a chance, the majority of the trainers and drivers would prefer the honest way.

The remedy lies in the concerted action of the reputable gentlemen who control the fairs and the half mile tracks. If they will unite, however loosely in other ways, but closely in the matter of suppression of fraud, and with an absolute purpose to have no trotting except that which is honestly conducted, they will after no long time weed out the incorrigible wrong doers and purify their branch of the turf completely. Then the public, having regained its confidence in the sport, will give it all the support that it merits, and the result will be a return of the halcyon days of American trotting.

A practical step in this direction has been taken in the call for a convention of representatives of county fairs and half mile tracks at Lancaster, Pa., this week. The object of the convention is to form an association for the prevention of such frauds as have been referred to. A very large number of tracks and fair associations will be represented, and it is quite possible that the result may be the foundation of an association that will bring about a new era in trotting.—Sporting World.

OF THE SWEDISH HORSE.

I had the Honour to Wait on the Queen of Sweden when she was at Antwerp, and she used me very Graciously, and Civilly; and an Extraordinary Lady, I assure you, she is in All things: But for the Swedish Horses she had for the Saddle, there was no Great Matter in Them; She had Eight Coach-Horses, large and noble-Shap't, of the Count of Oldenburg's Breed, which were Beyond any Coursers that ever yet I saw: their Colours Isabels, with long White Manes, Tails and Toppings: and these she sent into Spain, for a Present to the Catholick King: And it was a Kingly Present, fit for such a Queen to Present, and for so Great a King to Receive.

OF WHAT STATURE A Horse is Best, EITHER FOR The WAR, or for a SINGLE-COMBAT, or For ANY THING ELSE.

There are Great Disputes amongst Cavaliers about this Business: I will not trouble you much about their Arguments, but only Deliver unto you my Opinion. Those that are for High and Large Horses, say, They are Strong for the Shock: But they must Know, that all Large Horses are not Strong; nay, for the most part they are not only the Weakest Horses, but commonly of no Spirit or Action.

Put the Case, a Great Horse were Strong, yet he is so Tall, and his Strength Diffused, and indeed so out of his Strength, that a Midling Horse (entre deux felles) or rather a Less Horse, being Under him, and in his Strength, would certainly Overthrow him: So that a Midling Horse, or a Less, is Best for the War, or a Single-Combat, without all Doubt.

Midling-Horses, and Less Horses have, for the most part, both Strength, Spirit, and Agility, and not one in an Hundred but proves Well; when of Large Horses not one in a Thousand does: Nay, the Midling, or Less Horse, is Best for All Things; for the Padd, Buck-Hunting, Hawking-Naggs, or Geldings; for Hunting-Horses, Horses for Winter-Gallopping on the High-Way many Miles; for the Coach, for the Cart, for Any Thing. And if they should Fall, a Little Horse would do the Rider Less Hurt than a Greater Horse, to lie upon him. Geldings, and Gelt-Naggs, are fitter for Great Journeys, or Hunting, or Hawking in Summer, than Ston'd Horses; for their Heat, with the Heat of the Weather, soon Heats their Feet, and Founders them; whereas, Geldings are Colder, and so Travel Better, and not Tire so soon in the Heat of Summer.

THAT THERE ARE FEW GOOD HORSES.

Now I must Tell you, That there are Good and Badd Horses of all Countries in the World; but there are more Badd than Good, as there are of Men: And though there be Millions of Painters, yet there was but one Vandike in many Ages, or, I believe, shall be: The like in Musick, in Horsemanship, in Weapons, and in Horses; for a Rare Horse in any Kind, is a Difficult business to find, I assure you: It is a Hard thing to find Fit Horses for the Mannage, either upon the Ground, or in Ayres. It is true, Art doth much, but Nature is the Ground for Art to Work on; for, without it, Art can do but Little.

I dare Undertake to Make a Cow go Just in the Mannage, but when I have Done that, it is but a Cow: And so a Jade that is Drest, he is but a Jade when you have done all you Can.

I assure you, it is a very Hard thing to find a Good Padd-Nagg, or a Good Padd-Gelding, to Amble finely upon the Hanches, and from his Amble to his Gallop, or from his Amble to his Trot, and firm on the Hand: Upon the Bitt I have seen very Few worth any thing, and as few Good Buck-Hunters, or Hawking-Naggs, or Winter Hunting-Geldings, or Horses to Gallop or Run surely upon All Grounds, Plowed Lands, Moors, Parks, Forrests, and every where, with a Snaffle, and a Scotch Saddle, the Rains slack in his Neck, which makes him very much the Safer for his Rider, because he Gal'ops upon the Hanches.

Let me Tell you, that Running-Horses are the most Easily found, and of the least Use; commonly they Run upon Heaths (a Green Carpet) and must there Run all-upon the Shoulders, which in Troublesome Grounds is ready to Break ones Neck, and of no Use; Though I Love the Sport of a Running Horse very Well, and think I am as Good a Jockey as any, and have Ridden many Hundred Matches, and Seen the Best Jockeys, and Studied it more than, I think, they have Done.

You see how Difficult a thing it is to Have a Good Horse in any Kind, for Any thing: Therefore I conclude, That a Knowing Horse-man is not so Happy for Horses, as a Citizen of London, that knows Nothing, more Than to Buy a Horse in Smithfield, for Eight Pound Ten Shillings, or thereabouts, to Carry him to Nottingham, or to Salisbury; and let him have never so many Faults, his Ignorance finds none: Wherein he is very Happy.

More OBSERVATIONS Concerning HORSES.

The Turks are the most Curious in Keeping their Horses of any Nation; and Value them, and Esteem them most: They have all the Ways of Dressing them, and keeping them Clean, that can be Imagined. They Cloath them first with a Fine Linnen Cloth and Hood next their Skin; then with a Hair-Cloth and Hood, Lined with Felt, over their Linnen Cloth and Hood: And all these are made so Fit, as to Cover their Breasts, and to come pretty low down to their Leggs. There cannot be a Better Way than this for their Clothin .

The Spaniards are also very Curious about their Horses in all things; and their Grooms so Diligent, as they never Stay long Out of the Stable, but are Always doing something about them; and especially are Curious about their Manes, Toppings, and Tayles, making them Clean divers Ways; Washing them, and Pleating them. They esteem Highly their Horses, and no Nation Loves them Better. The Master is Continually in the Stable, to see the Grooms do their Duty; but, for all that, the Spaniards and the Turks are none of the Best Horse-men; they Ride Short, have Strange Spurrs, and Saddles, especially Bitts, which are most Abominable.

The Italians are very Careful and Neat about their Horses; but they have of late Lost their Latine in Riding, or else they never Had it; and our Ignorance make us Think they did Rarely.

Some of the French are Curious in Keeping and Dressing their Horses; but, for the most part, Not: They highly Esteem Horses, and will give great Prices for them. But French Grooms never Rub a Horses' Leggs well.

The Almains, or High-Germans, Love Horses well: Some say, They are very Curious, but Me thinks not. They Commend their Grooms Extreamely, but I think they do not Deserve it. Certainly the Best Grooms are English Grooms; but no Grooms are Good, Except the Master looks strictly after them; for, the Master's Eye makes the Horse well Drest, as according to the Proverb, The Master's Eye makes the Horse Fat.

Denmark, Swede, Poland, Transylvania, Hungary, and all those countries, are much like the Almains, for Little Curiosities, in Keeping and Dressing their Horses; and all their Riding alike: No Man in Germany will Ride without a Cavazone, though he Knows not the Use of it at all, nor what to do with it. In Flanders, Brabant, and those Parts; as also in Holland, and those Parts, they are much like the Germans.

The Emperour of Muscovy, I have Heard, hath a Stable of Horses, and a French Rider: He hath some Hors s come out of Tartaria, and Turkey, but none Good in his own Country. A Rider is of no great Use there, except he could Dress, and make a Ready Bear; of which there is Plenty, and they have Noble Races of those Beasts.

In the Mogul's Country there is nothing to Dress, except you would Dress Elephants; and the Best Horses they have, come out of Persia.

Sir Walter Rawley told me, That in the West-Indies there were the Finest Shap't Horses, and the Finest Colours in the World, beyond all Spanish Horses and Barbs that ever he saw; and they knew there so Little the Use of Horses, that they Killed them for their Skins.

In Denmark there are Excellent good Horses; and in Norway little Strong Horses, but not so Purely Shap't. I saw Six Norway Horses in a Coach, very little Horses, Isabells, with White Manes, and White Tayls; some of their Heads are a little too Bigg; but very Fine little Horses, and Strong.

For Iseland- Horses, they are all Curlled like their Doggs, and so Curled, that no Curry-Comb can Dress them, nor anything Else: And they are but Dull Jades.

WHAT STALLION Is Best for the MANNAGE, The Ordering of him before he MOUNTS THE MARES, What Kind of Mares, When, and How, they should be put Together for GENERATION.

The Best Stallion in Our land is, A Well-Shap't Spanish Horse, with a Superfluity of Spirit, and Strength, Docil, and of an Excellent Disposition, and good Nature, which is the Chief thing in a Stallion; for if he be of an ill Disposition, Vitious, or Melancholly, all his Offsprings will Participate of it, and will Never be Drest, or made Perfect Horses as they should Be.

He Ought to be of a Good Colour, to give the Race a good Dye; and Well-Mark't, to Agree with most Men's Opinions: Though Marks and Colours be Nothing at all to Know the Goodness of a Horse, nor Shape nether; but, the Abundance of Spirits, and a Strong Chine, be the most Considerable: Yet, by any Means, I would have him Perfectly Shap't, for the Beautifying of your Race; for a Handsome Horse may be as Good as an Ill-favoured Horse; and an Ill-favoured Horse as Good, as a Handsome Horse.

I would have you Feed him four or five Months before he Covers, with Good Oats, Pease, and Hull'd Beans (and Bread if you think Good) with Sweet Hay, and good Wheat-Straw, and some Barley now and then for Variety; and Ride him out to be Watered every day Twice, and keep him Out some Little time, only to Walk him; but not too Long, for that will Weaken him too much.

Why not Breed of a Neapolitan? They are too Gross Horses; and we Breed too Bigg Horses in England, by reason of the Moysture both of Ayre and Ground.

Why not Breed of a Barb? They are too Slender, and too Lady-like, for the Mannage, though themselves the Best in the World for it; but their Off-spring, are commonly Loose and Weak Horses, fitter for Running-Horses, than the Mannage: so the Spanish Horse is in the Middle (where Vertue lyes), neither too Gross, nor too Slender, and the finest Shap't Horse in the World: And therefore, Have no other Stallion.

The fittest Mares for the Mannage, must be Short from the Head to the Croup; Curious Forehands, but not too Long; Fine Heads, and well Hung on; Good Bodies, Short rather than Long; Short and good Leggs; Short Pastorns, and Bending; Good Feet, short Backs, full of Spirits, and Strength; and good Natures.

No where Better Mares than in England, if they be well Chosen. Yet, I must Tell you, I could Wish you to have a Couple of fine Shap't little Dutch Mares, which is a fine Composition, with a Spanish Horse, for the Mannage.

For their Colours; Let them be such as most Men Like; though I value not that at all.

Their Age; five, six, or seven Years Old; and the Stallion not to be too Old, except necessity otherwise force you.

The time of the Year; in May, about the middle of that Month, that the Foles may Fall in April, because else they will have no grass.

Put the Stallion to the Mares, thus: Take off his Hinder Shoes, and bring him Near where the Mares are, and there let him Cover a Mare in Hand Twice, which will make him Wife; and instantly Pull off his Bridle, and put him to the Mares: Which Mares must all be put in a Convenient Closse, that may Feed them Well for six weeks at least.

Put those Mares that have Newly Foled, and those that are with foal, and those that are Barren, all to him; for there is no Danger in it. This Way is so Natural, as they are all Served in their Height of Pride; for, the Horse never Mounts them until they Woo him to it Extreamely.

When he hath Covered them all, then he Tryes them all Over again, and those that will Take the Horse, he Covers them; and those that will Not, he lets them Alone: And when he Knows he hath Finished his Work, he Beats the Pale to be gone, which is Time for him; then you must take him Up, and you shall find him Lean enough, nothing but Skin and Bones, and his Mane and Tayle will Moot off: If you give him too many Mares, then he will Serve you the Less time; be so Lean and Weak, that you will very hardly Recover him against the next Year, or Covering-time. Therefore ten or twelve Mares is Enough.

I had Forgot to Tell you, That you must have a Little House with a Manger, to Feed him with Corn, and Bread, during the Covering-time, to Defend him from the Heat of the Sun, and Rain, which would much Infeeble him: And you must have a Man always to Attend him and the Mares; and for that Purpose he must have a Little Hutt built, to be there Day and Night; not only to Tell you how they are Served, but that no other Horse comes to the Mares; or other mares to the horse, and for many other Accidents wherewith he is to Acquaint you. And when you have taken Up the Stallion, then Remove the Mares into a good and fresh pasture.

That is the True Way for Covering the Mares; for, Nature is Wiser than Art in the Act of Generation; and by this Way, I dare say, there shall not, of a Dozen Mares, Two fail.

I must Tell you, That you must Never have a Stallion of you Own Breed, because they are too Far removed from the Purity, and Head, of the Fountain, which is a Pure Spanish Horse: Besides, should the Stallions be of your Own Breed, in Three or Four Generations they would come to be Cart-Horses; so Gross, and ill-Favoured would they be: or at least, just such Horses as are Bred in that Country, so soon will they Degenerate: Therefore, have still a fresh Spanish Horse for the Stallion.

But you cannot Breed Better, than to Breed of your own Mares that you have Bred; and let their Fathers Cover them; for there is no Incests in Horses: And thus they are nearer, by a Degree, to the Purity, since a fine Horse Got them, and the same fine Horse Covers them again.

If any Man will Dispute against this Truth, (if he be not Obstinate in his Errours) let him Read my First Book of Horse-manship in French, where I Treat of Breeding; and there are Reasons that may Convert him, if he considers my Great Experience.

FOR The Housing, Feeding, and Ordering of COLTS.

You must Wean the Foles, and Take them from their Damms, when Cold Weather comes in, which is about Martlemas; and have a Convenient House to Put them in, with a Low Rack and Manger fit for them: For the first Year, put the Horse-Colts, and Fillies, all together; and have alwayes good and fresh Litter for them, good Sweet Hay, and Wheat-Bran, and good Oats; the Wheat-Bran makes them Drink Well, and gives them good Bodies.

In a Fair Day, let them now and then go Out in some Inclosed Yard, to Play, and Rejoyce themselves; and then put them Up carefully, that they be not Hurt.

The next Summer, when Grass is Plentiful, put them Out in some Dry Ground, where the Grass is Short, and Sweet; for if a Colt fills his Belly, once in Twenty-Four Hours, it is Sufficient; and good Water they must have. The Colts must be by themselves, and the Fillies by themselves, Separated.

The next Winter, at Martlemas, then take Up again the Colts, bring them into the Stable, and Use them, in all Kinds, like the Older Horses; doing the same Thing every Summer, and every Winter, untill the Colts be Three Years Old, and Vantage, and then take Them Up for altogether, and Back them. Yearlings must be Abroad together; so Two-Years-old together, and Three-Years-old together; for thus they will Agree best: as we see that Little young Boyes; and Greater old Boyes, never Agree, or Play well together.

The Fillies you may Better put Together; Yearings, and Two-Years-old, and Three. But I would wish you to take Up the Filleys at Two Years old, and Vantage; then Back them, and make them Gentle, and then Cover them at Three Years old: For, being thus Gentle, they will Never spoyl Themselves, nor their Foles; and if They, or their Foles, be Sick, or Hurt, you may Easily take them Up for the Farrier to use his Skill to Recover them.

But, Why this Housing every Winter? You must know, There is nothing indures Cold worse than Horse-kind. For Example; Is there any Thing in the World Looks so like a Bear, and so Ill-favouredly, as a Colt in Winter upon a Common, and stands as if he had neither Life, nor Spirit? and certainly, Warmth, and Dry Feeding, is the Quintessence, and greatest Secret in the World for Breeding. To Prove it; The Spanish Horse, that is so Fine, is Bred in Spain, a Hot Country, and hath Dry Feeding; for there is not much Grass in many Places. Barbery is very Hot, and little Grass. Turkey is very Hot, and Dry Grounds. Naples is very Hot, Mountainous, and Dry; and in all those Countries, the Horses are Purely Shap't, with Heat, and Dry Feeding: Therefore you must Help it, as well as you Can, in Cold Countries; which is Done with Housing, and Dry Feeding. To Prove it, Take the Finest Shap't Spanish Horse you can, and let him Cover Two Mares, of Equal Beauty; and if they have Two Horse-Colts, let One run Abroad, until he be Three Years and a Half old, and let the other be Housed every Winter; and Fed, as I have Told you. That Colt that hath gone Abroad Three Years and a Half, shall have a great Fleshy-Head, and Thick and Full Neckt; Fleshy Shoulders; Flabby and Gowty Legs; Weak Pasterns, and ill Hooffs; and shall be a Dull, Weak, Fleshy Jade, by Reason of the Humidity of our Country, both Above and Underneath: when the Colt that is Housed every Winter, that is Kept Warm, and Lies Dry, and is Dry Fed, shall have as Fine a Forehand, as Sinewy-Leggs, as good Hooffs, Spirit and Strength, and in all things will be as purely Shap't, as any Spanish Horse can be.

So you see, That to have the Finest Stallion, and the Beautifullest Mares, is Nothing, if you do not Order them as I have told you. (See Dutch Horses, how Gross they are, being Bred in Cold Countries.) This is a great Secret for Breeding believe me, that have Tryed all Manner of Ways; and according to my great Experience, there is Nothing but This.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—Training in Kentucky cannot be truly said to be very forward, for while it is true that the winter has so far been very mild, and but little snow has fallen as yet, there has been considerable rain fall—which has occurred at such intervals as to keep the tracks in poor condition for good work. In Lexington, a short time since, I visited many of the stables, and saw most of the horses yet in cumbrous flesh—saw a few trotted in the mud around the "inside" track, which was then so soft that their riders were scarcely recognizable when dismounted.

It is generally thought, there, that Mr. M. Young has the coming crack two-year-old filly in Helter Skelter, by Pell Mell. He has declined an offer of $5,000 for her. Already her good performance, a quarter, said to be in 22½ last fall, has brought her considerable notice. It is to be hoped that she will not prove a disappointment, as so many fast yearlings have done after they go into their two-year-old form. Mr. James B. Clay has the most promising Longfellow yearling colt I have ever seen, by that famous sire. The colt is in size extraordinary, and as much so in quality and finish. If Mr. Guest's Heron coetinues to do well, "Grim" will possibly not think Mr. G. may feel so foolish after he meets Proctor Knott. The horse that gives Heron a beating may have to beat his rider's mark. Nor is Proctor Knott underrated in saying this. Wait a bit and see.

Mr. Basil Guest says that Miss Boyle, and that fast, but disabled filly, Irene Dillon, will be bred to Little Minch, when they reach Nashville, from New Orleans, where Mr. Will Guest has them in training with McMurtry and others. Mr. Guest has not been interviewed since his return from Nashville, where Heron now is, but a favorable report is sincerely hoped, as no one hath a bigger heart than Jim. No controversy on the score of Heron, is sought with "Grim," his columns in the BREEDER AND SPOTSMAN are far too entertaining to stir any feelings but of gratitude. Many famous horses have occupied these stables, where the writer now is. Among others Wagner, Gray Eagle, Jack Gamble, Idlewild, Mollie Jackson, Laura Farris, Bayonett, etc. They were built on the grounds of Mr. Farris, by the once celebrated old sportsman Mr. Campbell, who owned Wagner. And on this old track not a few good ones have taken their preparation; and but few have been trained here of late years that have failed to give good report of themselves. Here Capt. Moore trained Waddell, Madge Duke, Maggie S., and others, now on the Golden Slope. Capt. Moore was writing his "Memoirs of the Turf," when he was stricken down with pneumonia of which he died. For months he had been collecting data, and had much of the intended volume written. The Mss. is in possession of his widow. It is deeply regretted that he did not finish the work he was so eminently qualified to make interesting. L. M. LASLEY.

CRAB ORCHARD, KY., Feb. 11, 1889.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—I thought when I saw that our friend Mr. Simpson had claimed Antevenio for bay filly foaled March 27, 1888, in your last issue, he was playing a given joke on me. Last year I claimed that name for my bay colt by Antevolo, dam Pastime by Rustic, in your columns. By that name Antevenio I came before, and took the first premium for yearling roadsters at last Petaluma fair. Rex Bando, a King I come, Regina Brando, a Queen I come, would be appropriate names. May all the Antevolos get a place in every race they start in, is the wish of A Rumored Sale.

For several days rumors have been flying thick and fast, respecting the sale of seven fillies from the San Mateo Stock Farm, but the truth of the matter cannot be learned, as Mr. Corbett is so busy preparatory to going East, that he has no time to spare. Without vouching for the sale, we give the story below as copied from the Call.

W. H. Allen, of the contracting firm of Allen & Veith, has been for some time past negotiating the purchase of several of the Wilkes family from William Corbett of the San Mateo Stock Farm. Mr. Allen was anxious to secure either Guy Wilkes or Sable Wilkes. Mr. Corbett refuses to sell either of the stallions, though he has had the tempting offers of $75,000 and $50 000 for them respectfully.

Failing to get either of the horses, Mr. Allen commenced negotiations for the purchase of some of the youngsters. He at first wanted seventeen of them, but Mr. Corbett would not part with all the untried stock that Mr. Allen desired.

A sale was consummated yesterday of seven head of Guy Wilkes' progeny. The amount paid for the seven head is in round figures $60,000. The stock will remain at the San Mateo farm until Mr. Allen is ready to receive them, it being deemed dangerous to ship them at once as some of the mares are with foal.

A bay yearling filly by Guy Wilkes, dam Ruby, 2:19¼, brought the highest price. This is not surprising when it is considered that Ruby is a full sister to the noted Stamboul —2:14¼.

The others in the lot are: Minnie Wilkes, by Sultan, dam Kittie Wilkes by George Wilkes; Sable Hayward, out of Sable, dam of Sable Wilkes; Hindu Wilkes, by Guy Wilkes, out of Rosetta; a yearling brown filly by Guy Wilkes, dam Sable; Jet Wilkes, by Guy Wilkes, dam Sable, and a black yearling filly by Guy Wilkes, dam Atlanta, who is a full sister to Beautiful Bells, 2:29¼.

Rancho Del Paso.

While in Sacramento lately, Mr. C. W. Aby expressed a desire to visit the Rancho Del Paso Stock Farm, and as there happened to be present at the time several well known horsemen, it is not surprising that genial Ed. Smith, secretary of the State Agricultural Society, should tender his services as guide, and place the necessary vehicle at the disposal of any present who wished to make the trip. There were only three in the party, Matt Storn being induced to go along, so they started for Mr Haggin's mammoth stock farm. The superintendent, Mr. John Mackey, was on hand to receive the visitors, and as was expected much chaffing was indulged in between Mr. Aby and Mr. Mackey as to the relative merits of Sir Modred and Darebin on the one side, and Greenback and Friar Tuck on the other.

The various stallions were brought out for the inspection of the guests, and each in turn criticised. Naturally the imported Australians were the ones most critically examined and as Sir Modred was walked up and down, accompanied by Darebin, first one and then the other was the momentary fancy, each turn of the horses bringing out fresh points, which had not been noticed before. Of couse as was to be expected, the manager of the Langtry and Gebhard farms would not acknowledge that either of the Australians were as well bred as his two imported English ones, the bantering of the two rival Superintendents producing roars of laughter from the spectators. Hidalgo was highly thought of, as he was shown, the great son of Joe Daniels being in the best possible form. Warwick, Milner, Kyrle Daly, John Happy, Hyder Ali, and Mr. Mackey's own stallion Midlothian were each shown in turn and elicited the warmest commendations from the visitors. The grand array of brood mares were next looked over, two who were standing together being especially admired and on enquiry they were found to be two of world-wide repute, Explosion, the dam of Dew Drop for which the Dwyers paid $29,000, and Maud Hampton, dam of King Thomas, which as a yearling brought the highest price ever paid in any country for one, viz.: $40,000. Many others were seen, but the one that aroused the most curiosity and words of praise for what she had done on the turf was Miss Woodford. From there as a natural sequence the party were taken to see her yearling filly by Darebin, of which all think highly. This youngster is as finely bred as any horse in the universe and if racing ability on the part of both sire and dam, coupled with royal blood from both parents amout to anything, this filly should prove another Tremont, Luke Blackburn or a Martini-Henry. The visit taken as a whole, was very satisfactory and pleasant to all concerned, and will be remembered with pleasure for many a day.

More About Proctor Knott.

Rumors are flying thick and fast concerning Proctor Knott, says the St. Louis Republic, and they are ugly rumors, too, stories that will make many turfmen think twice before they back him. Good judges of horseflesh who have had a glimpse at this much talked of animal lately say unreservedly that he is not going to make the three-year-old that was predicted. One thing is positively certain—the colt has not filled out as race horses generally do during the winter months; that is, there is not the body to the flesh that is necessary to withstand arduous training.

An authority who stands high, and who recently saw Bryant's pet, is of the candid opinion that Proctor Knott would not run a good race this season. He felt assured that when it came to a race of a mile and a half, with a fighting finish, Proctor would be found lagging. The gentleman stands high in racing circles of the East. He is an enthusiastic horseman and an extensive breeder. He would have purchased the colt himself had he thought well of the animal. He was present when Proctor finished first in the Futurity stake at Sheepshead Bay, and liked his easy style of running and rangy appearance. When he heard of the Dwyers discussing the merits of the horse, and knowing they were without a first class three-year-old, he jumped aboard a train and started for Proctor Knott's home, and not a moment too soon, for the next train brought out the agent of the Dwyer Bros.

"Do not quote me, but you will find Proctor Knott to turn out to be another Apollo. Apollo was a gelding of the Proctor Knott stripe. As a three-year-old he defeated Runnymede, Bengal, Harry Gilmore and a lot of other mighty good colts for the Kentucky Derby, but that was in reality his only race. Old Green Morris had a great streak of luck that year. The animal happened to strike Pierre Lorillard's fancy and it came to a dicker regarding the price. At this game G. B. Morris has no superior, and Pierre Lorillard gave $16,500 for Apollo After he had possession of the animal for about a month, Lorillard concluded that he knew nothing about horses, and shortly afterward gave up his stable. I will risk my reputation that there never was but one gelding that ever reached the status of a first-class race horse, and that was that noble son of Leamington and Maiden—Parole.

"Proctor Knott will never be such a horse as Parole if he lives to be 1,000 years old, for reasons which all horsemen are aware of. Parole was a phenomenal horse, with a turn of speed few horses are ever gifted with. No matter how long the race was, if he ever landed at the head of the straight within two lengths of the leader the contest was over."

A Notable Offer of Cattle.

By direction of Mr. Joseph Combs of Linneus, Mo., Messrs. Killip & Co. will offer at auction at Agricultural Park, Sacramento, on April 4th next, ninety head of first-class short-horn cattle, consisting of forty head of bulls and fifty head of cows and heifers. The cattle were carefully selected from the very best herds in Kentucky and Missouri, and are fully guaranteed as to soundness and non-existence of disease. Certified pedigrees will be furnished with all animals sold.

The offering is one worthy of note, and breeders should consult the advertisement in another column, besides securing catalogues from Messrs. Killip & Co., 22 Montgomery street, City. Mr. John Combs is a former well and favorably known resident of California who lived at Woodland. Last year he made a most successful sale of short horns, and the present draft is in no wise inferior to those then disposed of.

Grim's Gossip.

Last year over seventy 2:30 horses died.

Adonis will remain at Palo Alto until about June 1st.

It is generally thought in New York that Mr. E. D. Morgan is the owner of Galore.

There seems to be a prevailing opinion that the Dwyers will buy Proctor Knott.

And now the boys are guessing what the colts and fillies will bring at the Kellogg sale.

Mr. John Goldsmith has charge of the Corbitt consignment of horses; they could not be in better hands.

The owner of Patron will be pleased to learn that Stamboul is not going East this year.

Walter Olney, the Eastern turfman, has purchased Winfield from Mr. J. B. Haggin, price not stated.

Dr. Ross has taken half a dozen of the brood mares from Palo Alto to San Simeon, to breed to imp. Cheviat.

There is a rumor current that a well known gentleman will import a number of horses to revive four-mile heat races.

Many thanks to Wilfred Page for two exceedingly fine tabulated pedigrees of his stallions Mortimer and Eclectic.

Now you may expect to see fun. Hamilton and Barnes have got to calling each other "Nigger," in the controversy about the last Futurity.

The Colt Stakes advertised by the Montana Circuit close on the first of March, and those who propose to send in entries should do so at once.

The New York Sportsman says: "An odd fact in relation to the 14 winners of the Kentucky Derby is that with the exception of Apollo, all are still living."

Electioneer will in all probability have a sensational pacer among his performers in 1889 in the brown gelding Ivanhoe, out of Isma by General Benton.

It is 20 to 1 that neither The Bard, Hanover, Elkwood, Kingston or Egmont will start in the Suburban. Make a note of it.

The Palace Hotel is made lively each evening with the stories told by "Knap" McCarthy, Sam Gamble, Jimmy Dustin and the irrepressible Dan McCarthy.

At Brasfield & Co.'s sale at Lexington, Ky., Albrina DeMer by Stamboul, dam Belle Blanche, was sold to James A. Clay, of Paris, Ky., for $1,700.

The well known race mare Repetta has a very bad leg, and it is doubtful if she will ever start in a race again. She is at Walla Walla, W. T.

Mr. Irvin Ayres bought a mare some time ago for $1500, and bred her to Mambrino Wilkes. Last week he sold her back to the original owner for $2500, she proving heavy in foal.

Many thanks to Secretary J. E. Brewster, of the Washington Park Club for copies of the entries to the various stakes in the summer meeting.

Why is it that not one of the Eastern papers have mentioned that there is something the matter with one of Patron's legs? Stir up, and do not look to me for Eastern gossip.

Mr. Hickok tells me that he will not go East with his string this year. Arab and Stamboul both being sold takes away the best of the horses he would have had in his stable.

Mr. G. A. Tupper, of Santa Rosa, well and favorably known to all horsemen in California, will shortly leave for a tour through the Eastern States.

Jesse D. Carr has sold to Mr. Bull of San Jose the Mambrino Patchen stallion Carr's Mambrino, sire of Lady Ellen 2:28, dam of Ella 2:29.

Sid Sperry, the trainer, of Petaluma, has a yearling filly by Anteeo 2:16¼, out of Debutante by Sultan 2:24, for which he is said to have refused a round thousand.

Mrs. Henry N. Smith, wife of Mr. Henry N. Smith, proprietor of the Fashion Stock Farm, Trenton, N. J., died February 1st at the Windsor Hotel, New York City.

Among the colts in the Realization Stakes which will have to carry the full weight of 122 pounds are Salvator, Fresno, Reporter, Tipstaff, Liberty, the Faverdale colt, and of the fillies The Lioness will carry 119 pounds.

Mr. J. B. Chase will ship in a few days to the Gebhard Stock Farm in Lake County, Katy Pease and Mistake, to be served by Greenback, and a Joe Hooker filly to be bred to Friar Tuck.

Pete Brandow is five dollars ahead on a decision given in the answers to correspondents column. Pete is usually right when the money is up and the question refers to trotting rules.

Matt Storn has a very promising colt by Le Grande, dam by The Moor, who is being given light exercise by John Rowen at the Oakland Trotting Park. Mr. Storn has had an offer for $2000 for the youngster, but refuses to take less than $2500.

Driver Griffen told me the other day at the track that he had started Clara D. in 187 trotting races, and won money in every one. He did not mention how much he won in the American Stakes. But then there were a lot of other drivers present.

P. C. Byrne writes me from Phoenix, A. T. that he considers the climate in that territory vastly superior to California, for training horses. He has several good ones himself and should know whereof he speaks. California however is pretty good.

Dan McCarty drove Castro, the Clovis colt, a quarter at the Bay District, on Wednesday, in 45 seconds. As the colt is little more than bridle-wise this is a good showing. Naturally Dan is highly elated over the performance.

Three horses have cost Kentucky breeders $55,000. W. C. France paid $25,000 for Sentinel Wilkes, R. C. Pepper gave $15 000 for Norval, while A. J. Alexander paid $16,000 for King Wilkes.

Mr. Harry J. Agnew will leave San Francisco for his home in Honolula, next Tuesday. Bon voyage, I almost wish I was going to see the old course at Kapolina once more.

What is he, a flyer or a crab? is the question horsemen are asking each other in reference to King Thomas, owned by Senator Hearst, and commonly called the $40,000 colt.

Mr. O. A. Hickok, says that he will not be surprised if Mascotte, the Stamboul—Minneheha colt, which goes East with the consignment, sells for $10,000. He claims that the colt although only a two-year-old, can show already a 2:20 gait.

Mr. Dan McCarty has started a new fashion. When he drives his trotters, he wears a cape on his overcoat, and as the wind catches the flaps, one receives the impression that a hugh bird is skimming along the surface of the ground.

Antevolo has arrived safely at his future home, Cedar Park Farm, near Philadelphia. He looked in first-class condition after his long ride, and was much admired by those who were waiting to welcome the new comer.

That item has gone the round now for several weeks. Well one of them was a Californian horse, two others have been sold to leave the State, their price being $38,000, and still another sold which will not leave California, for $50,000.

The sporting journals of the East are all loud in praise of Mr. J. B. Haggin, who promptly scratched Firenzi before the public could bet any money on the mare, as she would undoubtedly have been a great favorite. As it now stands, The Bard is carrying the most of the money at present.

J. I. Case, in Phallis, 2:13¾, and Brown, 2:18¾, has two stallions that have faster records than any two belonging to any other stock farm, Mr. Wm. Corbett's two, Guy Wilkes, 2:15¾, and Sable Wilkes, 2:18, being the next fastest pair owned by one breeder.

Mr. O. A. Hickok paid a flying visit to Los Angeles last Saturday and returned on Monday. He says that the colts and fillies by Stamboul, to be seen at the breeding establishment of L. J. Rose, are far superior to anything he has ever seen before.

Mrs. C. R. Noyes, of Boston, is at present visiting San Francisco and vicinity. The lady has made arrangements to ship out a Director filly, which she intends to breed to Electioneer if possible.

Capt. H. B. Blagrave is back again in town after looking at various farms in different parts of the State. He complains that the prices asked for land is so high that it is impossible to start a breeding establishment, such as he contemplated.

The "Live Stock Record" of Lexington, Ky., has had the picture of Sunol, which lately appeared in the Breeder and Sportsman, copied and reproduced on its first page. As usual, neither this paper nor the artist, Mr. H. Boyd, receives any credit.

Lord William Beresford in a speech at the Turf Club dinner, at Calcutta, India, said that keeping a big racing stable is a losing game, and if this is so, his lordship's love of sport must be truly very great, or he would not have continued racing for so many years.

If you want to meet a newsy, bright, rustling horse reporter just get an introduction to Mr. B. Benjamin (Dagworth) of the Los Angeles Tribune. "Dag" has been in town for several days, shaking old friends by the hand and forming scores of new ones. Under his able direction the Tribune is far and away ahead of any other daily paper west of the Rocky Mountains.

Congratulations have been received from all quarters by Mr. Hobart on his purchase of Stamboul. I fancy that the gentleman waited until he felt that there was a strong probability of the stallion leaving the State, and then a natural pride bade him buy the horse so that California should not lose his services.

Mayor Delashmult, of Portland, Oregon, has purchased 2000 acres of land in Washington county, twelve miles from that city, where he will establish the finest stud farm in the State. He has purchased nine standard colts from J. Brandt, and has now in all thirty head of fine stock, including Kitty Lynch, Nautilla, Judy, Palatina, Blondy, etc. The well-known stallion Hambletonian Mambrino will be head of the stud.

Meeting Mr. G. Valensin, I inquired why he had withdrawn his namesake from the stud, as was mentioned last week. His answer was to the effect that he is satisfied that Valensin can show a marvellous burst of speed if properly prepared, so he was taken from public service to give him as much rest as possible, prior to preparing him for a low record.

The Salem Statesman says; "R. E. Bybee, the famous horseman, was in this city yesterday, and let the contract for building a new house on his 300 acre farm north of Salem. Mr. Bybee is always interested in fast horses, and it is his intention to make his place a breeding farm for that class of animals. He is now possessed of some of the finest stock in the State, and his coming here will be the means of continually keeping alive the interest in the improvement and proper handling of driving horses."

The following California horses are eligible to start for the Realization Stake: J. B. Haggin's ch c Florentine by Glenelg—Florida; b c Fresno by Falsetto—Cachuca; b c Kern by Ten Broeck—Kathleen; ch c Salvator by Prince Charlie—Salina; and b c Saracen by Longfellow—Salara; ch c Ransom by Rayon d'Or—Nellie Ransom; ch c Maisac by King Ban—Miss Millar; br c Winfield by Kyrle Daly—Winifred; and b f Mabel by King Ban—Maude Hampton; Santa Anita Stable's b c Carriente by Grinstead—Blossom; b c Ganymede by Grinstead—Jennie B.; b c Gladiator by Grinstead—Athola; b f Aloha by Grinstead—Experiment; and b f Rosebud by Grinstead—Clara D.; Geo. Hearst's b c Philander by Wild Idle—Precious.

Mrs. George Lorillard has again been married, this time to Count Casa de Agreda. Mrs. Lorillard was not only the widow of "Gentleman George" Lorillard, the famous owner and breeder of thoroughbred horses, but after his death undertook to sustain the reputation of the orange and blue on the race course. In this she was only partially successful, and practically gave up racing at the close of last season, although her filly Flirtaway, won a race at the Fall meeting of the American Jockey Club at Jerome Park. She retained the breeding establishment in New Jersey, however, and has a choice collection of brood mares there, with the unbeaten Sensation at the head of the stud.

John E. Madden, of New York, has sold to W. H. Reading, of Havana, Cuba, the bay mare Bosque Bonita, four-year-old, by Macey's Hambletonian, for $10,000. This mare last year trotted a mile in a race over a half-mile track in 2:26½, being the fastest time ever made over such a track by a three-year-old. Her new owner will ship her to Cuba.

Col. H. S. Russell, of Boston, is at present in California. His desire to secure Ansel is as strong as ever, and it may be that the doughty Colonel will add that gem to his already large string. His pluck in buying Smuggler, 2:15½, for $40,000, who was only a converted pacer, when almost every one East said that he would never make a sire, aroused the admiration of all his friends, and as many of the Massachusetts papers declare they want no stallion with thoroughbred blood, Col. Russell may again show his pluck, and take Ansel back with him.

Says The Rapid City (Dak.) Republican, The business of horse breeding in the Black Hills has already become one of much magnitude. It is estimated that there are now over ten thousand horses ranging in the Eastern hills owned by persons who are breeding for the market. This estimate has been made with care by one in the business, and does not include small lots less than 30, nor does it include horses in the Northern and Western hills. All kinds of horses are bred in the hills, roadsters, trotters, runners, draught. There are some Arabian, some imported Normans, thoroughbreds from the best Kentucky stock, and mares from Oregon, Iowa, and other states, selected expressly for breeding.

A letter from Nashville says: The horses in the Chicago stable are, of course, the main attraction here, and they deserve this distinction. Wheeler T. has improved wonderfully, and Little Minch, Jacobin, Egmont, Viking and Terra Cotta are simply grand looking. But the most improved animal that I ever saw is Kaloolah. Last year, you will remember, she had that tucked-up appearance. Now she has developed into a fine, big, roomy mare, and you would hardly recognize her. The boys here pin their faith to Terra Cotta for the Suburban, if his people accept the weight. They considered that his defeat by Elkwood last year was nothing but a fluke. Badge is another horse people in this section are sweet on.

Some rather interesting racing took place at the Bay District Track last Saturday. The usual handful of spectators were present, and but little interest was manifested. In the trotting race, Dan McCarty's St. David beat Melrose and Hugh Patrick in straight heats, the best time being 2:30½, beating his record two seconds. Tom Daly had but little difficulty in defeating Barney G. in a five-eighths dash in 1:02½. A pacing race next claimed attention, the contestants being Mink, Little Hope, and Damiana. The latter was distanced in the first heat, Mink winning. He also took the fourth heat, Little Hope getting the second and third. The fifth was declared no heat and the race continued to Monday. The judges decided the track unsafe on Monday, and continued it to Tuesday, when Mink won the heat and race. Time of best heat 2:25.

I have been shown a private letter regarding Mr. Storn's stable, now in training at Sacramento, from which permission was given to copy the following: "The horses are all in good condition. The Hooker colt, Forester, is one of the fastest horses I ever saw, and if nothing happens should prove equal with the best. I have been cantering the two-year-olds, but have given them nothing like hard work, halves in about 55 seconds being the limit. The following is a full list of the horses Mr. Storn has here under my care. Forester, a four-year-old gelding, by Joe Hooker, dam by Melbourne Jr., Kildare, four-year-old gelding by Kyrle Daly, dam Mistake by Wildidle; Glen Ellen, three-year-old filly, a full sister to Kildare; Lurline, three-year-old filly, by Longfield, dam Katy Pease by Planet; Crofter, three-year-old gelding by Longfield, dam Mischief by Thad Stevens; Larghetta, two-year-old colt by Jils Johnson, dam Leverette by Lever; Catherine, two-year-old filly by Warwick, dam Mischief; Marigold, two-year-old filly by Milner, dam Katy Pease.

Since the first forms of the Breeder and Sportsman went to press the sale of Stamboul has been consummated, and we are pleased to state, to a gentleman of this city, who says that all the great stallions of California shall not be taken away. Mr. W. C. Hobart has had many conversations with Mr. Rose about the purchase of Stamboul, but they were not able to agree about what the price should be, Mr. Hobart being willing to give $35,000, and Mr. Rose refusing to sell for less than $50,000. When at last it was discovered that two different parties were willing to give Mr. Rose the figure he asked, Mr. Hobart finally said, "Well, Rose, there's your money. I want Stamboul, just keep him until I get ready for you to ship him up to me." The fever had now set in, and before the two gentlemen parted Mr. Hobart also purchased three fine broodmares, Bon Bon, 2:26, by Simmons, a filly by Alcyone, and Sweetheart, whose dam is the renowned Minnehaha. Mr. Hobart has hardly decided yet, when he will call on Mr. Rose for his new purchase, but there is a strong probability that he has a large farm in view, which he intends to purchase, and start a breeding farm on the same plan as Rosemeade or Palo Alto.

Mr. and Mrs. C. R. Noyes of Boston, Mass., paid a visit last Tuesday to the Pleasanton Stock Farm, on the invitation of Mr. Salisbury, and were treated to several exhibitions of speed by various of the famous trotters. Mr. McDowell was, as usual, perfectly willing to show off the good points of his pets, but apologized for their lack of preparation, as they are only receiving gentle exercise from day to day. Margaret S. by Director was the first one sent around the track, and although this royally bred filly is less than twenty-nine months olds he trotted from end to end, without a skip, in the remarkably fast time of 2:25¾, the last half was made in 1:11, and the last quarter in 33 seconds. The visitors were delighted with this performance so early in the season, and for such a youngster it does seem marvellous. Mr. McDowell then sent that magnificent son of Director, Direct, 2:28, for a trial half mile, and that this glorious horse is going to prove of the very highest class was evinced in the time made, 1:05¾, the last quarter being trotted in 32 seconds. Before this performance, and while he was being warmed up, he made a quarter in 31¼ seconds, and it was the general belief that, bar accident, he will develop a high rate of speed, and that his present record will be very materially reduced this season. Director, who has not had harness on since training for the Grand National Stallion Stakes, was then hitched up at the request of Mrs. Noyes, but was not sent at a high rate of speed. All admired his beautiful action and gait, and the noble animal seemed as though he wanted to extend himself for the benefit of the onlookers, but prudence forbade such a thing. The party returned to San Francisco highly delighted with the trip.

Effects of Pool Rooms.

San Francisco has long suffered from the curse of city pool rooms, which has for so many years afflicted New York, and which still exist and do a quiet business, despite the restrictions of the law. In San Francisco the abuse has become as bad as it did here in 1881, when Barclay Street, by its excesses provoked public clamor to an extent that broke it up. City pool rooms are not only demoralizing to the young men of a city, but their existence is inimical to legitimate racing. They encourage speculation in sums of twenty-five and fifty cents, sums which cannot be bet on the tracks. Besides, while they are in existence many will not attend racing, as they can get all the betting they want in the city. The last meeting at San Francisco suffered from this, as the crowd preferred to remain in the city and bet on the events at Clifton, Guttenburg, New Orleans, etc. The abuse has reached such proportions that business men in San Francisco are signing petitions asking the Legislature to suppress all betting except on the race course, on the principle of the Ives Bill in this State. In this they are joined by all the racing men of every character, as well as the prominent breeders of the State, who see that racing can never be made successful in California in the face of this evil. The Society for the Suppression of Vice has the matter in hand, and a determined effort is being made to abate the nuisance.—N. Y. Spirit of the Times.

THE KENNEL.

Dog owners are requested to send for publication the earliest possible notices of whelps, sales, names claimed, presentations and deaths in their kennels, in all instances writing plainly names of sire and dam and of grandparents, colors, dates and breed.

Whelps.

Messrs. Geo. A. Frasher and A. Adkinson, Los Angeles, mastiff, Cassandra (Spartacus—Duchess) whelped Jan. 8, 1889, six, four dogs, to Wellington (Major—Tyrone III).

Name Claimed.

Messrs. Geo. A. Frasher and A. Adkinson, Los Angeles, claim names for mastiffs by Wellington—Cassandra, whelped Jan. 8, 1889.

Bismarck for light fawn dog.
Victor for light fawn dog.
Napoleon for stone-gray dog.
Colonel for stone-gray dog.
Maud S. for stone-gray bitch.

Sales.

Messrs. Frasher and Adkinson have sold to Dr. C. Edgar Smith the light fawn mastiff dog Bismarck, by Wellington—Cassandra, whelped Jan. 8, 1889.

Deaths.

Mr. William Schreiber has lost by death the pointer bitch Astoria by Don—Sall.

Vice-Presidnet Morton is an admirer of mastiffs and won two prizes at the Newbury show with dogs of his own breeding.

The report of the Twelfth Annual Meeting of the American Humane Association, held at Toronto, Canada, on October 17, 18, and 19, 1888, has been received. The work of the society cannot but appeal to the best instincts of humanity everywhere, and the report embodies a great mass of useful information in the line of humane endeavor. It may be had on application to Robert J. Wilkin, Secretary, 141 Montague street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Mr. Geo. T. Allender writes from Watsonville that since returning from the field trials most of the dogs in his kennel have been sick with distemper, but are now all doing nicely.

A three-year-old rough St. Bernard bitch, imported from Australia by Mr. J. K. Newton of 2602 Folsom street, City, was shown us the other day, a good specimen, which should be taken in hand by some fancier, conditioned and shown at the P. K. C. show in May.

Says the London "Shooting Times:" "A gentleman states in an American paper that two accidentally black pointers have been sent over there as pure bred blacks. Who has done that? By the bye, Mr. Pape, the famous Newcastle gunmaker, states that "black is the true original color of the pure pointer."

Mr. Joe Emmet kindly brought his famous Rough St Bernard Plinlimmon to our notice on Friday, but too late for extended notice this week. The dog and his delightful master have drawn pretty much all the fanciers of the city to the Baldwin theatre during the week. A grander dog we never expect to see.

It is worth the while of owners of good St. Bernard brood animals to endeavor to secure the stud services of Plinlimmon while he is at hand.

Our shooting readers will enjoy the letter from a thoroughbred old hunter which is printed elsewhere. We do not remember to have seen anything better in its way, and hope to have further notes from the writer.

Mr. M. C. Drummond, of Davisville, has joined the Pacific Coast Field Trial Club. Mr. Drummond owns a fine English setter bred by the California Kennel, which he has in the hands of Mr. Walter for training. The dog Lanciotto is by Loadstone—Janet, a cross which is likely to produce many winners as well as good looking ones.

Mr. James E. Watson has had shipped to him another pair of black pointers, dog and bitch, by Pape of New Castle—on—Tyne. The dogs will arrive in about five months, coming by clipper, and we hope will be as good as old Black Joe. The indomitable pluck shown by friend Watson cannot but excite admiration.

Preparations for the Pacific Kennel Club Show in May are going forward smoothly, and with expedition. The work this year will be more carefully attended to so as to avoid the few little annoyances attending the last show. Mechanics Pavilion has been secured, the best hall for the purpose in the world. Every detail of benching, bedding, feeding, etc., will be of the best, and the same cleanliness will be enforced as last year. The show will be twice as large and twice as good. Owners should be about getting their dogs into condition. They will all be the better for plenty of exercise, good feeding and unlimited brushing.

Writing of his Gordon setter bitch, Mr. Henry Boyle of San Rafael thus describes a most extraordinary manifestation of intelligence and pluck. The bitch is the one which he desires to breed to some good Gordon dog. He says:

My dog is fat now, and will weigh over a hundred pounds. She is large, powerful, will trot before a team fifteen or twenty miles to a field, work all day, tire out nearly every dog around, and trot back again. She will dive after duck, and did something last fall I never saw done before—wounded a diver on a lake, and he went down about 3½ feet below surface, the dog after him, swam back, the dog five feet behind, came up, and again went down, followed by the dog, shortening the gap each time. The third time he came to the surface she had reached him, closing her mouth on him. I pulled the boat alongside of them for 150 feet, and I should have serious doubts of such a feat had I not seen it. The mother was an imported bitch, large size; the father I didn't know. She has a little white on the breast—a small streak—otherwise well marked, lots of pluck, and will take care of nurse and children in the woods like a bull-dog.

Mr. James E. Watson has received a request for the services of Old Black Joe from Mr. Goodhue, so far away as Danville, Canada. Mr. Goodhue bred Darkness, a black pointer winner at the Eastern Field Trials in '82. Old Black Joe would have been in demand as the best black pointer ever sired, and more's the pity that the dog is dead.

Very flattering reports come from Novato about the performances of Mr. John Bergez's young pointer by Don—Sall. The dog is in the hands of Barney Galindo, and is said to be very quick, sure and tasty among birds. He will go in the next Derby, and if he fulfills the promise of his youth will be a hard one to beat.

We had a very pleasant call on Monday last from Mr. J. R. Dodge, manager of Oak Farm, in the Salinas Valley. Mr. Dodge is a son of the famous sportsman "Bill Dodge," in Maryland, and as might have been expected, is full of enthusiasm about dogs and shooting. He owns a full sister of Mr. Will. Berry's pointer Blackbird, and tells some high flavored stories about the nose and sense of his bitch, which he says is really a superior shooting dog. There is an old deer hound on Oak Farm which has been taught by Mr. Dodge to stand on birds, a proof that some things can be done as well as others. Mr. Dodge will run his pointer Stella in the All-Aged stake of the field trials in January of '90. Stella is now in whelp to Mr. Harry Babcock's Blonde.

In the course of a pleasant call last week, Mr. M. D. Walter of Galt remarked that he had the following dogs in training now, for next year's field trials, all setters. Mr. Thomas Bennet's Lucifer (Loadstone—Janet), Mr. A. Abbott's Singold (Harold—Sweetheart), Mr. R. H. Auerbach's Lissome (Loadstone—Janet), Mr. M. H. Drummond's Lanciotto(Loadstone—Janet, Mr. E. M. Arthur's red setter Countess (Kaeding's Duke—California Belle), The California Kennel's Stephanie (Harold—Sweetheart, The California Kennel's Love Knot (Loadstone—Janet), Mr. J. V. Coleman's Lady May (Ajax—Dot), Mrs. Coleman's Pansy (Ajax—Dot).

Mr. Walter tells us that he has in training a bitch puppy belonging to Mr. E. M. Arthur of Portland, Oregon, that is a very good one. She is by Mr. Kaeding's Irish Red Duke, and out of our old Belle, now owned by Mr. Arthur. Belle has produced a large number of good ones, but none have been run in the trials, as she was. We hope to see Mr. Arthur's Countess make a creditable showing.

A resume of the two concluding courses of the Kempton Park Champion Coursing Meeting, concluded on January 25th at Sudbury, near London, is taken from the "Stock-Keeper and Fanciers Chronicle," which says:

When we went to press last week there were four dogs left in the Champion Stakes, Pilate Black, Barbican II., Puddletown and Odoardo. On Friday, in the fourth ties, Pilate Black very decisively defeated Barbican II, and Puddletown, after a good contest, had the advantage of Odoardo. Thus Puddletown and Pilate Black were left in the deciding course. Odds of seven to four were offered on the last-named, and it was generally thought that Mr. Sidney's puppy would prove victorious. The pair were beautifully slipped, and they ran together for some distance, when Pilate Black took a decisive lead. He then slightly stumbled, and momentarily paused, which enabled Puddletown to shoot past him, and although subsequently Pilate Black made a gallant effort, the points were in favor of Puddletown, to whom the verdict was awarded.

Major Holmes was heartily congratulated on the success of his dog, but perhaps had Pilate Black been successful the victory would have been a more popular one. As regards the winner, it may be observed that Puddletown is now in his third season, but he has not run a large number of courses in public. As a puppy he divided a sapling plate at Kempton Park, and won two courses in the Gosforth Derby. He also appeared four times more in his first season, but without doing anything noteworthy. He ran at Plumpton last year, but unsuccessfully. At Kempton Park he divided an eight dog stake—subsequently he ran at Haydock Park. This season he divided the Olanteigh Stakes at Wye, where he defeated Hounslow, Have a Care, Collingbourne and Sorcerer.

The runner-up, Black Pilot, is a black and white puppy, and was bred in Ireland. He won three courses at Mourne Park on his first appearance in public, and then was beaten by Caterham Clerk. Six weeks later he landed the Belfast stakes for thirty dog puppies at Holestone. Although he had not subsequently run in public prior to his appearing in the Champion stakes, he had been thoroughly well tried privately, and was considered to have an excellent chance, which opinion was, indeed, completely justified by his excellent performance, as it is not unreasonable to suppose that, but for his unlucky stumble, and, perhaps, being momentarily unsighted, he might have won the stakes for Mr. Sidney. Odoardo greatly disappointed his friends, who quite reckoned on his being able to defeat Puddletown; but, on the other hand, in the course between Pilot Black and Barbican II. the former carried the sufferages of the public, and odds of two to one were laid on him.

In concluding our remarks on the Kempton Park Champion Meeting of 1889, we must observe that it was a complete success throughout, and, although the fog put in an appearance, it did not interfere with a view of the sport to a very great extent, and, considering the time of year, the executive must be congratulated on being favored with such open and pleasant weather. The attendance, too, each of the three days was a good one, and we should think the financial results of the reunion were quite satisfactory to the Kempton Park Dtrectors, who certainly deserve to meet with success in their enterprising efforts to cater for the amusement of the sporting public.

Mr. L. J. Rose, Jr. leaves to-day for New York and Europe. He may be addressed at the Hoffman House, N. Y., until further notice. We shall receive some notes of travel from him.

It cannot but be gratifying to those sturdy men who organized the Pacific Coast Field Trial Club, and have maintained it for the six years of its life, to note the appreciation in which their efforts are coming to be held. There were some avowed opponents in the earlier days, and many lake-warm quasi friends, whose blowing hot and cold was harder to face than open enmity. But the club by persistence in well doing, and by perfect devotion to its legitimate objects, has overcome all the feeling against it, and the jealousies which hampered it, and is now regarded as a most useful and beneficial institution. The Secretary has already received seventeen entries for the coming Derby from gentlemen who have neither attended previous trials nor made entries. There have been many splendid dogs, the produce of which should have appeared year after year in the Derby, and it has been a source of disappointment that their owners have not been actively interested, but all that is passed, and the coming Derby will see fine youngsters out of Mr. H. R. Brown's beautiful Donna Sensation, Mr. A. B. Truman's smashing Rush T., Mr. Henry May's Ajax and Dot, Mr. Kaeding's Duke, Mr. Harry Babcock's Blonde, Mr. Will Berry's Blackbird, Mr. J. R. Dodge's Stella, Mr. W. D. Howe's Belle H., and a dozen others of the rarest breeding and fine field quality, will be represented either in propria persona or by descendants.

The young dogs are as fine as exist in the world, and will make it difficult to guess the winner of the stake until the finish. Three entries from Ogden, three from Salt Lake City, four from Bozeman, Montana, will represent the territories. The club desires the membership, support, sympathy and active co-operation of all fanciers of good pointing dogs, and if it can succeed in getting them to delightful Bakersfield once, there will be no trouble about their attendance in after years. One hundred entries is the figure set by the secretary, and it must be reached or exceeded. It will be his endeavor to send entry blanks to all owners, but if anyone is overlooked it is hoped that he will write for them and will not feel slighted. It should be a matter of pride with residents of the Pacific Coast to see their puppies entered and to fit them to run. Assurances of a large entry from Eastern kennels have already been received.

THE GUN.

The Blue Rock Club.

At a recent meeting of the Board of Directors, it was decided that at the monthly trap matches for the coming season, this club should be divided into three classes, to be known respectively as the 80, 70 and 60 per cent classes. Club prizes of the value of $15.00 and $10.00 were provided for each class.

The Preserve Question.

The same old decidedly nutty flurry about shooting clubs and land preserved by them has been recently revived, and affords matter for passing comment. The revival is due in the present instance to the efforts of one or two persons who chance to be in the service of daily newspapers, and have access to their columns. The persons mentioned have been accustomed to shoot without let or hinderance over the lands of Senator J. P. Jones in Sonoma County. They have of course acquired no rights in or on the premises, but were merely tolerated. They used Senator Jones' house and appurtenances, paying no rental for such use. A man had moved into the house, without color of right, and the visiting hunters paid him certain sums in return for lodging and meals. Senator Jones after a time desired to derive some revenue from his property, and leased the house and lands with all the easements to a club of sportsmen. The lessees contracted to pay liberally for use of the tract and naturally desired to enjoy their new privileges, unmolested. In order to do so they found it necessary to dispossess the squatter in the house and to forbid general use of the lands for shooting purposes. Hence the frothy matter about preserves and preserve owners which has for some days appeared in several daily contemporaries. In response to repeated published calls, a number of gentlemen met on Friday, February 15th, at Police Court, Room No. 1, in this city, to take action in reference to the premises. A report of the meeting by an interested person states that:

M. W. Stackpool was elected temporary Chairman and M. J. Geary temporary Secretary. The Chairman set forth the objects of the meeting in a brief speech. He said that the bone and sinew of the hunting fraternity, to whom Sunday was the only available day for shooting and fishing, had found it necessary to band together to protect their common rights. The so-called shooting clubs were not only obtaining control of the best grounds and making preserves of them, but were seeking to have measures enacted in the Legislature to constitute it a misdemeanor to trespass on lands which were useless for other purposes than harboring game. He supposed the proper course would be to form a committee on permanent organization and get down to business at once.

John Stack said it was absolutely necessary that hunters should organize and resent the encroachment of the shooting clubs on overflow lands. A fund should be created to defend all members prosecuted for trespass. To his knowledge the so-called shooting club members were nothing more than "pot hunters," who in many cases, through the medium of their keepers, sent the birds which they slaughtered to the markets.

Tom Kennedy spoke in a similar strain. He instanced the "hoggishness" of the club at Sonoma, where they are endeavoring to debar sportsmen at large from shooting even on the levees, although the laws provide that sixty feet on either bank of a slough or stream is common territory. He favored organization, and had no doubt that good results would follow, as both the game and fish laws needed revising and amending.

Secretary Geary spoke much to the same effect. California, he argued, if the shooting clubs had their way, would soon be as tied up in regard to its game law as Ireland. Individually he did not fear arrest for trespass, but for the sake of law and order he advocated organization and the employment of a good attorney to defend such members as might fall into the keepers' hands.

M. C. Allen thought that the movements should be general and that the preservation of game should also be looked to. Several others spoke in a similar strain, one young hunter remarking. "If the clubs are to have it all their own way we may as well sell our guns and turn our dogs over to Jake Lindo.

Mr. Stack referred to the bill which was lately introduced into the Assembly by request, wherein it was sought to prevent hunters from going on uninclosed lands under penalty of being prosecuted for misdemeanor. That bill had been adversely reported on by the Game and Fish Committee, and was not likely to come up again in the same shape. The desire to bond the available shooting grounds, however, was manifest, and the time was ripe for action on the part of the hunters at large.

The report may be regarded as a fair exposition of the views of those who are opposed to any exclusive control of shooting and fishing rights, and the many weaknesses in argument and illogical notions of those who attended the meeting will at once suggest themselves to fair and unprejudiced readers of ordinary intelligence.

The central idea with them is, that no man shall be permitted to enjoy undisturbed use of his property, if they desire to set up an adverse claim. There is no difference in principle between one's right to protection against trespassers on his half-acre town lot, and his thousand-acre marsh. It is a poor plea offered by some of the would-be trespassers that they have a right to demand that every owner of land shall enclose his premises by a "hog-tight" fence, if they are to be excluded. A right-feeling man would not obtrude himself where he knew he was not wanted, even though no other bar should be interposed than a notice not to enter.

Perhaps the absurdity of the position assumed by the persons under discussion cannot more clearly be shown than by a reference to the vehemence with which they all protest against intrusion upon their favorite ponds or blinds by strangers. Those who have shot in company with non-members of clubs, upon public marshes, can readily recall the indignation shown when one goes early to the blind from which he has shot for months, and which, by common consent among habitues, has been dedicated to his sole uses, only to find a stranger in possession. The habitue generally uses strong language, and is not without arguments in support of his "right" to use the blind which he may have erected at large cost, although the marsh be entirely unposted, and not under private ownership. Extended legitimately, the same indignation is rightly felt by those who establish private ownership either by purchase or leasing, and who find their dearly bought rights trampled upon by irresponsible persons who set up in defence, mob-law, or mere might.

The opposition to private ownership and control of shooting grounds and rights is sporadic, and the present movement will go the way of the many like spasms of the past. Its originators and promoters may get a shoot or two on preserves before they are caught, but the law and the outraged sense of right of the average citizen will certainly assert themselves in time, and in that day there will be weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth among the heavily mulcted poachers.

We can understand the passionate longing for the sports of the field which burns undyingly in many of those who attended the meeting under discussion, and we know most if not all of the men, among them being very many entitled to the highest respect as well as to that warmer regard which friendly relationship creates. Among them are many men as scrupulously honorable in business and social relations as any man can be. We do not attribute their seeming adherence to anarchical notions to any inherent badness, nor to any fixed purpose to set at defiance the laws of the land or the rights of their fellow-men, but we do believe that they have unthinkingly allied themselves with a cause which has no basis in pure right or reason, and which must inevitably lead them into conflict with the statute laws if persisted in.

The members of the clubs owning preserves are sportsmen of the best type. They own fine guns, practice wing-shooting exclusively, are generous in extending kindnesses to non-members of the clubs, pay heavily for their sport, are reputable men, always ready to lend time and means for the advancement of sport and sportsmanship, and are in nowise the selfish people described by one or two of the unknowing and inconsiderate speakers at the meeting of the 15th. Another meeting of like character is to be held on Monday evening next at the same place, and it is suggested that those who intend being present first argue the whole question through with themselves. Putting aside all petty, personal desires, and adhering to the conclusions resulting from a fair, logical presentation of all possible features of the case. If they will do so we are confident they will not be found in opposition to what are styled "Preserve Clubs," but will themselves preserve lands if they wish to continue shooting.

Monaco Winners.

At Monte Carlo recently the most valuable prize known to the shooting world was contested for by representatives of several nationalities. It is known as the Grand Prix de Casino, and besides the very valuable object of art which went to the winner, there was a money prize of nearly 19,000 francs. The competitors numbered eighty-three, and in the first four rounds of shooting twenty-nine of them killed all of their birds, the conditions being 12 birds, 5 at 26 and 7 at 27 meters. In addition to the prize for the winner mentioned above, the second, third and fourth men received valuable money prizes. At the end of the twelfth tour on the second day's shooting, five marksmen were tied, viz.: Valentine Marks (English), M. Ophoren (Belgian), Signors Cortese and Guidicini (Italian), and M. Journu (French). Signor Guidicini was the first of the five to fall by the way, followed by Signor Cortese and Mr. Journu, leaving Mr. Dicks and M. Ophoren to finish. Mr. Dicks eventually won, securing the valuable piece of plate and 18,810 francs. Mr. Opboron won 8150 francs, Signor Cortese 6150 francs, and M. Journu 3490 francs. Following is the record of winners of the Grand Prix de Casino:

1872, G. L. Lorrilard (American).
1873, J. Jee, V. C. C. B. (English).
1874, Sir W. Call (English).
1875, Captain Aubrey L. Patton (English).
1876, Captain Aubrey Patton (English).
1877, W. Arundel Yeo (English).
1878, H. Cholmondeley Pennell (English).
1879, E. R. G. Hopwood (English).
1880, Count Michel Esterbazy (Hungarian).
1881, M. Godfrey Camuluer (Belgian).
1882, Count De St. Quentin (French).
1883, H. J. Roberts (English).
1884, Count De Casetra (Italian).
1885, M. Leon de Borledot (Belgian).
1886, Sig. Guidicini (Italian).
1887, Count Salina (Italian).
1888, M. Seaton (English).
1889, Valentine Dicks (English).

Mr. Dicks is quite a young man. He is a resident of London, a member of the International Gun and Polo Club, and has become proficient as a wing shot from practice on the grounds at Hendon, near London.

A Hunter's Letter.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:--Being very fond of big game shooting, and having for years devoted part of each summer to life in the woods, the wilder the better, you can imagine that I have come to know many of those rare and genuine characters who make the name "mountaineer" synonymous with manliness, quaintness, and bravery. One of the most interesting of these men I was with last summer in Shasta County, near Callahans, and in Arbuckle I found the ideal woodsman, keen, fearless generous and kindly; he was more at home in the pathless wilds of that unsettled country, than he would be in a city drawing room, and I am not sure but that he was the better for his disregard of what we call refinement. Thinking that your readers might enjoy a letter from my mountain friend, I send one recently received, which you may publish if fitting. WM. DEWOLF.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The letter is as follows:

DEAR FRIEND:--Come up here this summer, and stay as long as you can. We will use no tent this time if you say so. We can build cabins, if it storms too bad, most anywhere. You need bother about nothing but one pair of heavy blankets and plenty of cartridges. We have four horses, which will be enough to pack our truck, I guess.

I have been practising a little on the bear since you left here, just to have my hand in. Last Friday I was coming home from Callahans, just after mail time. I got along between my place and Short's, and saw where a bear had been walking along leisurely, as though he was perfectly at home. But this is my home, so I hurried to the house for the rifle, and old Tuts and Sam, your dog friends. I found that Tuts had gone across the river to Mr. Mesner's to call upon a lady love, and sent Tacy after him.

When he got back with the old dog it was too dark to shoot, and of course we waited until morning. Just after daybreak Tacitus and I were tracking Mr. Bruin around through the bottom, back and forth, sometimes in my field and sometimes in Short's and Alger's alternately. He had camped around there all night, and had packed one of Alger's sheep from camp to camp. About sun-up we struck his track on the east side of the river, where he had crossed the road.

The dogs could scent his track and wanted to go. We concluded he had not crossed the East mountain, and thought we could overtake him before he would get to the top, so we cut the dogs loose and they dashed off at full speed, each yelling at the top of his voice. Then it would have done your soul good to have stood by to see and hear the whole proceeding. It did mine, I can tell you. The dogs went yelling on after him in a straight line for the top of the mountain, and were nearly at the top when old Tuts gave a lost signal yelp. Then my pulse went down to a low ebb. We thought he had been gone so long the dogs would give it up, but after waiting about a minute, when--glory! there they go again, diverging to the right.

The bear had evidently heard them coming, and had despaired of getting up, and to mislead them veered to the right around the face of the mountain. Now they have fair sailing, bear going at his best speed, and the dogs rapidly gaining, and each yelling at the top of his voice every time he struck the ground, and interspersed with a Wild Bill yell from your humble servant.

I tell you things were getting pretty lively about this time. We knew now that we were in for it, either a desperate fight or to tree the bear.

We were skipping a long way under the excitement pretty lively. I doubt whether a horse could have kept up with us now, considering the ground. All at once another lost yelp from old Tuts. What is the matter now? Ah! old Sam comes to the rescue. He spies him up a tree, a lone tree. Old Tuts had run by. There, now we see him—he looks like a yearling steer standing on a limb of a large pine, forty feet from the ground. Now we've got him. We were still about half a mile away, but we could see him. We were not long in going to him. In the mean time the dogs were putting in their time baying, while once in a while a yell from us kept the welkin ringing. We climbed up and got above him, and as Tacy had never killed a bear in the woods I told him we would sit down and rest, then he should shoot him. So after we got rested Tacy took good aim at the middle of his forehead and let drive. The ball penetrated the skull, glancing up, splitting the ball, and out about six inches back from where it went in, knocking him down on to the limb. He laid there quite a little while and finally fell to the ground. Then we had it. As quick as he struck the ground the dogs were on him, and as the hillside was very steep, down the hill they all went, bear and dogs. Sometimes bear on top and sometimes dogs. They rolled and fought for more than a hundred yards, then for fear of the dogs getting hurt I told Tacy to give him some more lead, which he did as soon as an opportunity presented itself, knocking the bear dead. Then we rolled him down to the foot of the hill. Tacy went home and got a horse, and we stood him on his head and shoulders and balanced over his hind feet and put him on. He would weigh between three and four hundred pounds.

I started Tacy home and I went along the side of the mountain north to a spring I knew of, and found bees watering. Watched them awhile, got a course, and found a bee-tree, which, perhaps, we will cut when you come, and the other one, too, that I found before and told you of.

The next morning—on the same mountain—I went back to look after some buck tracks I had seen the day before. I followed them up some five miles, came onto four large ones, got a shot, but shooting down hill I was fearful I would overshoot; taking my aim too low I under-shot, making him jump about six feet in the air. I had followed them too long already to give them up at one shot, so I put out with old Tut's slow tracking and followed them about four miles further, coming in sight three times. They were on top of one ridge while I was on another, but I still followed on. Finally (they had given me up, but I was of a different mind. I had not given them up) they had gone into a plum thicket and was busily eating plums, when all at once old Tuts, being on ahead, made a dive right under the hill close to me, and scattered them right and left.

The largest one went right straight across a little ravine, and in plain view of me, about one hundred and fifty yards away. I brought old 45x70 to shoulder with alacrity, and dealt him out one. He was on a steep hill-side, and stood nearly as straight as a man, back to me. The ball just missed the back-bone and came out the other side, passing just over the heart. It knocked him down, but he was up in an instant, and I gave him another, but this time a little too far back. About this time old Tuts was on to him, but being a large deer he was very stout, and gave the dog a hard tussle. Tuts got him by the under-jaw, and the deer went down the hill, the dog throwing him several times. Finally got down into the ravine, Tuts still holding him, but by this time the buck got his horns over the dog and held him to the ground; his horns were long and full grown, but not hard yet, velvet still on. In this attitude they shuffled on, fifty yards or more. I could see it all, but could not yet get to them, owing to the thick brush on my side, but at that time I was getting near, so I went up within ten feet and took my little gun (pistol) and shot him in back of the head, dropping him instantly, much to Tuts delight, or I would have thought so had I been in his place, but he did not seem to care so much. He was all the time tugging away, barking and growling as much as to say, "Mr. Buck, I will get you pretty soon." The buck was about as large as the one we killed when you were here—nearly 200 pounds—but his horns were more than as big again; longer, full-sized. There I was, by this time sundown, ten miles from home mountain way, or twelve round McGonaha Canyon or valley. I took the latter way; left my buck and tramped for home, reaching there about 9 o'clock at night.

Next morning I took my spring wagon, and wife and saddles, drove within a mile of the deer, then saddled up the horses and rode up to where it was. We had to do with it as we did the bear—stand it on its head and pass the hind legs over the saddle, and my wife pulled down on them as levers, while I lifted up on the other side and got him on in this way. We gathered a sack of wild plums, killed a jack rabbit, started home, divided out the buck with our neighbors, and got home that night without further accident.

Well, let me see. Saturday killed the bear, well it was Monday night when we got home with the buck. Tuesday went back to see what had become of the other three bucks that were with the one I got. Could not find them and started home. When—what is this—what is it, I never saw such a thing, getting darker and could see it, but could not see so as to tell what it was—a great big ball, as big as a bushel basket. Shall I shoot at it? No, I must see what it is first. Might shoot somebody—somebody's pet at least. I got me a stick, ventured up near to it. Stuck out the stick, and dip it took it. Ha, ha, ha. Stick all full of quills. Its a porcupine, by the faith of six bibles. Shoot him, no. I will capture him and take him home. Five miles from home, mind. Yes, I am going to have him if he is on top of the Lime Stone Mountain and up a tree. So I laid down my gun. Started up the tree, bushy oak tree, and he started up higher. I was armed with a two foot stick. Went clear up to the top, me after him, planning all the time how I would manage. Finally he got just as high as he could get and I was as high as I could, head and shoulders above him, with each foot in the forks of limbs below him. Then we were facing one another. No, I was facing him; but he—they are a very modest animal—their back is always turned to you when you approach them, with their quills ready and tail to knock them into you. Well, be this as it may. We were there, the animal and myself, in top of tree, now dark, five miles from home, 25 feet to the ground, not a thing to tie with but my cartridge belt. Well I would try to work the belt around it, while his tail was hammering away at my stick. But the belt was too short at one end, and in reaching for it would get my hand too near his tail. And, biff, he would take it, leaving about 15 or 20 barbed quills sticking in my hand (through my gloves, for I took the precaution to put them on), from an eighth to half an inch in. I do not know whether they have eyes in their backs or not, but there is one thing sure, every time my hand got near that tail it got loaded with quills. Then the pulling out took up so much time, when I had to hold with one hand to keep from falling, and take my teeth to pull the quills with. Some I would bite off. I pretty soon came to the conclusion that he was getting the best of me at this, would keep me picking out darts all night, for he seemed to have an inexhaustible supply. I had kept changing hands, so that by this time both were full, so I thought there was not much more room for quills, could not be much worse, so I made a grab for his tail. I got it too. I had him this time, and he had me too. It was hard telling which was the f stest. But I was going down out of there with him so I wrenched him loose from the tree and started down. I had got down I thought nearly, when he made a grab at a limb and swung me around and I came very near falling (he was 25 pounds weight), but I caught with one hand to a limb and swung clear off the tree. There I was, I did not know how far from the ground, dark, could not see; big log and rocks under tree swinging in space, porcupine in one hand. Could I fall so as not to fall on it, or would it fall on me? I tell you there was some fast thinking right then—just then. I I gave myself a swing and let go. It seemed a long ways but everything has an end. I landed head down hill. Porcupine on top and old Tuts on top of him, but he was not much of a stayer this time. He was perfectly willing to let me have all the fun.

Well, I got straightened up after a time, got my traps all together and started, still holding the porcupine with one hand—and for a pretty good reason. I worked along for some time towards home. Hand began to pain me. I must do something else. I have got to take it home. Can not this way. When, good idea. I happened to think of my pants. I could take them off, chuck him in, and tie both ends. No sooner thought of than acted on. So in the course of an hour I had worked my pants off and the animal in, both ends tied, and some of the quills out of my hand. Then in my underclothes with Mr. Porcupine swinging over my gun on my shoulder, you might have seen me plodding along down the mountain, reaching home about 11 P. M.

I lost my butcher knife in the porcupine fight and had to go back yesterday to find it. After I had found it I thought I would see what had become of my three old bucks I left up there. I soon found them. Got one long running shot, but did not hit him, and night coming on I came home, getting home at 9 o'clock last night.

Could you see the managers of Woodward's Gardens and see if he wants any animals that I could capture, for I can catch anything here from a porcupine to a bald face bear.

We desire collateral evidence in corroboration of statements made by Dr. C. W. Aby, manager of the Glenoe Stock Farm, in Lake County, about some shooting recently done by him. On Wednesday, February 13th, the Doctor was in Sacramento with Mr. Matt. Storu. That day the famous horsemen passed in study of the Legislature, and a visit to Rancho del Paso. On the succeeding day, Thursday, Doctor Aby informs us that he, with a hammerless, 12-bore, Colt gun, killed near Middletown, Lake County, seven snipe, five ducks, six killdeers, fourteen larks, and one mudhen, the latter at 98 yards, using but thirty-six shells to bag the thirty-two birds. A direct issue between the Doctor and Mr. Storn is raised unless ubiquity is admitted to be a characteristic of the genial manager of Glenoe. This column is open to both gentlemen, and we hope they will explain how folly can be shot in Sacramento one afternoon, and birds in Lake County the next, by the same person. We believe both of them, as the case now stands,

Arab Once More.

From the following letter it will be seen that Mr. Malone enters a vigorous protest against the commonly accepted parentage of Arab, and though his language may be considered out of the way, he doubtless, feels so indignant over the implied charge that the evidence of the breeder was not trust worthy, that he expresses these feelings in stronger terms than is commendable. But it is not surprising that Mr. Waugh perpetuated the commonly received version of the paternity. The Board of Censors has so decided, the Palo Alto catalogue confirms the verdict. Ever since the affidavits, which were published in the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN some time ago, were received, our belief has been firmly fixed that the breeding of Arab was as it is given by his breeder, and quite recently the subject was brought up as an instance when ordinary rules of evidence were thrown aside without any reasons being given for discarding the bulk of the testimony. We have no intention of arguing the matter now, but from what is learned latterly, there are good reasons for believing that the whole question will be settled definitely, and in addition to establishing the breeding of Arab will also afford the explanation why his pedigree was given in the first races he trotted as being by Electioneer.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—The first part of this week I was in your office, and in conversation with A. P. Waugh regarding the breeding of Arab, I told Mr. Waugh that Col. Fly was not the breeder of Arab, but that I was. He then wanted to know of me how he was bred, as he could find no one that could give him the true facts of the case. I told him that he was sired by General Benton, and his dam was Lady Hercules, his granddam Nettie George by Norfolk.

I see from the last issue of your paper that you have changed all that—that is, changed the sire—and state that he is sired by Atherton. Such is not the case, and as I am unwilling to confirm it, I now take this opportunity to contradict your statement in the last issue of your paper.

In regard to Atherton being the sire of Arab, this whole controversy is very unpleasant. It was conceived in fraud, and carried out in rascality. I have already made statements in regard to the breeding of Arab, and will be prepared to make another very soon, when I hope the parties interested in this petty fraud will be exposed to such an extent that they will become disgusted with their actions and hereafter refrain from trying to steal the honors of another man's horse. (Signed), F. S. MALONE.

Horse Dentistry.

It does not require very long retrospection to recall the time when if a man had claimed to be a dental surgeon and gave his whole attention to the teeth of horses that any amount of ridicule would have followed the statement. Operations on the teeth were confined to tricks of deception, old horses made to have young mouths, and the dentition of youngsters hastened so that they could be forced into market sooner.

Then came "floating," the instrument which gave the appellation being fashioned like the shoemaker's float which was used to rasp away the protuding pegs which penetrated the insole of the thick boots of the day. Now the "kits of tools" which are used by our best veterinary dentist are so numerous and fabricated with so much nicety that they will not suffer by comparison with those of the professors of human toothcraft, and though artificial incisors, molars or canines are not inserted in the jaws of horses, all the other operations are performed.

When so much depends on the "mouths" of horses, the pleasure of riding or driving being mainly due to obedience to the slightest intimation of the wishes as expressed through the bit, it is not surprising that there should be a demand for the services of a competent practitioner. Not nearly so much as there would be, however, if owners of horses realized the importance of employing skilled men in this branch to see that their steeds were properly cared for in this respect.

Fast trotters require constant attention. A slight roughness of the edges of the molars may cause a horse to "act so badly" as to lead to the belief that his temper is at fault, and loss of condition is oftentimes due to the teeth being in bad shape. Colts are prone to supernumerary teeth which are extremely troublesome. Some months ago we gave a description of malformation in the teeth of a colt which was still more peculiar than was thought at the time of previous examination. There was an abnormal growth, the upper bridle teeth coming nearly eighteen months before the usual time, some of the first incisors were shed before they should have been, others retained until the second were fully even with the surfaces of those which should have been got rid of. There were two extra teeth about an inch and a half in front of the lower molars, and so close together that the tongue was pressed on them by the bit. Not being far away from where the bridle teeth should come we were apprehensive that it would be dangerous to extract them and they were partially removed by filing. A short time ago we obtained the services of Dr. Woodruff, and he discovered still another pair of extraneous teeth, but so much had to be done in the way of removal that he decided that the safest plan would be to lay him down before commencing the operation. Dr. Eagan accompanied him, and it is safe to assert that a parallel case would be hard to find. The two which were under the tongue Dr. Woodruff decided to extract, and though much larger than wolf teeth usually are, he had no difficulty in taking them out. The other extra pair were immediately in advance of the molars, and these were also larger than a majority of "supernumaries." In order to extract the teeth which should have been shed, care had to be observed so as not to injure those intended for permanent use, and in place of a portion of them being absorbed, they were nearly intact. In, all eight teeth were extracted, the edges of the grinders smoothed, and the whole done in so few minutes that the suffering was of short duration. He eat his feed with his usual good appetite not half an hour after the close of the operation, and though there has been some big holes to fill, the healing process has been quite rapid.

This colt has been quite a puzzle. When first broken he had a "good gait," and we felt confident that he would prove a fast trotter. He got to singlefooting and adhered to that and other perplexing methods of progression, all of which may have been caused by the irritation attending the extraneous and malformed teeth.

The result will be awaited with a good deal of cusiosity, and as soon as his mouth is entirely healed, will put him in training. The job was well done, and if he still persists in his peculiar gaits, will have to ascribe it to some other cause.

Closing of Stakes March First—Napa and Petaluma.

Friday next, March 1st, the colt stakes of the Sonoma and Marin Agricultural Association, and also of the Napa and Solano Society, will close. Those which will be decided at Petaluma are purses, "free for all colts," for two and three-year-olds, the former being for a purse of $400, the three-year-olds $500.

While the entrance fee is ten per cent, it is broken into three payments, two and a half per cent payable at the time of making the entry, a like percentage on May 1st, and the balance of five per cent on August 1st. This gives the opportunity of testing the colts for a comparatively small sum, twenty and twenty-five dollars carrying the chance in both stakes until August 1st.

The district stakes and purses are, for yearlings a stake of $30, $100 added; for two-year-olds $50 each, $200 added, with a first payment in each case of only ten dollars. The purses are for three-year-olds $300, and for four-year-olds $400, five per cent payable March 1st, and five per cent August 1st.

The Napa events are all in the shape of stakes, the free for-all being limited to two and three-year-olds, the first a stake of $50 each, $10 accompanying nomination, $10 May 1st, $15 July 1st, and the remaining $15 ten days before the date fixed for trotting, $250 added. The three-year-olds are to be named in a stake of $100 each, $400 added by the Society, and the terms are $20 at the time of naming, viz., March 1st, $20 May 1st, $20 July 1st, and the balance ten days before the date set for trotting.

The District Stakes are for yearlings, two-year-olds and three-year-olds, the youngsters $40 each, $100 added, the next rank $50 each, $200 added, and the three-year-olds will strive for a guerdon of $50 each, with $300 additional. The payments are broken into proportionate percentages as in the open, so that they will not be burdensome to men of limited means.

For nearly thirty years we have advocated trotting colt stakes, and have had the gratification of witnessing the auguries of a long time ago being fulfilled. Sanguine as were the predictions, when the first colt stakes in Chicago were gotten up, they fell far short of what has been realized, and if any one had been crazy enough at that time to advance the prediction that two, three, and four-year-olds would lower the record held by Flora Temple, there would have been no end to the jibes, jokes and jeers with which he would have been greeted. The greatest objection urged in the infancy of trotting colt stakes was that the public would have so little interest in the performances, which must necessarily be slow, as to refuse countenance, and, consequently, the only money to reward the victor was that which was staked, and with so little "gate money" that the expenses would have to be subtracted from the stakes.

The stakes at the district fairs are important adjuncts to colt trotting.

Even such large stakes as the Stanford and Occident would not warrant the training as thoroughly as when there are a succession of them to be decided, and then again by making two classes, district colts are offered inducements which will largely increase the numbers in training.

Petaluma and Napa present other attractions beside the chance to win money. Time made has a wonderful effect in appreciating the value, not only of the individual which gives the record, as it also appreciates family connections, and both courses are as "fast" as any in the State. Then, too, the management is popular, and taking everything into consideration, we shall expect a long list of nominations and entries. The full conditions will be learned from the advertisements.

Thoroughbred Sire or Dam.

In a letter received some days ago, among other inquiries was the following: "In breeding trotters, when one parent is thoroughbred, would you have a preference as to which parent should be the thoroughbred?"

Without further explanation than a direct answer to the question, our reply would be, on the side of the dam. But to make our position properly understood, it will be necessary to go into the question more elaborately, and as the subject is of general interest to the breeders of trotting horses who have thoroughbred blood in their studs, we will accept it for the basis of an article.

There have been so few thoroughbred mares put in training with the object of making fast trotters, that practically they are untried. We have owned a few which gave indications of becoming fast trotters with proper education, but something always came in the way of carrying out the intention. Columbia, the granddam of Anteeo and Antevolo, was harnessed a few times by the side of Oriole, the dam of Anniversary, and showed action which gave promise of speed, but we were anxious to secure progeny from her as soon as possible, and put her to breeding.

Wenora, by Revenge, (a son of Fashion), her dam a Bonnie Scotland mare, was of extra promise, and after a few weeks' handling could show a three-minute gait, but she died soon after. Lady Viva had "a good way of going," but she was also wanted for breeding purposes, and the last one we thought of putting in training for trotting was the most promising of any, until a serious mishap put an end to her work for a time, and other drawbacks came in the way. This is Santa Cruz, by Double Cross, her dam by Norfolk, her granddam by Woodburn, the next dam by Lexington; so that she has three crosses of the "Blind Hero of Woodburn," and two of Bonnie Scotland. As her size, form, and action are all that could be desired, there was good cause for high expectations, but the man who was engaged to break her let her run away with a heavy breaking cart, cutting her foot very badly, and being otherwise injured, she was laid up. She was bred to Electioneer in 1887, and to Antevolo in 1888, failing in both instances to conceive, and twice she has come very nearly dying.

With our well-known partiality for thoroughbred blood in trotters, it is altogether probable that there is a prevailing impression that far greater efforts to educate thoroughbreds to a fast trotting step have been made than has been the case. The reasons for not doing so, it is unnecessary to give in detail, the most cogent being that our circumstances were not such as to warrant experiments in that line. But the point desired to be made in this connection is, that with thoroughbreds as the basis for fast trotters, the dependence has to be in superior form, that giving superiority for a fast pace, and provided there is an adaptability to acquire the action which is necessary to speed at the trot, there is a union of the desired qualities. It may be that while the quality of trotting speed is an unknown quantity, it is latent, and that, had there been early and continuous efforts to cultivate it, thoroughbred mares of the stamp of Dame Winnie, Annette, and others at Palo Alto which have been the mothers of fast trotters would have been the result.

A small proportion of thoroughbred stallions are broken to harness, and when put to harness uses are rarely marked for trotting speed. Again referring to our practice, and though we have broken to harness seven thoroughbred stallions, only one of them was given work which could be termed trotting education. The seven were Burnbraes, Craigieburn and Scottish Knight, by imported Bonnie Scotland, Hock-Hocking by Ringmaster, Double Cross by Malcolm, Sir Thad by Thad Stevens, and Rathbone by imported Young Prince.

Scottish Knight was from a mare by Knight of St. George, and he showed such an adaptability to trot fast when broken at a year old, that he was kept in training.

This was while our residence was at Atwood Place, near Chicago, and in conjunction with D. A. Gage had a large number of trotting bred colts, a majority of them being by Logan, a son of Rysdyk's Hambletonian. Scottish Knight was far superior to the best of them, and in every respect of the greatest promise to trot fast, but he died in his two-year-old form.

Hock-Hocking was broken by O. Smiley, and he was so confident that he would trot fast that he offered to train him, and that if he did not beat 2:40 in three months no charge would be made. Each one of the seven had a fair road gait, but with the exception of Scottish Knight, could not be called really apt scholars. Still it must be born in mind that with the exception alluded to, that all of them, mares as well as stallions, had been trained to gallop, and nearly all of them had run in races.

While more fully confirmed in the belief that a superior race of fast trotters could be produced from sires and dams "strictly" thoroughbred than ever before, we would not recommend anyone to attempt the task unless youth and money were united. And then, too, other qualities would be necessary.

Enthusiasm, persistency, self-confidence, fearlessness, so that the poisoned shafts of ridicule would pass unheeded, a knowledge of proper form to enable the beginner to make the right selections, and not the least qualification, that of restricting the numbers to what could be reared and trained in the best possible manner. Adequate capital would be an absolute necessity, for even with a few animals the expense would not be light.

While therefore we would not advise a person to embark in the business of breeding horses with the sole view of obtaining fast trotters from thoroughbreds on both sides, or from thoroughbred sires, there is not the least hesitation in recommending to "breed up," keep breeding up, as long as the desired qualities are produced. For instance, if a person could secure the services of Palo Alto to the right stamp of thoroughbred mares, or Ansel, or Azmoor, or some others of the highly bred Electioneer stallions, we feel that there would be as fair a chance of success as a person could ask. We have placed the names in the order we would give the preference, Palo Alto having the advantage of a "full sister" who had also inherited a wonderful flight of trotting speed. The dam of Ansel "threw" to Venture a very fair race-horse, Chance, and when he was broken to harness by Denis Gannon he exhibited a fine rate of trotting speed. Azmoor and Monteith are brothers, so that each of the trio named cannot be termed a chance horse.

To continue the illustration, should the progeny then being three-quarters thoroughbred in the near crosses come up to expectation as regards trotting speed (their form being an approximation, and a close one, to that which is recognized as being the best adapted for speed, almost assured) the next mare would be of the same character. Seven-eighths of blue blood will be the inheritance of the second generation, and six years sufficient time to bring it to a practical test, provided the plan so successfully carried out by L. J. Rose be followed. That is, coupling the two-year-old sire with a few mares, though we should prefer not to have any disturbing influence during the early lessons. But suppose that four or five years are required to test each genoration, men who have passed middle age a short way can afford to wait that long, especially when there is a reasonable certainty of remuneration.

The strong prejudices against near crosses of thoroughbreds among the breeders of trotters is melting away. The "march of events" is bearing down opposition, much of which was built on a foundation of sand, and progress is the watchword. There need be no fears of finding purchasers for animals which are of the desired type, and all the interested clamor in the world be of little avail when excellence is manifest, and merit cannot be obscured by a sneer, or success denied when a quibble is depended upon for an argument. "Too much hot blood" has served its day, though still having an influence. While it is beyond question that a highly bred trotting stallion is far better to couple with mares of little breeding than a sire of their own stamp, there is nothing to justify the converse of the proposition, and that the better animal is unfitted for mares of still higher breeding is an assumption which is not supported by proof. This idea, which is greater in the way of presenting evidence on either side of the question, is becoming weaker, and when people become willing to make the test, and in place of selecting an inferior sire, from thinking that there must be a certain proportion of dross to alloy the purer metal, will come to the conclusion that silver will be better than copper, and bronze a more valuable mixture than lead.

It would, of course, be anything but wise, to change Dame Winnie, Annette, or the other thoroughbred mares which have done so well with Electioneer, to any other stallion. Still, we should have been tempted to try Ansel on Dame Winnie, and Palo Alto on Lizzie Whipps or Mamie C. The experiment, if made, would attract attention from all sides. Those who have so bitterly opposed near crosses of thoroughbreds would utter all manner of prophecies of prospective failure. Men who have some faith in a thoroughbred grandparent would express doubts, and a few (of which we are one) await the result with a good share of confidence.

There is not another breeding establishment in the world which could make the test. Fast trotters from thoroughbred mares, records of 2:20 and 2:20¼, and thoroughbred dams of fast trotters, with strains which should be appropriate.

The only trial which will come within our reach will be quite a piece into the dim and misty future, and the commencement depending on a contingency. Should Praevolo by Antevolo, from Lady Viva by Three Cheers, granddam Lady Amanda by Imp. Hurrah, prove a fast trotter, whatever mares we shall breed to him shall be thoroughbreds. In a small way, too, as three mares will be the limit of the capacity of our breeding farm, which is not likely to be of greater extent than a few Oakland city lots. There is another feature to be considered in breeding trotters. Breeders see the necessity for new strains of blood. So far the Hambletonian predominates to such an extent that nearly all of the fast trotters trace to that source, and when two more generations are reached, viz., Mambrino, the grandsire of Rysdyk's Hambletonian, that blood is sure to be to the fore.

In-breeding to animals in close relationship to Hambletonian, has proved "happy nicks" in many instances, but usually, in such cases, there have been outcrosses of thoroughbred. There is not the least doubt in our mind that judicious in-breeding is the key to perpetuating family characteristics. But there may be defects, or even slight flaws, which consanguinity of parents will intensify, and a tending to coarseness is surely a Hambletonian characteristic. For quality and symmetry of proportion, racing-bred horses, or those which are nearly racing-bred, are beyond all others, and therefore the best adapted to correct deficiencies in other breeds.

Will you please let me know the breeding of Esperanz?

Answer—Foaled 1860. By Ringgold. First dam Nancy O. by Medoc; 2d dam Little Nancy by Turpin's Florizel.

P. C. Byrne.

Please give through the columns of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN the pedigree of Arthurton? (2) Height and weight of Electioneer? (3) Is the dam of Anteeo and Antevolo a thoroughbred?

Answer.—Arthurton, b h, foaled 1873, by Rysdyk's Hambletonian, dam Imogene by Seely's American Star; second dam Curry Abdallah by Abdallah; third dam by imp. Bellfounder; fourth dam by Royalist, son of Commander; fifth dam by Hardware, son of imp. Messenger. (2) About 15 3, (estimated) 1,100 pounds. (3) No. Columbine's dam was a thoroughbred.

The Colonel.

When a pacing race has been continued from Saturday to Monday, have the judges any right to continue it again until Tuesday, Monday being a good day? The judges continued it on the score that they considered the track an unsafe one for the horses to go on.

Answer.—If no heats in the race have been paced it would have been a postponed race, and the judges could have selected Tuesday, but as heats had been paced, Monday being a good day, they had no right to continue to another day.

J. G. Corning.

Mr. Munion makes a bet that his horse will trot a mile, on Saturday, in 3:30. Two judges were selected and timer appointed. Mr. Munion appeared on the track with his horse, and wanted the race postponed. After the first bet was made Mr. Munion's son also made a bet that the horse would beat 3:30. The judges refused to postpone the race, and as Mr. Munion did not start, they decided that he lost his bet, but declared his son's bet off. Are the judges correct?

Answer.—Yes.
